Two Views of Children's Training.

"How can you let your children play in the street?" said one New York woman to another the other day. "Even in the best neighborhoods you do not know who may live three doors away from you, and children will fraternize in the most democratic way, you know."

"Yes, I know," said the other mother, "but I cannot keep the children forever indoors, nor do I think the restricted strolls in the park particularly inspiring. My children have always scorned their nurses, and I can't see that it does them any harm to race up and down the block independently. They learn things, yes, and come to me to tell me of them. Better they should learn them now and have their influence promptly counteracted. I find, too, that often the most vicious little friend they have is the one who is tied to his nurse's French cap."

Here are two opinions duly set forth.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

A Club That Attended Funerals.

The Funeral club, of Paris, was a ghastly organization. Its object was to attend in a body all public funerals, and private ones where it was allowed. Its meetings were always held in cemeteries, and members invariably dressed in somber black with crape sashes on their hats. The only music they had was a hand organ, and this played nothing but the dead march in "Saul." No smile was ever seen upon the face of a member in public. All kinds of gayeties, theaters, dances and parties the members were strictly forbidden to participate in at any time; indeed it is difficult to imagine what on earth the men composing the Funeral club had to live for anyhow.—Boston Home Journal.

The Derivation of "Gingerly."

To speak of a person acting in a "gingerly" fashion would certainly convey a clear enough idea, and we easily connect the word in some vague manner with the word "ginger," perhaps from the association in our minds of the sparing use made of that condiment. The word, however, is innocent of any such roundabout derivation, and comes directly from the old word "gang," to go—still preserved in the Scotch phrase, "Gang that gate"—and thus originally means with cautions, faltering or "gingerly" steps.—Chambers' Journal.

Spain's Silk Culture.

Spain owes silk to the Moors, and produces it in true Spanish fashion—lazy haphazard, picturesque. She it is who supplies the silkworm gut for leaders for fly fishermen the world over. This is the gorged gland of the worm just ready for spinning. Barcelona silk is in great request wherever a filament fine and peculiarly strong is required.—Chicago Tribune.

Recovering Hydrogen.

It has been found that by passing mixed hydrogen and carbonic oxide over nickel and cobalt they can be separated. Then by applying the hydrogen to strips of platinum, a powerful primary battery is formed which will yield, it is stated, 50 per cent. of the total energy in the hydrogen absorbed.—New York World.

A Queer Memory.

Mamma—Did you go see the doctor about your cold?

Little Boy—Yes'm.

Mamma—And did you have the dentist pull out that aching tooth?

Little Boy—N-o'm. I forgot about that.—Good News.

Mail carriers in Morocco are said to avoid the risk of losing their places by oversleeping by tying a string to one foot and setting the end on fire before going to sleep. The string, they know from experience, will burn so long, and when the fire reaches their foot it is time for them to get up.

It is asserted that when the present comprehensive plan of connecting all England's West India possessions by submarine cable is completed fully one-third of her defensive fleet for the protection of these colonies can be done away with.

A hot bath is valuable in the first stages of congestion of the lungs, as it is also in infantile convulsions and in sudden brain trouble. In the last named attack ice should be applied to the head and a hot water bag to the feet.

Several attempts have been made from time to time to develop balloon photography, and special cameras have been devised for the purpose.

A favorite dish of the East Indians is an ant mash. The insects are caught in pits and mashed by handfuls like raisins.

In size the sun equals 1,300,000 earths, but owing to its smaller density its weight equals only 300,000 earths.

H. G. Mitchell is in the city working at carpenter work for A. C. Cowing.

Conductor Copeland took in the great convention at Minneapolis last week.

Ed George, Esq., was called to Argyle on important legal business on Monday.

Julian Sauve left for Edmonton, N. W. T. on Tuesday morning. Expects to be gone about a fortnight.

Rev. R. H. Battey went out to Fosston Tuesday morning to attend the Polk County Sunday School convention.

Jim Baine was in from Fisher on Saturday. All Jim lacks of being the greatest statesman in America is a little l.

Com. Rhinehart returned Thursday morning from Minneapolis, and left for the pineries, not having time to stay and see the close of the convention.

Miss Laura Lauman, one of the most efficient teachers in our public schools, has closed her engagement with the school and left Saturday evening for St. Peter.

"Industry on Tap," remarked a citizen the other day as he pointed to a woman sitting on a beer keg in front of a saloon on Main street, knitting away for dear life.

G. W. Lewis Esq, was one of those who took in the great convention at Minneapolis last week. He was very much interested in the proceedings and reports having had a good time.

Charlie Misner takes possession of his new house on Jerome's addition this week. Charlie now has an elegant cottage home all his own and at a very reasonable cost—only $2,500.

Alderman & Sylvester have their new warehouse hall nearly completed and already more than half filled with wagons and other farm machinery, The boys are doing a land office business in machinery.

His honor, ex-Mayor Alexander McKinnon, starts for Chicago this evening, where he goes for the purpose of placing Grover Cleveland in nomination for president—to be knocked out again by Ben. Harrison.

Peter Hoffner is putting the little drum corps through their paces in great shape. The little chaps are getting so that they can roll out the music by the rod, and will cut quite a figure during encampment week.

Farmer Alexander McKinnon was on the street talking crop prospects with the other grangers. He has four hundred acres sowed and expects to add another hundred by Saturday evening. He 'lows he will "git 'bout 25 bushels of wheat per acre this year."

Have you insured that crop? If not, why not? The Minnesota Hail association of Crookston is a home company; is a safe company; is a strong company; is a reliable company, and so if insured in it you are safe for if you lose (your crop by hail) you win (by insurance) see?

Wm. Davidson was down from the Keystone farm on Monday. Says that he has sown 2,500 acres in wheat—all he intended to sow this year. Completed his seeding last Friday; would have finished before, but had considerable plowing to do. Says that with favorable weather he expects to harvest an average crop.

W. D. Hurlbut, writing from Fairhaven, Wash., to set his subscription ahead a year, takes occasion to compliment us thusly: "I am glad to note the evidences of prosperity in your paper. I hope the JOURNAL will always defend the principles of our old party and not be led astray by the delusive snares of the Peoples' paty." Mr. H. will be remembered as a Crookston old-timer, and one time mayor of our city. The JOURNAL learns with pleasure that he is doing well in that far aff country.

Probably all those who lost their all by hail last summer will take no chances this year but will insure against hail. This is the part of wisdom, and the only point to be considered is to get safe and reliable insurance. This the Minnesota Hail Insurance company of Crookston offers you. Call at the general office and see what they can do. The mutual plan if correctly managed is the best, and this is the plan of this company. Call at the office in the Reckitt block and look it up.

The dedication of convention hall in Minneapolis on Monday evening of last week was one of the grandest sights ever seen in Minnesota. The great hall, capable of seating 14,000, was completely filled, a chorus of 1,000 voices and the Great Western band furnished vocal and instrumental music at intervals, and Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, delivered an eloquent address. Minneapolis proved adequate to the occasion by providing a magnificent hall and ample accommodations to the thousands who were in the city.

Will Heidrich has been visiting the folks a few days.

Call at the JOURNAL job rooms for plain and fancy printing.

The St. Louis hotel is very much improved already, and the end is not yet.

Watch for the attractions at the oeera house during encampment week.

Mrs. Ed George left last week for a three months visit at the old home in Kingston, Ont.

Dr. Howard Lankester of Fisher went to Duluth last week as a delegate to the Grand Lodge.

Attorney Foote made a visit to Iowa last week. He took in the convention at Minneapolis en route.

Comrade D. Carr has returned from Minneapolis, and will resume his old position at the Walker saw mills.

The boys have secuaed the ball park for games during the encampment, and intend to keep business lively.

"What I know about riding bicycles," would be an interesting subject for an essay from farmer S. M. McKee.

Mr. and Mrs. J. V. E. Wyatt represented Crookston Lodge of Odd Fellows in the Grand Lodge at Duluth last week.

J. P. Marcum informs the JOURNAL that he has finished sowing everything but millet which he expects to have in this week.

C. B. Palmer is down at Lockhart for a few days. He got an idea that Sam would be wanting to come to the circus so he went down to fetch him.

Hugh Thompson returned from the convention on Sunday morning. Of course Hugh is immensely pleased with the result as he has been a Harrison man right along.

Roberts & Williams' delivery team took a lively spin up Fletcher street on Wednesday afternoon, and were stopped by colliding with a wagon on Main street. No serious damage.

Wm. Marin has Stone's new barn completed and says he is now ready for anything that turns up. He built an elegant looking structure in a trifle over a week's time for N. P. Stone's new circus.

Sawing at the great saw mill commenced on Wednesday morning, and will continue until this season's cut is finished. Logs are beginning to arrive freely, and no trouble is anticipated during the sesson.

Judge Benson and wife, Ole Mortenson and wife, and clerk of the court Nels Muus, went down to Neby last week to attend the marriage of Commissioner A. O. Stortroen to Miss Jevning. Mr. Stortroen buried his first wife some four of five months since.

Henry Nolan was the successful bidder for the bridges in Fairfax, which is a guaranty that the work will be well done. The bridges are both to be made extra width, wide enough to allow a reaper or self-binder to be driven over, and the contract price is no greater than for the ordinary bridge. Keep your eye on those bridges and see if they are not, as we predict, all O. K., or built pon honor.

Deputy Sheriff Losey is hopping about like a rooster on a hot griddle, trying to keep up with the work in the sheriff's office. He is a hustler and no mistake and will make some good girl a husband one of these days. By the way, did it ever occur to you what a very little thing would make him extremely uncomfortable? Spoil him in fact? Only just a little "u" would do it.

The JOURNAL acknowledges a pleasant call from Mr. Slocum, the father of our genial grocer, W. E., last week. Mr. Slocum expresses himself well pleased with the appearance of our city and its prospects and thinks we have a great future. He is a stalwart republican, is highly pleased with the work of the convention last week and predicts that Harrison will be re-elected without doubt.

A call at the plumbing establishment on Monday found Mr. Brennan busily engaged on a large water-pipe heater for Braley's barber shop, and our reporter was told that this was one of the many orders now on file for early execution. We saw in stock miles of pipe of every size required and were told that the firm ships it by the car load which enables them to sell at lower figures than was ever attempted here before. They have now in stock over 4,000 feet of two inch pipe, besides quantities of other sizes. The company also carries windmills of the most approved makes and for every purpose, and they also have pumps enough to supply the whole northwest. In plumbing this firm is unexcelled by any in the business, as their work in this city abundantly testifies. They did the work in such buildings as the opera house block and the Reckitt block. This is a business that is constantly growing in this city and this firm intends to keep fully up in every essential requirement, and they should do well as no doubt they will.

Mrs. E. W. Wile is expected for a visit with Crookston friends shortly.

A. D. Stephens is away for a few days visit with friends below.

A. C. Schmidt went to Warren on Monday to see about a job of painting.

D. F. McDonald says he has the road to the new dumping grounds completed.

Chief McKinnon, of the fire department, J. W. Peterson and Fred Rauch left Sunday night for the firemens' state convention at Rochester.

F. W. Ball, editor of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Democrat, was in the city Saturday looking after some property interests in Polk county.

Remember that the JOURNAL job rooms have unequalled facilities for printing of all kinds and can get out work at short notice. Give us a trial order.

Rev. Battey will occupy the pulpit at the Congregational church at 10:30 a. m. next Sunday. No services in the evening on account of union temperance meeting at the M. E. church.

A ripple of excitement was caused at the oyster bay restaurant, corner of Main and Robert streets, on Monday evening by the burning out of a chimney, but nothing serious resulted.

Alderman J. E. Morrisey insists that the Chicago convention next week will name the winner in the presidential race. Well, his name will not be Grover if they do, and don't you forget that a little minute.

The Minnesota Hail Insurance company has received a number of applications from Sauk Centre and vicinity; also from points in the southern part of the state. This is one element of strength of this company that it covers the whole state.

In relation to the street cleaning matter street commissioner D. F. McDonald wishes the JOURNAL to say that he is ready at any time the aldermen in the different wards give him authority to act. He has kept up to the limit of his own authority so far.

J. S. Nichols, of Fertile, gave this office a pleasant visit on Tuesday. Mr. Nichols is one of those earnest, honest, progressive farmers whose sole ambition is to have the best conducted farm in the county and to see his brother farmers prosperous and happy.

What arrangements have the companies made to give us trains during encampment week? The regular trains will be inadequate to handle the business and it will require daily trains on the branches and those trains should be run in such a way as to accommodate all who wish to come in and spend the day and evening.

Geo. Beaty has leased the Lakeview hotel on Broadway and changed the name to Headquarters. This house is nicely situated, with pleasant surroundings, comfortable rooms and attentive help. George is an experienced hotel manager and will undoubtedly run a first-class house. He offers special rates for board by the week, and has good accommodation for transients.

City Engineer Geo. A. Ralph ran in from the survey on the Red Lake Indian reservation, on Monday evening for supplies, returning Wednesday morning. He has his last contract (16 townships) about half completed. He will give his crew a week's furlough about July 1st to allow them to enjoy the festivities of the encampment season. He is very much bothered with his surveying operations by water of which there is an unlimited quantity.

Fergus Falls Journal:—Mr. Hunt, of the state World's fair commission, has secured Stearns county's apportionment of the World's fair fund this week. At the present rate of progress it looks as if the commission would just about get the money raised or pledged at the time all the other states have completed their buildings and other preparations for the fair. So much for a penny wise legislature, which saves nothing after all.

Bro. Stevens of the Warren Register gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call on Tuesday while enroute from his Illinois home accompanied by his daughter. By the way, Bro. Stevens has sold his Illinois home and will in the future live at Warren and give his entire attention to his law business and his paper. Bro. S. has one of the best paying newspaper properties on the line, and it ought to be as he has always made a good paper.

The "Water Witch," a boat owned by Nels Peterson, of Fisher, Capt. White commander, appeared off this harbor one day last week and is remaining here for the week for the benefit of excursion parties. She will make regular daily excursion trips from her dock at the foot of the Robert street bridge to Sampson's Woodland addition at 10 o'clock, at 2 o'clock and at 7 o'clock. "Git on bo'ad, chillen, dar's room for many mo'" than you would suppose by looking at her. She does not look like she could carry more than 25 or 30, but we are told that she will easily accommodate 75 people. She will be on the river during the encampment.

See those canes at Clements'.

Mrs. Wm. Himmelsbach is visiting with Mrs. S. L. Collins, in the city.

Braley is fixing up his barber shop. Arnold & Walker are doing the business.

Alberic Chabot and bride returned, yesterday, from their wedding tour. Welcome home.

See those G. A. R. canes at Will Clements'. Just the thing for encampment week.

Bert Duntley has commenced work upon his new residence. W. E. Walker has the contract.

Will Clements has just received a car load of Grand Army canes. Everybody wants one.

Gus Williams had a small audience Wednesday evening. Here was a show deserving a crowded house that got a poor one, while an Uncle Tom's Cabin chestnut would fill the house.

Comrade Smith of Minneapolis was in the city Monday en route for the Red Lake reservation where he has a surveying contract. Says he finds lots of beautiful little lakes and any quantity of excellent farming lands. The surveying business will be pretty well finished up this year.

A. E. Brush was in from Angus on Tuesday and called upon the JOURNAL man to talk gasoline engine. He is talking very strongly of getting a Van Duzen 12 horse power gasoline engine to use as a thresher engine, that is providing he is convinced that this power is practical and a 12 horse power sufficient.

Dan McDonald says he is expecting a lot of the old-time Glyndon folks to attend the coming encampment and, says he, "I have reserved a cosy corner at my fireside for Jerome Daniels and family who will find a hearty welcome from all cur old-time Glyndonites." The JOURNAL learns that comrade Daniels will be on deck.

Reports from all over the state show an unusual amount of hail for this season of the year which seems to augur an unusually dangerous year for crops. Every wise man will insure his crop this year, being careful to insure in a reliable company. The Minnesota Hail Insurance company of Crookston is a safe company. Call at the general office in the Reckett block and see what they can do.

Alderman I. U. Jennings received a letter from his wife in Portland, on Wednesday morning, containing cheering news of the condition of their daughter, Mrs. I. M. Underhill. A consultation of doctors was held and the conclusion formed that she could be removed to the residence of her uncle in Tacoma in a few days. Mrs. Underhill has been a great sufferer, and her friends here will rejoice that her recovery is probable.

Engineer Jack Bunnell has taken possession of his new residence, on Broadway, and, s-a-y, fellows! Well, he don't seem to incline to have much truck with such common humanity as we'uns any more. We even offered him a ticket to the circus, but it was no go. He's too fly. Well, after all, we don't begrudge Jack the best the earth affords, for he has worked hard for what he has, and is deserving of as neat and slick a little home as any in the city, and that is just what he has got.

Manager F. D. Lord is rustling up business for the Minnesota Hail company, appointing agents and taking insurance. He has fully covered the southern and middle portions of the state and the applications are beginning to pour in at a lively rate. This company has operated successfully in North Dakota for seven years under the name of the Farmers' Mutual Protective Association, and was one of the first to cut loose from the old line companys' style of insurance. The success they have met with in Dakota is a guaranty of what they can do here, and the prospects now are that they will do a larger business than ever.

Ed. Chapin brother of engineer Fred, is fireing for Jack Bunnell. Jack says Ed is an A 1 boy and is catching on in great shape.

Andrew Rolstad and M. H. Engen have purchased the Robert street restaurant and will continue business at the old stand.

Have you seen those aluminum souvenirs of the Seventh annual encampment of the Park Region Association? Saake has them for sale. As a watch charm they are a brilliant and glaring success.

Geo. Guscott, of Grand Forks, who travels for the Collier Publishing Co., was in the city this week and stopped over a day to visit his friend Dr. Just. Like all Grand Forkers, he grows enthusiastic while talking of his adopted city.

Comrade Geo. Truax met with a severe accident at the foundry on Wednesday. While hoisting one of the large pillars for the Fournet block into a lathe his left arm was caught in the chain block, lacerating the index finger badly and bruising the others. He will be laid up some time.

A committee of the Farmers' Alliance in the vicinity of Maple Bay is making arrangments for a farmers' picnic at the bay on the 4th of July. A call to meet at Fertile on Saturday has been made for the purpose of arranging a program consisting of speeches, ball games, swinging, boating, etc., etc. Our informant, Mr. J. S. Nichols, says this will not interfere with the encampment at Crookston, as all old soldiers, and many others, intend coming.

"Tell It Not in Gath."

On dit that Johnny Freeborn has his weather eye fixed upon a fair damsel whom in the near future he intends to lead unto the altar hymenial. One would hardly think, to look upon John's calm, placid features that he would be one to strike his colors to Cupid, but the little god has evidently got in his work which proves the truth of the old adage that "you can't most always sometimes tell."

Our summer opening of millinery will begin on the 3rd day of June and last three days, 3rd, 4th and 5th inclusive. We will have all the latest styles. We invite all the ladies of Crookston and vicinity to call and see us on these days.

"Esto-Penpetua."

On Thursday, June 16, Ringling Bros. great circus and menagerie will make its grand entry through the streets of Crookston, and we extend a hearty invitation to our country friends to make our store headquarters for the day. Ah, me! How often the writer wishes he were a small boy once more, walking six, eight or ten miles from the country to see the show, eating ginger cakes, perched on the best stall of the amphitheatre of the circus, "A-laughing at the clown," instead of selling

DON'T READ THIS!

This is only of interest to farmers and others who have growing grain this season. Everything indicates that during the present summer there will be constant rain and thunder storms. Any person who has observed the different seasons in this or any other state knows that during a rainy summer hail storms are of frequent occurrence. Much damage is done to growing grain every year by hail. No locality is entirely exempt from this disastrous element. You may escape for a year or two, but you are sure to have a hail storm sooner or later.

The only way to protect yourself from loss by hail is to insure your crop. But the rates are so high with most of the hail companies doing business in this state that the farmers cannot afford to insure their crops. The only way to get cheap and reliable hail insurance is through a mutual concern—a company which covers the entire state and is not confined to one county. The risks must be distributed over a large area, so that if one county should be hailed there will still be plenty of uninjured grain to pay the losses.

The Minnesota Hail Association of Crookston covers the entire state. It is a mutual concern, with but few officers and each one working on a commission. This company can give you cheap and safe protection.

For further particulars see by-laws or talk with any of the company's agents. It will pay you to investigate this matter.

A NEW SOURCE OF WEALTH.

Science Bids Fair to Outdo the Tales of Fiction.

Romance would better pack up her library and flee from the earth if there is any truth in the theory that some German savants are sustaining. The latest statement of these scholars' opinion comes from the pen of Julius Stinde, who boldly champions the postulate that diamonds are not of earthly origin.

Buried treasures, pirates, doubloons and Captain Kidd are drearily commonplace compared with the Stinde theory. Briefly stated, it is based upon the facts, first, that no powerful volcanic process to which carboniferous matter could be subjected in the bowels of the earth would be likely to produce diamonds; second, that the diamond-bearing earth of South Africa is not stratified, but arranged in a series of cones or funnels of vertical formation, as though resulting, not from upheaval, but from a fall of matter to the terrestrial surface; and, lastly, that diamonds have been found in meteorites.

What is the origin of the meteors, why they should have fallen with so partial a discrimination in favor of Africa, what part of the jeweled shower may be due to the moon, the men of science do not assume to say. They do intimate, however, that the lunar surface is very likely a part of the deposit. This would, of course, upset a pet theory and set people to crying for that gilded placque worse than ever. Perhaps some able syndicate will secure the usufruct and fee simple of the moon.

THE KING'S ENGLISH.

Where and How He Learned to Butcher It, and Was Proud of It.

One of Kentucky's most successful politicians was a very illiterate man; but a man of strong common sense. I refer to Col. Joseph Le Compte. He filled many important political offices, and several times represented this district in congress. In one of his races his competitor was a Louisville lawyer, Thomas Q. Wilson, a college-bred man. Col. Le Compte had been a soldier in the war of 1812, and fought at the disastrous battle of the River Raisin and other battles of that war. He knew nothing of the rules of grammar and cared less. Mr. Wilson in one of his speeches had ventured to say that the people of the metropolitan district of Kentucky should send an educated man to congress—at least one who did not constantly in his speeches and conversation "butcher the King's English." When Le Compte came to reply he said: "I must admit that I have never set my foot inside the walls of a college or academy of learning; while Mr. Wilson was sitting in the halls of the academy and college acquiring a polite education I, with my knapsack on my back and my musket on my shoulder, was up on the River Raisin learning to "butcher the King's English." It is needless to say the accomplished butcher of the King's English was returned to congress.

A South American Solomon.

They have an easy patriarchal way of settling a dispute in South America. Two prisoners, Francisco Briones Gamboa and Victor Higuera, were implicated in a murder at Guara. The Guayaquil court being unable to fix the relative guilt of either, passed the following sentence. "They shall draw lots and the one favored by chance shall not be exectited and shall have his sentence commuted to that of imprisonment for life, which sentence he shall serve in the prison of the capital of the republic, and after being present at the execution of the other murderer."

Crickets Sell Readily.

THE HORSE'S HOOF.

What It Is Composed of and How to Improve It.

The external part of the foot consists of three parts—the wall, composed of fibrous material so closely laid together that in a healthy foot which has not been spoiled by foolish horseshoeing or the application of oil or hoof ointments they present a smooth and shining and apparently solid appearance: the sole, which is composed of a scaly or leafy material, which falls off of its own accord when it becomes too thick, and the frog, composed of a fibrous substance like India rubber, which, like the scales of the sole, falls off of its own accord when it has attained a certain distance from the secreting membrane. The wall of course bears a greater share of the weight of the horse, especially toward the toe, where it is the thickest, but the sole and frog are also designed by nature to bear a portion, and in his wild state they undoubtedly rest on the ground. The frog also is of great service, as we have already seen, in diminishing concussion, assisting the powerful flexor tendon in flexing the foot and in preventing slipping.

The wall is firmly attached to the pedal bone by between 600 and 700 horny leaves on its surface, which interlock with a like number of fleshlike leaves, formed by the membrane covering the bone, being raised in a kind of plaits. Still further, to strengthen this attachment and to enable the wall to bear the great strain that is upon it, it at its posterior part bends sharply around under the wings of the pedal bone, where it is still provided with laminæ or leaves. It is thus that what are called the bars of the hoof are formed. A theory is entertained by some that on account of this interlocking of the bars and the pedal bone, what is called the expansion of the heel is impossible; but any one who has seen a shoe that has been on some time removed will have noticed that the heel has considerable lateral elasticity, as the shoe is glazed at that part, and sometimes even wrought into a groove.

In regard to the material of the hoof, the opinion seems to be generally accepted that black or blue hoofs are composed of tougher horn than white ones, and as the fibers of the wall become softer as they are deeper, it is supreme folly to allow the farrier to rasp and polish the outside of the hoof. All he has to do after the nails are driven is to turn down the points of the nails on the face of the walls. Soil and climate have a good deal to do with the size of the foot. A dry, sandy soil has a tendency to grow feet less circular in form and therefore more concave in the sole than softer clay land, and it is of importance to keep the foot rather soft and flexible than hard and brittle. Where there is a tendency to the latter state it is a good plan to stuff the feet, and there is no more effective material for this purpose than cow dung mixed with clay.

A foot defective in substance or form renders the best looking horse of little value for work in the cities. Therefore use a stallion that, whatever his other defects, is right at the ground. If your mares are defective there, by the use of such a horse you may escape that defect in the produce. If you are laying in new mares, have them right at the ground, short in the leg, clean and flat in the bone, sound in joints, deep in rib, long below and short above, and finally bred from a kind of which you know something that is good.

In connection with this it may be stated that the Farrier's company of England give diplomas to working blacksmiths who have attained sufficient proficiency in their business. But Mr. Lupton, of Richmond, England, contends for an advance on this plan and says that every shoeing smith should learn the anatomy of the horse's foot, and that the knowledge so acquired would be of great value to the public and likely to bring a correspondingly greater return to the smith who owns it.

The Best Sheep to Raise.

If the butchers will pay as much per pound for Shropshire mutton and lamb as for Southdown we think Shropshires will be the more profitable sheep for a farmer to raise. In the London market Southdown mutton commands a higher price than any other, except the small Welsh mutton. But in the manufacturing districts there is not much difference in the price, and the larger sheep, like the Shropshire, are more popular with the farmers. The real question for us to consider is which breed will best improve our common sheep. In other words, are Southdown grades or Shropshire grades the most profitable for the farmer to keep? Some of our experiment stations should take hold of this question.—Exchange.

Gestation.

The duration of gestation or time the offspring of various animals is carried varies widely. The average duration in the mare is 335 days; cow, nine months; sheep, five months; sow, four months; bitch, two months; cat, fifty days. It is the shortest in the rabbit, requiring only twenty-eight days, and longest in the elephant, covering a period of two years. The male offspring is usually carried longer than the female. The young females go a longer time than older ones, and well bred females longer than those of coarse, lymphatic breeds.—Field and Farm.

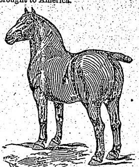
Rev. J. W. Arney, the trotting parson of the Methodist church, has resigned his pastoral charge and will hereafter devote his attention to horse breeding. He was twice disciplined by the church for his love of fast horses and for attending speeding exhibitions. Whatever the church has lost, the horse breeding interest has made a fine gain, and is to be congratulated.

WHICH IS THE BEST?

You Pays Your Money and You Takes Your Choice.

The advocates of the respective merits of the Percheron and Clydesdale horses have never yet been able to convince the public that either one or the other of these fine breeds was the best among draft stock.

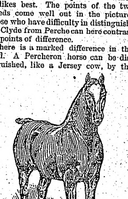
We place before our readers this week two pictures, one of an imported Percheron stallion, the other an imported Clydesdale, both probably as fine specimens of their class as have ever been brought to America.



PERCHERON.

The reader can inspect these two typical horses and make up his mind which he likes best. The points of the two breeds come well out in the picture. Those who have difficulty in distinguishing Clyde from Perche can here contrast the points of difference.

There is a marked difference in the head. A Percheron horse can be distinguished, like a Jersey cow, by the head, particularly that part of it around the ears. The Clyde horse has long hair on its legs. Both the noble fellows in the illustrations are prize winners at state fairs.



CLYDESDALE.

Training Ducks.

One of the greatest difficulties about keeping ducks is the habit all of the birds have of laying their eggs around anywhere. It is a long management that gets them in the habit of laying in the nest, and in places appointed for them. If they have a large range they will naturally prefer the woods and hedges for a nest than the best nest that can be constructed for them. This habit can, however, be overcome by good management in the winter time, and when the ducks are young.

The yard with the nests in it should be built as near some pond or stream of water as possible. The ducks should always be coaxed into this yard at night, and they should always be fed night and morning in the yard, and nowhere else. They will soon learn to look for their food at nighttime in this yard, and they will go into it voluntarily. Then they should be penned up, and as they nearly always lay their eggs in the night or early morning, they will gradually be drawn out of the habit of laying their eggs in the woods and hedges. If no pond is near the yard a large trough of water should be filled every night for them. If they are fed heartily and then shut up for the night without water, several dead ducks may be found in the pen by morning. The nests should be constructed under the sheds back from the water.

In the winter time the few pairs of ducks kept over should be treated kindly, and a large open shed constructed for them. During cold, inclement days they will spend a great deal of their time under this shed. It should be open on the south side so that the sun's rays may be enjoyed by the ducks. They will waddle around in the sun, protected by the shed, during very cold, clear days in the middle of winter and enjoy their outing.—Annie C. Webster in American Cultivator.

Live Stock Points.

A dispatch to a New York newspaper avers in the most solemn manner that Mr. E. E. Eshleman, "a well known and reputable miller," near Lancaster, Pa., is the owner of a bisexual rooster. This miraculous bird has been penned up and carefully watched and found to lay regularly two eggs a day. He did not cackle over them, however, in which respect he showed his sense. Externally he bears every mark of a cock, crows loudly in the barnyard and scratches gravel for his hens like any other male fowl. Yes! This beats the old speckled hen of the rhyme, the one that used to lay two eggs a day and Sundays she laid three.

Sulphur fumes are perhaps the best disinfectant and destroyer of chicken lice known. One way to rid a low built henhouse of lice is to cover it with a canvas and burn sulphur in it for two hours. Sulphur fumes will destroy any living germ.

Grade or mixed blood stock when crossed with inferior animals will not transmit the qualities of the superior breed in all cases. The older a breed is the greater is the certainty that it will transmit fixed qualities.

STAGE ROBBERIES

Operations of Three Men in the Mussel Shell Country in Montana.

Mail Sacks and Treasure Boxes the Only Valuables They Are After.

HELENA, Special, June 21.—A trio of stage robbers have been perniciously active in the Mussel Shell country, in Fergus county, of late, no less than five hold-ups being reported since June 2. In each case the robberies have been committed by three men.

Their operations have been confined to mail sacks and treasure boxes, no passengers being molested. The hold-ups occurred June 2, June 3, June 15, June 18 and June 19. Three of them occurred on one line and the other two on a second line at points some sixty miles distant, and may be the work of two different gangs. As their chief plunder has been mail sacks, the postoffice inspectors have been much worked up over the occurrences. Chief Bedell has put all of his available force, which consists of but two men, Inspectors Watkins and Wayland, to hunt the robbers, but while they are chasing down one set others are taking places at distant points.

If the two inspectors were to run across any one of the several gangs it is certain they would have a big fight on their hands before making a capture, as the men are evidently desperate characters. The government offers a reward of $500 for the capture of each of the robbers. Sheriff Sullivan of Fergus county telegraphs that he has three men under arrest at Lewiston, but as that town is a long distance from the railroad it will take several days to verify or disprove the report.

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Julius Lipke and Wife of Ashland Will Languish in Jail.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special, June 21.—The preliminary hearing of the case against Julius Lipke and wife was concluded in the circuit court to-day. After going over all the evidence District Attorney Sleight argued the case. Some additional evidence was presented which went to prove that Mrs. Lipke (then Mrs. Krause) was a party to her husband's death. The day of poisoning Mrs. Krause went to Butternut and while there informed several persons that when she arrived home she expected to find her husband dead. Letters were also exhibited which were to the effect that an agreement had been entered into between Krause and his wife that both were to poison themselves. After hearing the evidence Judge Parish said there had been enough evidence introduced to warrant him in holding the defendants for trial, although there were a number of mystical points brought out. The judge ordered the prisoners arraigned, and both pleaded not guilty, the charge preferred being willful murder. Bail was fixed at $3,500 for Lipke and $3,000 for his wife, in default of which the prisoners will lie in jail until September.

EXPRESS ROBBERS CAPTURED.

The Slayer of Messenger Montgomery Mortally Wounded.

WOODLAND, Cal., June 21.—John D. Ruggles, who with his younger brother Charles robbed the Redding stage and killed Express Messenger Montgomery, was captured in Woodland last night, in which Ruggles was mortally wounded. Charles Ruggles was wounded and captured soon after the robbery, and officers have been hunting for John ever since. When told he was going to die Ruggles gave the sheriff a written confession. The Redding stage was stopped about a month ago by a masked man. Express Messenger Montgomery opened fire on the robber and severely wounded him; John Ruggles, who was in ambush, then shot and killed Montgomery. The robbers then fled with the express company's treasure, amounting to several thousand dollars.

CYCLONE IN IOWA.

Considerable Damage but No Lives Lost at Sibley.

SIBLEY, Iowa, Special, June 21.—A cyclone passed over here this afternoon, coming with terrific force, and blew away several large barns in the north part of the city. It uprooted trees that would measure two feet in diameter, tore up sidewalks, and boxes, barrels and sticks were flying in every direction. People ran for caves and cellars for safety. No one was injured here. At Ogden, a small town east of here, several dwellings were blown down and several people badly injured. It is thought the storm was more severe throughout the country.

FIFTY PEOPLE INJURED.

Lightning and a Powder Explosion at Somerset, Ky.

SOMERSET, Ky., June 21.—Last evening a severe lightning and thunder storm passed over this section. The general store of W. H. Ryan at Parmleysville, Wayne county, was struck by lightning. Two kegs of powder exploded, throwing a heavy iron safe through the roof and wounding all the occupants of the room, some fifty in number. Not a single occupant of Ryan's store escaped severe injury, and many, it is thought, will die from the stroke. Ryan is a representative of Wayne county in the legislature.

Independent Convention.

REDFIELD, S. D., Special, June 21.—About five hundred delegates have already arrived to attend the Independent state convention to-morrow. The city is beautifully decorated with flags and bunting. W. H. Kauffman lectures to-night on the referendum and initiative. R. B. Hassell of Redfield and Q. A. Phillips, a preacher, are hoping for congressional honor, with Hassell in the lead. H. L. Loucks will probably be nominated for governor.

Heavy Infringement Damages Asked.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Special, June 21.—The United Gas Improvement company of Philadelphia has brought suit in the federal court here against the Cedar Rapids Gas and Light company and A. T. Averill, president, alleging infringement of patent for the manufacture of illuminating water gas. The court is asked to perpetually restrain the Cedar Rapids company from using the apparatus and alleges it is deprived and prevented from putting the invention into successful operation in Cedar Rapids and from receiving the gains and profits to which it is lawfully entitled because of the unlawful use of the apparatus. Damages are placed at $100,000.

CURING DEAFNESS.

A New Method for Which Great Success Is Claimed.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The morning session of the American Institute of Homeopathy was largely devoted to routine business matters. The address of the bureau of sanitary science, prepared by Dr. D. H. Beckwith, of Cleveland, was read by Dr. Bushrod W. James. The constitution of the institute was amended by a unanimous vote, so as to provide for two vice presidents of the institute instead of one. The question of taking steps to have homeopathy represented at the world's fair was discussed by a large number of members and the whole matter was finally referred to a committee to be appointed by the chairman. On the adjournment of the institute, sectional meetings were held of the bureaus science, of sanitary opthalmology, otology and laryngiology and obstetrics. At these meetings a large number of valuable papers of a strictly technical character were read by prominent members.

The paper of Dr. Henry F. Garey of Stillwater explaining his method for the cure of the deafness was, however, of general interest. The title of the paper was "Massage of the Sound Conducting Apparatus of the Ear by Means of Vibratory Force and the Similar Sound as a Curative Agent in Tinnitus Aurium." Dr. Garey's method is vibratory force (or motion) acting upon the sound conducting parts of the ear, producing massage, thereby relieving those conditions which before could not be reached by the regular modes of treatment, and which were the principal causes of deafness in a very large proportion of those afflicted. The phonograph was at first used to bring about these results, but lately an instrument (the vibrometer) has been devised for this special purpose, which makes this mode of treatment much more effective. The doctor reported the results in a number of persons treated. Some whose deafness was from five to fifteen year's standing could now hear ordinary conversation from ten to twenty feet away with their backs turned to the speaker, and others with never-ceasing noises in their ears were completely relieved.

This afternoon there were sectional meetings in gynæcology and sanitary science. At the evening session there was a report from the board of censors followed by sectional meetings in anatomy, physiology and pathology and nervous and mental diseases.

DAMAGE AT GALESBURG.

Many Serious Injuries and Great Loss of Property.

GALESBURG, Ill., June 15—There passed through the northeastern part of this (Knox) county yesterday evening, a most destructive tornado, and ruin was left all along its path. It came with such suddenness that the citizens had no time to fly to places of safety. In the Free Methodist church there was assembled a congregation. In the rink there was gathering a committee to arrange for a Fourth of July celebration. The church was quickly a mass of ruins and the congregation was imprisoned. A number were injured, one dangerously. The rink also was blown down but those inside managed to escape without injury.

The roar of the storm is described as terrible. It was accompanied by midnight darkness and an awful sweep of wind that carried everything before it. Nearly every business house along the principal street was unroofed and the stocks of goods were badly damaged by the floods of water following the tornado. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy roundhouse was totally wrecked. The G. W. Barnett elevator, near by, was unroofed and 10,000 bushels of grain deluged with water. The Rock Island & Peoria elevator and a part of the depot went next. The tall steeple of the Baptist church was cut off as clean as if by a knife and was HURLED INTO THE STREET.

The Congregational church was also badly injured. The saddest feature occurred at August Olson's house. There were in the house at the time Mr. and Mrs. Olson, Charles Olson and four others. The residence suddenly collapsed, killing Mr. Olson instantly and the others escaped by a miracle. The place to-day was in a state of demoralization. Business was completely suspended, the streets were filled with debris of every description. The stores were more or less in ruins. Hardly a residence but what will need repairs. The damage is estimated at $200,000. Considering the number of buildings wrecked it is surprising that there was not greater loss of life. The injured were as follows:

George Erickson, Mrs. Albert Erickson, Mrs. John Erickson, Mrs. Herman Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Noah Yarger, O. M. Hempstead, Ernest Dickerson, Albert Erickson, Huldah Carlson, Nellie Moline.

The storm in the vicinity of Lafayette is said to have been severe. But the damage was less than farther north. It was in the Free Methodist church in Galva that most of those injured were hurt. This old building is in the southeast part of the town. A large congregation was assembled, but on seeing and hearing the storm, started to run out.

NEARLY ALL ESCAPED.

Nellie Moline, Mrs. John Erickson, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Erickson, George Erickson, Huldah Carlson, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Erickson and Mrs. Herman Anderson were not quick enough and were either buried in the debris or stricken by flying timbers. Albert Erickson, although injured, returned to the church and rescued his brother George, who was buried under a mass of rubbish and would have soon been smothered. The edifice was reduced to kindling wood.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

It was dark, despite the snows that lay upon the ground. Brace led the way with a pine torch, which burned sluggishly in the mist that enveloped us. Lola holding my hand tightly, we followed close behind Brace, who kept the torch low to show the nature of the path; nevertheless, we slipped and floundered considerably in stepping from boulder to boulder,—the half melted snow rendering it impossible to obtain a firm footing.

Under other circumstances, Lola would have enjoyed the difficulties, and laughed at our mishaps, but now she neither smiled nor spoke; sometimes she would press my hand a little tighter,—that was all the sign she gave. We followed the course of the river, guided by the sound of the rushing waters. As we proceeded the descent grew more and more rapid, the stream forming along succession of falls, and, the light increasing, the rocks and boulders about us became dimly visible through the gray mist. At length our progress was stopped by a huge rock that rose perpendicular before us.

"Hark!" said the Judge, as we stopped to regain the breath that had been jumped out of our lungs by the last scramble.

I listened,—we seemed to have turned our backs on the stream,—its rushing sounded more distant than I had yet heard it. I said this.

"Hark again!" said Brace. Then as I leaned my ear attentively, I heard beside the swirling and dashing noise in our rear, a muffled roar, that seemed to come from the very bowels of the earth. I almost fancied I felt the rock vibrating under my feet.

"You're right," said Brace, when I gave him my impression; "end the roar you hear is that stream shootin' down thousands of feet to the bottom of the great hole. If it warn't for the durned mist," he added, holding up the torch, which revealed but a few feet above our heads of the granite wall by our side, "you'd see that we're now standin' right between the two sides of the divide we looked at last night. We are standin' right over the canon, with per'aps four or five thousand feet of nothing under 's, on a lump of rock that's tumbled down from up above, and wedged itself here, 'cause somethin' stopped its goin' furder; end it do tremble, I allow. It ain't solid! It's moved a lump since I knew it in the old days, and one o' these days a chunk from up above will come down and start it off for good an' all."

"I think we may as well get off it, in that case."

"Wal, yes. It ain't more risky standin' on it than standin' under it; but, as we've got to go under it, and down the hole, we may as well git."

He led the way along the trembling rock a dozen yards maybe,—the rushing water sounding upon the left of us, and then stretched out his left arm to stop us. He advanced cautiously, and, holding out the torch at arm's length, the light fell upon the yellow water as it poured down into the black gulf upon which our standing place abutted. The flame of the torch was drawn down by the current of air as if it had been at the blast-hole of a furnace. Raising his voice to overcome the noise of the water, Brace called out:

"We've got to go down there!"

"You are not afraid, Lola?" I asked.

She shook her head, and gave my hand another little squeeze.

Brace led us off the rock, keeping the water still on our left, and there was some more downward clambering for a few minutes. Then we came to a stand, and he showed me a lateral opening about four feet in height.

"We goes through there," he said; en he produced a flask, poured out a dram, and handed it to me. I offered it to Lola. Another shake of the head and another little squeeze.

I emptied the cup, and Brace helped himself.

"There ain't no need to get ourselves in a muck over this job. We'll put our rubbers on," he said; "the wet drips through."

I took out the overcoats from the bundle of rugs, and we put them on. Then I strapped the roll of rugs on my shoulders again.

Brace touched my shoulder, and pointed upward to a couple of faintly pink nebulous patches in the mist.

"What is it?" I asked.

"The sun ketchin' the tops of the peaks," he replied.

He took a couple of torches from the bundle he carried, and began to light them at the end of the one he had last used.

"Won't you wait a little,—it will be light in half an hour?" I said.

"Not down there," he replied; "it's pitch dark in that almighty hole. Now," he added, when the torches were well lit, "take one of these, kick the snow well off your feet, keep one eye on me, the t'other on the rocks, and leave the rest to Providence."

With this last injunction, he stooped down and passed through the opening. We followed, but singly, for we needed both hands to make the perilous decent.

The first thing I noticed in passing under the great block that bridged the awful chasm was the comparative silence. We could no longer hear the rushing of the stream on the other side,—only the dull roar of the water as it struck the bottom of the canon some thousands of feet below.

Brace's voice was startlingly distinct when he spoke.

"You tell me the thing is on the other side of the ropes, my gel," he said.

She answered yes, and we went slowly forward and downward along the narrow and jagged ledge, our faces toward the glittering quartz, seeking interstices and projections for hold to our hands.

We were getting away from the fall, but at a certain point the natural path returned toward it in a zig-zag along the lower projection. At the angle, which offered a little wider standing space, we stopped.

"This here hole was fust showed me by the Kid's mother," said Brace; "it had served her father for a cachette in quite the early days of this country's glory.

"A cachette," he explained, "is a place where you keep things snug. A'most every miner, before the Vigilance Committee nominated me Judge, had a cachette. This was mine, and many an ounce I've brought down here; fur you see, barrin' accidents, it's won'erful safe. You will allow that no one could find his way down here in the dark" (I shudder at the thought of any one attempting such a fearful venture), "and from here right up to the hole is a fair straight line, so that no light could come down without its bein' seen; but that ain't the only safeguard as you shall see. Come on sir."

We made our way foot by foot along the narrow ledge for some distance, still descending. When Brace again halted, the light of his torch revealed the yellow stream falling silently through space, a few feet before him. That silent fall impressed me with a sense of the awful depth of the gulf beside us.

The ledge ended abruptly where Brace stood; a recess in the wall allowed ample standing room for us three.

"The greaser never got no furder down than this; but it weren't fur enough for me," said Brace. "I had my idea of gettin' right down to the bottom of this hole, where these waters must have carried tons o' gold."

"But the ledge ends here."

"It do; but," he added lifting his torch, "it goes on again over there."

The light fell on a jutting projection of quartz upon the opposite side of the chasm, distant at least twenty feet.

"But you can not leap that."

"Correct, end I ain't going to try."

He laid himself upon his face, and stretched his arm down the chasm; when he rose, he had a cord in his hand. Pulling this in, he drew up two coils of stout rope. As he drew them in, I saw that their other ends were attached to rocks upon the opposite ledge, one above the other, with about four feet between.

"We must hitch 'em tight,—give us a hand, sir," he said.

I helped him to make the ropes taut, and fasten their loose ends upon the projecting crags that he had long employed for that purpose.

"There, sir," he said, taking his torch from Lola, and holding it over the black gulf, "there's as pretty a bridge and hand-rail as the heart of man could reasonably desire."

For all that I held my breath as I saw him step out on the low rope, and make his way, holding by the upper one, across that black abyss. My turn came, and with the blood humming in my ears, I stepped out upon the rope. It swung to and fro in the middle, and I was seized with that irresistible suggestion of self-destruction which affects the imagination of most people in looking down from the extraordinary height.

Lola began to cross before I was well off, and when we stood all three in safety on the ledge, a fervent "Thank God" rose from my heart.

"Wal, we've got to git back agin," observed Brace, as if my thankfulness were a little premature; "hows' ever 'tain't bad to think of Providence when you're in danger; now, my gel, it's for you to lead on."

"You can stay here; you're too heavy for where I'm going," said she, taking the torch from his hand.

With a swiftness that terrified me, she went down the side of the precipice, finding foothold where we, looking down from the projection, could see none.

"They don't know danger,—kids don't," said Brace, in a low tone. "End," he added, looking into the depths about him uneasily, "I wouldn't mind feeling the same myself. First time I ever felt skeery, down this hole, and I'm durned if it sha'n't be the last. I'm gettin' too old to enj'y risky work."

I could not take my eyes from the light below, as it passed in jerks from point to point. At last it stopped, and after a minute's pause, to my great relief, it began to return.

Quicker and quicker the light danced along until I felt sick and giddy with fear for the girl's safety; and then, with one last bound, she stood upon our shelf of rock, holding the Great Hesper in her hand.

"Am I good?" she asked earnestly, nestling up to my side.

CHAPTER XX.

"It's the very same," said Brace, taking the stone in his hand.

"Do you take care of it," said I, "for I find enough to do to take care of myself."

"Wal, I reckon it won't be long before we're on the best side o' this hole," he replied putting the stone in his pocket.

He was certainly ill at ease, and less confident than usual, for he took his torch and examined the fastenings of the ropes, and then, from an adjacent cavity, he brought out another coil of cord, in which cross-pieces of stout hickory were knotted at intervals of a foot. He unfastened it, and laid it loose upon the rock, with the looped end free.

"The ropes has been years exposed to the damp, and they're bound to go one day. Ef they should happen to go this day, this here knotted rope may come in partic'lar handy. You know how to use it, my gel. Here's for a start.

With the torch in his hand, he began the return along the rope.

He had got to the middle when he stopped.

"What's that?" he asked sharply, holding the upper rope with one hand, while he raised the torch with the other, and peered out into the darkness.

It was fearful to see him standing there with one upheld torch over the awful chasm,—the one luminous object in the blackness.

"Did you hear anything, pardner?"

"No."

"Seemed to me I heerd a rifle cocked. Durned old fool!" he muttered in self-reproach, as he continued his course.

Without accident, or other incident, he reached the ledge, and with a grunt of content, seated himself on a boulder letting the torch drop by his side. There was a pool of water there; with a hiss, the light went out.

The next instant there was a flash in the darkness beyond, followed by the sharp crack of a rifle shot.

We could see nothing, but from the ledge opposite came a groan, and Brace called faintly:

"I'm hit pardner; look out for yourself."

The shot had been fired after the light was extinguished, leaving him in obscurity. The faculty that had enabled the assassin to descend that terrible ledge, in the dark, had enabled him to mark down poor Brace when he was no longer visible to our eyes.

This reflection struck me as, torch in hand, I sprang upon the rope bridge to cross to my fallen partner.

"Back, pardner, back," groaned Brace; "he's got the Hesper, and he'll have your life,—back!"

I raised my torch, and, looking toward the ledge, I saw a man kneeling over Brace.

He raised his arm to silence Brace, and the light fell on the bright blade of the knife in his hand. I shouted. Turning, he saw me midway across the chasm, and sprang to his feet. Then I recognized him. It was Van Hoeck.

It was he, but could I believe my senses. His eyes were not the same. At that distance, his sightless eyes should have been hardly distinguishable from his cadaverous face but now they shone out black and lustrous. Yet, in that instant as he looked toward me, they seemed to fade away in the light of my torch. And this was no deception of my sight.

With a savage cry of rage, he held up his arms to shield his eyes from the light, and grasping his knife, he made his way quickly toward the rock to which the rope on which I stood was attached.

In a moment the whole mystery was revealed. He was a Nyctalops; and his eyes, blind in the light, were gifted with the extraordinary power of seeing in the dark,—a power by which was explained all that had hitherto been inscrutable in the robbery of the Great Hesper, and the attendant events at Monken Abbey.

With a perception that he intended to cut the rope which sustained me, I hastened to reach the ledge on which he stood. But my progress was necessarily slow, for the lower cord, stretched with the weight upon it, formed a deep bend, and my damp boots slipped upon its wet surface.

Which would he cut first? If it were the upper one, I must trust to catching the lower as I fell. With this view, I kept myself as perpendicular as circumstances permitted; at the same time grasping the upper one with all my force, in case he cut the lower one.

I was within a yard of the rock when I felt the rope under my foot jerk as Van Hoeck cut the first strands; the next instant it went altogether, and I was left swinging by my hands to the upper rope over the chasm.

"Die! cursed dog, die!" shouted Van Hoeck, with the frantic excitement of a man achieving at last the object of his life, as he attacked the upper rope with his knife. "Die, and know that all you cherish in the world shall be mine,—wealth, and the woman you love. Die!"

And with that, he severed the last strand, and I swept down through space. Clinging with desperate energy to the rope in my hands, I swung, cramping myself together in anticipation of a violent shock against the side of the precipice. Happily, the rock above projected a little, so that the blow was less severe than I expected. I rebounded and swung to and fro like a pendulum in the pitchy darkness. For, in order to get a firmer grasp upon the rope when I saw his intention of cutting it, I had dropped the torch, which fell like the spark of a rocket into the depths below.

A California Product.

Frank Page, who recently removed to the stockyards near Berkely with his parents, has created a great deal of attention of late. The lad is only 14 years old and weighs 275 pounds. He does not find it an easy matter to get around, and in hot weather it is very unpleasant for him. The youngster does not complain very much, however, and tries to act like other boys.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Page are large people and will each weigh nearly 200 pounds. Frank was as sound as could be until he was 6 years old, when he was taken sick and remained in poor health for a long time. In a few years he seemed to recover entirely and commenced to gain flesh very rapidly. There seemed to be no stopping, and every day he is adding to his weight. If he keeps up his present gain something is certainly going to happen.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Great Fun.

Pop—"I'll tell you how we'll fix it. We'll pretend every blade of grass on the lawn is an armed foe, and then you charge on them with Gatling swords and cut their heads off. Won't that be fun?"

"Indeed it will. But I haven't any Gatling swords."

"No, but a lawn mower will do nicely."

THE Times says the St. Hilaire Spectator is the first Republican paper that refuses to support President Harrison for re-election. Our neighbor seems to have a decided penchant for getting things wrong, but in this case it must have been purposely done, as the Times is as well aware as everybody else is that the Spectator man has been training with the People's party for sometime, was a delegate to their convention in this city not long since and also a delegate to their judicial convention at Ada. What possible good can be subserved by uttering such palpable unlikelihoods we fail to observe.

THE following from a Cedar Rapids paper is in line with the JOURNAL's recent article in regard to patronizing home industries:

> Let Cedar Rapids people stand by Cedar Rapids people and Cedar Rapids industries; wheel your baby in a Cedar Rapids carriage; pump your water with a Cedar Rapids pump; hitch your horse with Cedar Rapids harness; build with Cedar Rapids brick; employ Cedar Rapids contractors and builders; use Cedar Rapids engines; milk in Cedar Rapids pails, and strain away the milk in a Cedar Rapids cooler; sit on a Cedar Rapids cushion; eat Cedar Rapids pork, beef and crackers; use Cedar Rapids flour and oatmeal; marry a Cedar Rapids girl, and when you die have a Cedar Rapids monument erected to commemorate your loyalty to your home city.

IT HAS been estimated by the free-trade advocates that Germany, with her protective tariff, is furnishing more immigrants to America, a protective country, than is free-trade England, and the question is asked why? The proposition is not correctly stated. The figures show exactly the contrary. During the year ending June 30th, 1890, Germany sent to America alone 92,427 immigrants, while Great Britain, not including Wales sent 128,349. This question was propounded by a leading advocate of "tariff reform" to a protectionist Republican during the debate in congress to which no reply was given. The reply might have easily been found in the following statement: A comparison of the immigrants arriving in America from the two countries named above from 1815 to June 30th, 1890, is as follows: Great Britain, 6,235,277 out of a population of 35,000,000; while from Germany there came 4,204,128 out of a population of 46,000,000. These figures speak for themselves.

BLAINE was the almost unanimous choice of the Republicans of North Dakota for nominee for president. Five out of six delegates to the convention were Blaine men, and four voted for him, but the following from the Bismark Tribune reflects the sentiment of the people on this question, and shows that the Republicans of the ozone state will all be in line for Harrison:

> While the Bismark Tribune supported the re-nomination of President Harrison all the way through, it does not deny the fact that the majority sentiment of the Republicans of this state was in favor of James G. Blaine. Not that they loved Harrison less, but Blaine more. They believed that with Blaine the campaign would be more enthusiastic because of the peculiar and unexplainable hold he had upon the affections of the American people—and the general desire to redress the wrong that deprived him of the presidency in 1884. However, Mr. Harrison's administration has been so intensely American, so thoroughly patriotic and so eminently satisfactory to the business interests of the country that there will be no sulking, no treachery and no lack of support on the part of former Blaine enthusiasts. Every Republican is for Harrison now, and if not so enthusiastic, certainly as loyal as he would have been for any other favorite.

AFTER an illness of five days C. R. Hunter, of Grand Forks, died on Wednesday morning of last week. Mr. Hunter had been connected with the Grand Forks Herald since 1883, and was business manager of that institution since 1886. He was a young man of splendid business ability and sterling qualities, and to his efforts is due in a large measure the success which the Herald has attained. On the day of President Harrison's re-nomination, Mr. Hunter was in good health and high spirits, and as the result of the votes was wired to the Herald, he wrote them on a bulletin board in front of the office. When the news of the nomination came he hung out a large picture of President Harrison, and proceeded to put out some bunting. But while doing so he was taken suddenly with a pain in the side and had to go home. He grew worse until on Monday morning he was found to be suffering with volvolus. An operation was performed and everything done that medical aid could do, but on Wednesmorning he passed away.

THE ALLIANCE MUGWUMPS.

Commenting upon the call of the Alliance committee for state convention, the St. Paul Globe observes:

"The division of the third party in Minnesota politics into two factions was inevitable sooner or later. Its leadership has been made up mostly of men who found they could not secure for themselves as members of the Republican party either the offices or the influence in the party's councils that they considers themselves entitled to. These men now insist upon a line of political philosophy which is at entire variance with the very motive of the existence of the third party movement. For if that party is not the advocate of governmental paternalism, it cannot be said to represent any doctrine whatever. If it is to be considered as the declared foe of paternalism, then it is to be regarded as nothing more than a tender to the Democratic party. It would be easy to go back and unearth a full dozen of public declaration of political doctrine fulminated in this very city by the party to which those gentlemen were then attached, repudiating the principle of opposition to paternalism on which they now think proper to stand, and invoking the intervention of the government in the affairs of the people at points which have never been touched upon before by any but the most radical exponents of socialistic doctrines in politics.

"There is no necessity, however, to adopt any such policy. These gentlemen by the declaration of Thursday last place themselves outside the field of the Alliance, unless the Alliance is prepared to withdraw all the opinions on political and social questions with which it is identified in the state and elsewhere.

"The supposed author of the declaration of Thursday is Mr. Erwin of this city. Is that gentleman, too, to be regarded as a foe to paternalism in government? If so, what becomes of any and all pronouncements which he has made within the past few years as the one of the two prophets of the Minnesota Alliance? Mr. Donnelly does not occupy the position in the public mind of being steadfast or the most consistent of men in his political associations and beliefs. But let the worst be said of Mr. Donnelly that can be said in this direction and no one will venture to charge him with a desertion of the basic principle of the particular school of social and political thought for which he has stood in recent years.

It may be a misfortune, but it is none the less true, that the views for which Mr. Donnelly contends are those which are entertained by the rank and file of the party which he has been and is still the leader in this state. Those views are substantially the same as those to which Gen. Baker, Mr. Erwin and the rest of them have given their sanction to since they left the Republican party. There is but a single difference, and that is one not of principle, but of degree. These gentlemen refuse in the last event to sanction the subtreasury scheme. Their refusal in this regard is but a slender reed on which to lean in their efforts to establish either a political party or a record for political consistency."

A LESSON IN HISTORY.

New York Press: The Mugwump organs are vociferously proclaiming that the nomination of President Harrison makes Grover Cleveland the inevitable choice of the Chicago convention. A good many of the straight out Democratic newspapers are apparently of the same opinion.

The arguments with which the admirers of the chronic candidate urge his availability as the antagonist of the president contain many gorgeous flowers of rhetoric, but a wofully scanty array of facts.

For instance, the free trade shouters appear to have forgotten that, whereas in 1884 Grover Cleveland dee feated James G. Blaine in the "pivotal state" of New York by 1,047 votes, in 1888 Benjamin Harrison defeated Grover Cleveland in the same state by 14,373 votes.

Another fact that seems to have slipped their memory, is that Indiana, which Cleveland carried against Blaine by 6,512 votes, was carried by Harrison against Cleveland by 2,348 votes.

There are many other facts which possess the same significance. W will mention only these three.

In Massachusetts the plurality against Cleveland in 1884 was 24,372. In 1888 the plurality for Harrison and against Cleveland was 32,037.

In 1884 West Virginia's plurality for Cleveland was 4,211. In 1888 it was only 552. In 1884 Connecticut's plurality for Cleveland was 1,284. In 1888 it was 336.

Cleveland and free trade are excellent vote makers—for the Republican party. Yet the poor old Democracy is saddled with both and apparently neither can be unseated.

This is a Republican country and a Republican year. The Press believes that the Democratic candidate, whoever he is will be decisively beaten. Appearances indicate that that candidate will be the apostle of platitudes and British free trade. The suggestive facts we have given show the comparative strength of Benjamin Harrison and Grover Cleveland with the people of the United States.

A VOTE GETTER.

During the recent Republican convention at Minneapolis, the Tribune of that city publishes an array of figures showing how much stronger Harrison was than Blaine, and although the fight is a thing of the past, the JOURNAL reproduces them for the benefit of any of the Blaine men who may be grieving over the defeat of their candidate. These figures speak volumes for Mr. Harrison and prove him to be a vote-getter indeed.

Think of New York which voted against Blaine giving Harrison a majority of over 14,000, and of then turning about and giving 40,000 majority against Mr. Fassett, the late Republican candidate for governor. Mr. Fassett is a very popular man, a fine speaker with all that magnetism so generally credited with political triumph; and yet here we find the party suffering defeat after defeat except when a "cold and passionless" candidate is placed in the field, when lo and behold the record changes! There is no judging the future but by the past. Yet Mr. Fassett, with his own and Mr. Blaine's defeat staring us in the face, comes here telling us that the latter is the man to carry New York. And there is Indiana, too! It left Mr. Blaine in the lurch, by nearly 7,000, while the cold blooded and unmagnetic Harrison captured it by a handsome majority. And the same holds good in even what are known as the "Blaine states."

In Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Ohio, Pennsylvania, California, Colorado, Nevada, Massachusetts, Oregon and New York, Mr. Blaine's vote was 2,795,443, while Mr. Harrison's was 3,124,488.

We are told that Michigan is coming to Minneapolis for Blaine, and yet Harrison carried the state by 23,000, while Blaine only saved it by 3,308. Even Maine gave the president over 1,000 more votes than it did its favorite son, Mr. Blaine. Kansas gave him 16,000 more, Minnesota 30,000 more, Nebraska 32,000 more, Wisconsin 15,000 more, Iowa 14,000 more, Ohio 16,000 more, Pennsylvania 53,000 more, California 22,000 more, Colorado 14,000 more, Massachusetts 37,000 more, Oregon 8,000 more and New York 15,000 more.

Mr. Blaine was beaten in New York by something over a thousand votes. Mr. Harrison carried the state by 14,000.

Mr. Blaine was defeated in Indiana by 7,000. Mr. Harrison carried it by 2,400.

Mr. Blaine carried Iowa by 19,000. Mr. Harrison carried it by 31,000.

Mr. Blaine received 337,000 votes in Illinois. Mr. Harrison received 370,000.

Mr. Blaine received 473,000 votes in Pennsylvania. Mr Harrison received 526,000.

Mr. Blaine received 72,209 votes in Maine. Mr. Harrison received 73,724.

Mr. Blaine received 146,000 votes in Massachusetts. Mr. Harrison received 183,000.

Mr. Blaine received 111,000 votes in Minnesota. Mr. Harrison received 142,000.

Mr. Blaine received 77,000 votes in Nebraska. Mr. Harrison received 108,000.

Mr. Blaine received 161,000 votes in Wisconsin. Mr. Harrison received 176,000.

Mr. Blaine received 400,000 votes in Ohio. Mr. Harrison received 416,000.

Mr. Blaine received 154,000 votes in Kansas. Mr. Harrison received 182,000.

And so we might go on down through the entire list. An important fact to be remembered is that Mr. Harrison got 114,000 more votes in New York than J. Sloat Fassett, the late defeated candidate for governor, and 56,000 more votes than were cast for Gov. Flower, who defeated Mr. Fassett by 40,000. There is no escape from these figures. They are the most marvelous showing ever made in behalf of any candidate, and they compel attention from those who seek the success of the party. No fair man will deny that Mr. Harrison is stronger by far than he was four years ago. His administration has been a model; no scandals have attached to it, no duty has been neglected by it, but it has commanded the confidence, respect and endorsement of every state convention from Maine to California. Hear these two widely separated committees as they speak through their Republican state conventions—California saying that the logic of the situation demands the renomination of the president and Maine declaring that the record of the administration establishes our confidence in President Harrison and we believe that the best interests of the party and the country will be answered by his nomination and reelection.

And as with them, so with the others, North and South. The campaign must be made on the record of the administration. What fitter action than to march under the leadership of the man who made the record?

Talk about popularity—about nominating a "vote getter," where in the whole history of politics has there been such an unanswerable demonstration of a man's vote-getting power as this?

POLITICAL TREACHERY.

St. Paul Daily News: When the state convention passed a resolution unanimously supporting honest Bob Evans for national committeeman, it was the duty of all the delegates-at-large, of whom Mr. Newell was one, to loyally stand by the wishes of the convention that thus gave expression to the popular wish, but Mr. Newell, in spite of this fact, became an active candidate as Mr. Evans' successor, and came within one vote of being chosen. It was a piece of political treachery unworthy a man who aspires to such a position within the party, and every good partisan will be glad to know that Mr. Newell was defeated. Being a delegate himself and then becoming a candidate in the face of the expressed wish of the convention ought to retire Mr. Newell from party service. His position that the resolutions of the convention did not amount to instructions was a mere play upon words, a subterfuge, the resort of an ambitious, grasping disposition, which, interpreted into plain English, amounts to saying, "the convention be d——." Bob Evans was the choice of the state convention, where his name was substituted by a unanimous vote in place of Mr. Newell, the St. Paul delegation withdrawing the name of Newell when it was apparent that Bob would be chosen by a very large majority if Newell stayed in the field. All is well that ends well, and this paper is very glad Mr. Evans was successful.

A SCURRILOUS ATTACK.

Mankato Free-Press: In the course of his remarks here the other evening, Ignatius Donnelly alluded to John Sherman as "the arch fiend of American politics," and declared him to be "worse than all the people who have been in the penitentiaries put together." How such a remark must make an anarchist dance and howl with glee, for it is right upon par with anarchist frothings. What an example to set before the youth of our land—the holding up of one of America's greatest statesmen as worse than all the murderers and other villains ever coined in the penitentiaries. What ill-formed views of life such statements are apt to give them. It leads them to look upon all public servants in high or low positions as rascals. It is inculcating a spirit of discontent and breeds a feeling to look upon every man as a rascal, but yourself, and be very cautious as to the ideas you hold to your own honesty. He who reasons and thinks will at once note them as but mouthings of a political demagogue who seeks to float himself upon the tide of political discontent.

John Sherman stands as one of the world's great financiers, and to him perhaps more than any other American belongs the honor of preserving the nation's credit by the resumption of specie payments. His name connected with financial affairs has for years been a guarantee for honest money. Probably no man is more hated by the advocates of a cheap, dishonest currency than is he. But his record and character are such that their mud and shafts of malice fail to mar them. Such attacks as Donnelly's can do John Sherman no harm, for he is too far above the cryptogramist to be reached by him. The harm of such reckless statements comes from their effect upon the general public, by stirring up a spirit of discontent and destroying their confidence in the public servants.

CROOKSTON Times: Knute Nelson, after much persuasion, has consented to accept the republican nomination for governor if it is handed to him on a silver server and properly perfumed. Funny, isn't it, that no one seems to be hustling very hard for any of the nominations on the republican ticket this year?

Nothing funny about it. Republicans generally believe in the principle that the office should seek the man, and not the man seek the office, which latter is the adhered-to policy of our democratic friends. Take the late Republican convention at Minneapolis, for instance. Did any of the men whose names were mentioned as probable candidates make any great exertions to get the nomination? No. They simply placed themselves in the hands of their friends and abided results. Why should Knute Nelson or any one else make any particular effort to secure the governorship of Minnesota? Outside of the honor which attaches to the position, the emoluments of the office are not worth the getting. If the republican party should offer Mr. Nelson the nomination he would probably accept it—not through any hope of financial gain, but for the substantial honor which attaches to the position of governor of the great and prosperous state of Minnesota.

FAVORABLE TO BUSINESS.

Fargo Argus:—Although Harrison's name calls forth less enthusiasm than that of Blaine, and his nomination seems to fall flat from lack of noisy demonstration over it, there is no doubt that Harrison has a very strong hold upon the quiet voting element. Business men and church members who rarely take a very active interest in politics and frequently neglect to vote, will be pretty sure to turn out this year and drop in a ballot for the Republican presidential ticket. With the quiet voters a foundation of strength, the enthusiasts may be expected to get in line for the ticket as soon as their soreness over Blaine's defeat wears off. Already prominent financial authorities are hailing Harrison's nomination as a bull argument in the stock market, because it pleases the solid business men and investors. If Grover Cleveland, in whom business men have almost equal confidence, is nominated by the Democratic convention, the outcome is expected to be beneficial to American financial investment and financial interests both at home and abroad. The country will be considered safe, and there will be less than the average business disturbance from the presidential contest.

The Thirteen Towns, (Fosston) calls us down thusly:

> The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL advocates raising the salary of the president of the United States. There are many first-class men who would give the small amount of $50,000 a year to be president. Our worthy contemporaries should look a "leedle oud aboud dese tings sometimes, by jing." It hasn't been two years yet since a very frigid wave swept over this portion of Minnesota—and it didn't originate in Manitoba either—that knocked high salaries higher than Gilderoy's kite, and you needn't go outside the county for proof. Take a reef in the governor spring of your gasoline engine, brothers.

The JOURNAL simply voiced a sentiment which is steadily growing throughout the U. S. There is a prevailing opinion that public officials should be paid sufficient salaries to satisfy ordinary mortals and thus prevent them from becoming corrupt in their offices. The JOURNAL is not in favor of over-paying any body. It simply advocates the payment of salaries equivalent to the services rendered.

THE HEART of the great American nation beats in sympathy with its greatest statesman, Jas. G. Blaine, today, in the great affliction he has been called upon to endure in the sudden death of his second son, Emmons at Chicago last week. Whether that great heart can endure the blow is a question, but that every true American will truly mourn with the grand old man goes without saying.

Crookston Daily Times: The JOURNAL office, since its addition was erected, is receiving a complete overhauling. The partition between the old press room and composing room has been removed; an office has been arranged facing Main street, and now Messrs. Cooke & Hammond are figuring which will be the cheaper, to put in a plate glass front or to have the present windows washed—plate glass, probably.

THE PEOPLES party judicial convention at Ada last Saturday placed in nomination Judge Frank Ives for district judge. Judge Ives is an old-time resident of Crookston and, if elected, would no doubt fill the office with dignity and grace. We consider this the strongest nomination that party could have made and the present out-look is that it will keep the other fellows guessing to defeat him.

Belieview (Iowa) Leader: We want to ever so much, but somehow or other we can't get on much of the steam of enthusiasm over this nomination. We hope to and likely shall warm up as the campaign progresses. We shall continue to lead our partisan horse to the river every day until we succeed in making him drink. What more can we do?

THE democratic national convention met in Chicago Tuesday to nominate candidates for president and vice president. Cleveland was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 616 votes. The probabilities are that the ticket will be Cleveland and Gray.

THE ST. PAUL Globe has discovered an important argument to prove that President Harrison should not be re-elected, "because he was nominated on Friday."

Why the Chinese Should Go.

The Stillwater Prison Mirror:—Of all the curses our too free emigration laws have brought upon us, that of the Chinese is the worst. Some say the recent law excluding them is unjust and savors of Kearny and the "sand lot" mobs of San Francisco. Such as these have only seen "John" in his very innocent guise of "washee" in some of our eastern cities. But even in that occupation he is merely a blood sucker on commerce, he brings nothing to the country and he spends nothing to speak of here. All he acquires he carefully hoards until that time when he may return to his native country and live in luxury on his American wealth.

To any one who has been through Chinatown in San Francisco or any of the larger Pacific coast cities, the words of Senator Blair (at which the Chinese government took such offense) seem only too mild. He says:

> "From the moment I saw that seething, roaring, blood curdling curse, Chinatown, I felt as though there had been planted in the vitals of American civilization the seeds of death, unless the upas plant coulp be rooted up and extirpated. . . . . The enactment of this bill [The Chinese Exclusion Act of 1888] into a law will not reach the evil largely under which they are laboring on the Pacific coast. It leaves it there in all its intensity in which it now exists, leaves these communicable diseases spreading everywhere already, and which will continue to spread and devastate the population and finally, undoubtedly, reach populations further east, unless there be possitive and aggressive additional measures taken to extirpate the evil."

The extent to which opium is used through the west and especially on the coast is a terrible thing to contemplate. The "hop fiend" is a most familiar object. In San Francisco they are seen everywhere, the highest as well as the lowest using the dru —even the messenger boys who a sent to purchase it from the Chine store. One San Francisco pap stated not long ago that even th children in the schools have been d tected with it in their possession. is the soruce of the larger per cent. crime on the coast because one onc addicted to its use—who "has th habit"—suffers the agony of Hade when deprived of it, and will therefore commit any crime that will replenish his stock of the drug. The Chinaman himself is primarily a thief and always a gambler, and their women are only brought to this country for purposes of prostitution. On any street in Chinatown, day and night, can be heard the touts for the gambling, and other houses call in their impossible-to-be-understood jargon, "the game is open." Not only do they corrupt through opium, crime and disease, but they corrupt everyone they come in contact with in other ways, from the policeman to the high government official. The roundsman cannot see their gambling dens. It is nearly impossible to convict them in a court of law, and by some unexplained process they manage to get into this country in larger numbers than ever.

Is it any wonder that the laboring man of the Pacific coast crys out against these parties, when they take his bread and corrupt his courts until the law ceases to protect him, while his family is exposed to the vilest diseases and the insidious poppy juice gets in its deadly work?

CONFRERE.

What Are Sun-Dogs?

The term is applied to that variety of halo in which there is a luminous spot, or the image of the sun, seen beside it. Generally there are two, three or four of these seen at once. They are sometimes called parhelia, or mock-suns. They are only seen when the sky is covered with those highest thread-like forms of clouds known as cirrus or cirro-stratus. These clouds are composed of fine particles of ice, and the phenomena of sun-dogs is due to the refraction of the sunlight passing through the clouds.

The Earth vs. Cannon-Ball.

The highest velocity ever attained by a cannon-ball has been estimated at 1,526 feet per second, which is equal to a mile in 3.2 seconds. The velocity of the earth at the equator, due to its rotation on its axis, is 1,000 miles per second, or a mile every 3.6 seconds. Therefore, it has been calculated th if a cannon-ball were fired due we and could maintain its initial veloci for twenty-four hours it would be the sun in its apparent journey arou the earth.

The Duel as She Is Fought.

Two young men, at Albany, Ga., became incensed at each other and resolved to fight a duel. They met by appointment in a wood near the town, and taking position behind oak trees, about a hundred feet apart, blazed away at each other until they were tired, when they stopped the fusillade and made up their differences and went home. During the fight they put lots of lead in the trees, but the duelists themselves were unhurt.

A PRESIDENTIAL TABLE.

The Electoral Vote of the States—Possible Combinations.

Every politician from Maine to Texas and from Florida to Oregon, and that includes for all practical purposes every American citizen, will soon be engaged in scanning the roll of the states, classifying them as republican, democratic or doubtful, and estimating the chances of election of his party's candidate for the presidency.

In the Electoral College of 1888 there were 401 votes, of which the republicans received 233 and the democrats 168. By the new apportionment the states which were republican in 1888 have 249 votes; the states which were then democratic are entited to 175 votes, and the new states which have been admitted to the Union since the last presidential campaign have 20 votes, making a total of 444 votes in the whole electoral college of 1892. The number necessary to elect is 223.

The new states, with the number of votes to which they are entitled, are as follows:

New States.	Electoral Votes.	New States.	Electoral Votes.
Idaho	3	Washington	4
Montana	3	Wyoming	3
North Dakota	3
South Dakota	4	Total	20

In the three following groups are given the states which are conceded to be surely republican, the states which are surely democratic, and the doubtful states, with the electoral vote of each in 1892:

SURE REPUBLICAN STATES—ELECTORAL VOTE.

California	9	Ohio	23
Colorado	4	Oregon	4
Idaho	3	Pennsylvania	32
Illinois	24	Rhode Island	4
Kansas	10	South Dakota	4
Maine	6	Vermont	4
Minnesota	9	Washington	4
Nebraska	8	Wyoming	3
Nevada	3
North Dakota	3	Total	157

SURE DEMOCRATIC STATES—ELECTORAL VOTE.

Alabama	11	Missouri	17
Arkansas	8	North Carolina	11
Delaware	3	South Carolina	9
Florida	4	Tennessee	12
Georgia	13	Texas	15
Kentucky	13	Virginia	12
Louisiana	8
Maryland	8	Total	153
Mississippi	9

DOUBTFUL STATES AND THEIR ELECTORAL VOTE.

Connecticut	6	New Jersey	10
Indiana	15	New York	36
Iowa	13	West Virginia	6
Massachusetts	15	Wisconsin	12
Michigan	14
Montana	3	Total	134
w Hampshire	4

hole number of electoral votes........444
cessary to elect........223

This, as will be seen at a glance, gives the republicans only 157 votes that they can count on, and they will have to get 66 votes from the doubtful states to elect their candidate. West Virginia, though considered debatable ground, is generally carried by the democrats.

New Jersey is usually to be counted in the democratic column. The democrats carried Indiana by about 20,000 majority in 1890, although the state was republican in 1888. New York, Massachusetts and Iowa have each been carried twice by the democrats since 1888.

The new states which are considered surely republican are Idaho, 3; North Dakota, 3; South Dakota, 4; Washington, 4; Wyoming, 3; a total of 17.

Besides the closer vote in Iowa, Wisconsin, Massachusetts and Indiana, the republicans have to contend against the new law in Michigan, by which the presidential electors are to be chosen by congressional districts instead of by the state at large. Unless this law is declared unconstitutional by the supreme court the republicans will lose six or seven of Michigan's fourteen votes, even though republicans carry the state by 30,000 majority, as in the past. The change in the law was made by a democratic legislature, and the districts were altered at the same time to make as many districts as possible democratic.

Crediting the republicans with 8 votes in Michigan and 157 in the states indicated in the table as "surely republican," making 165, there will still be lacking 58 votes of a majority. These 58 votes may be obtained from Indiana, 15; Iowa, 13; Massachusetts, 15; New Hampshire, 4, and Wisconsin 12—total 59, and the Republicans would win without New York, Connecticut, New Jersey or Montana.

There are one or two other possible combinations by which the Republicans might win without New York, but in these, as in all other combinations looking to Republican success, it will be necessary to regain at least three of the five states which have been carried by the Democrats since the last Presidential election.

Here is the rub. To select the man most likely to win back again these sister states which have strayed from the fold since 1888, is the task set before the Minneapolis convention.

THE JOURNAL is in receipt of copies of the Great Falls News, published by O. M. Holmes, formerly of the Gazette at Red Lake Falls. O. M. knows how to get up a good paper when he has the backing of the people, and the advertising columns of the News indicate that he has that in a marked degree. The JOURNAL congratulates Mr. Holmes upon the fine appearances of his new paper and wishes him unlimited success.

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

The Growth of American Law.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE, ESQ.

To obtain an adequate idea of the law of any country, one must travel to its sources and follow its growth from its very beginning. Let us pursue this method in a few studies on the growth of our law. In the first place the seeds of American jurisprudence were transplanted from the old world. The navigators, explorers, missionaries, reformers, gold seekers of the very earliest days, brought to our shores along with their intense desire for conquest, for individual gain, for the glory of their sovereigns, and for religious freedom, the customs and laws of the homes they left and adopted them in the new world so far as they were fitted to their circumstances and their environment. The English brought with them the priceless heritage of the common law of England, and the French and Spanish brought the principles and codes built upon the foundation of the civil law—the law of Rome.

Of the early explorers succeeding Columbus, there was Juan Ponce de Leon, who landed in 1513, near St. Augustine, in Florida, in search of the Fountaine of Youth; in 1520, Spanish ships touched the coast of Carolina; in 1521, the territory now known as Texas, New Mexico and California, became a part of a great province attached to Spain by the conquest of her great explorer, Cortez. De Soto, another Spaniard, led a party from Florida across the country to the Mississippi in 1542. In 1584-5, Sir Walter Raleigh sent two expeditions to North Carolina. A Spanish settlement was made at St. Augustine, 1565. Jamestown, Virginia, became the first English settlement in 1607. New York (New Netherlands), in 1613, was settled by the Dutch, and Plymouth, Massachusetts, by the English in 1620. La Salle explored the great lakes and the Mississippi in 1682, the French establishing settlements at Kaskaskia and Arkansas Post in 1685, and Mobile and Vincennes in 1702. Thus England, Spain and France divided among themselves the great continent of North America. Spain got the Southern, England the Central, and France the Northern portion.

The discoveries thus made vested the new lands in the sovereign. His title was that by discovery grounded upon the three following ideas: The Christian nation that discovers a heathen land owns it to the exclusion of all other Christian nations. This nation to complete its title must within a reasonable time, occupy and use this land. The native inhabitants are only the occupants of the land and not its owners.

For over one hundred years from the discovery by Columbus no settlement deserving of more than passing mention was made in the new world by the English. Many and feeble attempts were made, fearful hardships endured, heroic efforts put forth, but in vain. Raleigh's and Drake's efforts were unsuccessful. The Spanish settlements were more successful, and for a clear reason. Spain looked upon her explorations as means toward extending her dominion. She looked forward to another great Roman Empire. Her explorations were, in a sense, official, and once a post was planted, high officers of State with large salaries were annexed to it, thus drawing patronage, wealth and population. It was otherwise with the English. In nearly every case colonization and exploration was private enterprise; if unsuccessful drawing in its wake individual suffering and loss, but if successful, resulting in little indeed to the individual but everything to the crown. Left thus to their own resources, English colonies in America had a precarious existence for the first one hundred and fifty to two hundred years, leading one writer to say of the British colonists as late as the end of the seventeenth century, "they were robbers and pirates on a large scale."

The editorial department entitled "The Progress of the World," in the Review of Reviews, is particularly full and discursive in the June number. It discusses presidential possibilities, national expenditures, river and harbor improvements, various points touching our foreign relations, gives considerable space to the negro, Chinese and Indian questions, devotes several pages to a review of recent anarchistic outbreaks, and sums up a number of foreign happenings. The breadth and variety of this department may be inferred from the portraits which are inserted in it, and which include Senator Carlisle, Governor Boise and Colonel Gatch, of Iowa; Mr. Holman and Mr. Burrows, of our House of Representatives; Sir George Baden-Powell, the English Behring Sea Commissioner; Ravachol, the anarchist; Archbishop Vaughan, who is Cardinal Manning's successor; Archbishop Ireland, apropos of his mission to Rome; Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and his son, Austin Chamberlain, who is just entering the House of Commons; King Leopold of Belgium; Tricoupis, the great statesman of Greece; Colonel Kitchener, of the English army in Egypt; Dr. Edward Everett Hale; Dr. Charles Kendall Adams, the retiring president of Cornell University, and Professor Schurman, his successor. The "Progress of the World" is followed directly by the more formal and abbreviated "Record of Current Events," in which one finds as illustrations most excellent portraits of Professor Froude, who has been appointed Mr. Freeman's successor as professor of history at Oxford; an expressive wood engraving of Deeming, the phenomenal criminal, and portraits of these well-known gentlemen who have lately died: Senator Barbour, of Virginia; Mr. Roswell Smith, of the Century Magazine, and the Rev. Dr. Allon, of London. There is also an interesting full-page picture of Queen Victoria out driving at Hyeres, in the south of France.

ONE CHINESE POWER.

The Celestials Upon Their Native Tea Gardens Can Sleep Always.

In the item of sleep the Chinese establishes a difference between himself and the Occidental. Generally speaking, he is able to sleep anywhere. None of the trifling disturbances which drive us to despair annoy him. With a brick for a pillow, he can lie down on his bed of stalks or mud bricks or rattan and sleep the sleep of the just, with no reference to the rest of creation.

He does not want his room darkened, nor does he require others to be still. The "infant crying in the night" may continue to cry for all he cares, for it does not disturb him. In some regions the entire population seem to fall asleep as by common consent, like that of the hibernating bear, during the first two hours of the summer afternoons, and they do this with regularity, no matter where they may be.

At two hours after noon the universe at such seasons is as still as at two hours after midnight. In the case of most working people, at least, and also in that of many others, position in sleep is of no sort of consequence. It would be easy to raise in China an army of 1,000,000 men—nay, 10,000,000—tested by competitive examination as to their capacity to go to sleep across three wheelbarrows, with head downward, like a spider, their mouths wide open and a fly inside.

What a Hunter Dug Out of a Tree.

Frank Pierce of Etna, N. J., is a noted hunter, and when several farmers in his neighborhood complained recently that their poultry yards had been raided by a wild animal he examined the tracks of the robber, and declared, unhesitatingly, that they had all been made by a 'coon. He started out to prove his assertion by capturing or killing the chicken-thief. A little later he returned without any 'coon, dead or alive, but carrying under his arm a very small dog, nearly dead from starvation. The tale he told concerning the finding of the dog was worth several ordinary 'coon stories. He said that he had hunted a big 'coon into a wood, where it disappeared behind a pine tree. The lower part of the tree was hollow, and when he put his ear to an aperture about three feet above the ground he heard something breathing. He cut another hole lower down, and drew out the little dog. The 'coon was not there. The dog, he thinks, chased something into the tree, and could not get out. Evidently it had been there several days.

The "Finger" Prayer-Book.

Thirty-five or forty years ago someone issued the famous "Thumb Bible," so called because it was scarcely larger than the first joint of the thumb. Now Mr. Frowde of Oxford, England, is out with a marvelous little book, which has been dubbed the "Finger Prayer-Book." This tiny volume has 700 pages and is bound in morocco and velvet with brass clasps. It weighs less than three-quarters of an ounce, is only 1 inch in breadth, 3½ inches in length and one-third of an inch in thickness. It is difficult for one to believe that a book of 700 pages could be made thin enough to conveniently go into a common pocket purse, but this is what Mr. Frowde has achieved in his "Finger Prayer-Book." It is a marvel in paper-making, and one of which the author, the paper-maker and the printer are justly proud. A copy of it bound in silver with gold clasps will be exhibited at the world's fair.

IOWA.

Wm. Bain, the abductor, at Independence, secured the necessary $2,500 bail and was released.

William Humphrey, a wealthy prominent farmer near Brush Creek, was found dead in his barn; heart disease.

James Murray, a wealthy farmer living near Lawler, fell from a load of hay, striking on his head, producing concussion of the brain.

The town of Moville, twenty-two miles east of Sioux City, was almost wiped out by fire. Twenty-two business houses and several residences were destroyed. The loss is $90,000 partially insured.

The semi-annual meeting of the Iowa Union Medical Society was held at Cedar Rapids, with a large number of prominent physicians in attendance. Several valuable papers were read.

Contracts were signed for the construction of shops for the Rock Island Railroad Company in the western part of Des Moines. The estimated cost is $125,000 and work will begin at once. Their completion is expected to work some important changes in the divisions in Iowa.

A Mason City special says: Three days of excessive hot weather has brought out the corn in good shape, and there is every reason to hope that the yield will be equal to that of last year. The thermometer for the past three days has registered up in the nineties and farmers are not at all discouraged at the prospects.

NAMES FOR SHIPS.

Forcible and Picturesque Appellatives Applied by Sailors.

The sailors use some striking appellatives to describe vessels according to peculiarities of movement, condition or management, according to American Notes and Queries. A typical domestic animal is referred to in hen-frigate, a vessel on which the captain's wife has a hand in the regulations; and an animal of no less decided characteristics gave the name of donkey-frigates to English men-of-war commanded by officers who had seen little or no service in lower grades—who had come on board "through the cabin windows" and not "over the bows," as it is nautically described. Any one who has seen from a distance a number of small vessels lying close together will recognize the appropriateness of mosquito fleet, the blue-water sailors term for them. Perhaps only those who have experienced the tyranny possible on shipboard can appreciate the name of hell afloat given a vessel notorious for such government. Another ominous term is floating coffin for a vessel that may be apparently seaworthy, but which in fact only awaits an occasion to vindicate its name. In contrast to this, English sealers and whalers are known as lime-juicers because they are required by the British admiralty to carry lime juice as an anti-scorbutic. Again, referring to the health of the soul, what could be better than floating Bethel for an old ship in port used for religious services.

As opposed to cutter and clipper, legitimate class names of vessels, from their cutting and clipping the water, the title of bruisewater is applied to a bluff-bowed vessel, one that bruises or breaks the water; with which compare the French briser, to dash or break as waves or brisants, breaker. This action upon the water recalls the suggested connection between sloop and slip, skute and scud or shoot, and schooner and scoon. Wet vessels that take much water on deck are known as diving bells, from their plunging into the waves instead of riding over them. A vessel that pitches heavily is called a pile-driver—another term that can be appreciated only by those who have felt such pounding, well described in German as stampfreiten; to pitch when riding at anchor. A lighter degree of somewhat the same kind of movement seems to be the source of the legitimate terms skipjack and dandy, applied to light, speedy vessels.

Tea-wagon, formerly applied to the ships of the East India company from their usual cargo, is a colloquial example of the large class of ship names referring to cargo and trade. The wagon idea appears again in wheelbarrows, applied to steamboats having a large stern paddle-wheel, which gives it a general appearance fully justifying the name. In allusion to their characteristic shape the canal-boatman calls his boat a chunker and the sections of it boxes. Under the same idea butter-box was formerly applied in England to a beamy trading vessel. The ship as a box is regularly exemplified by German Buse, Dutch buyse, Spanish bucha and English buss, a kind of fishing-boat.

The transfer of the title of the commander of the fleet to his own vessel is an old custom still in vogue. Milton speaks of

> The tallest pine
> Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
> Of some great admiral.

A DISGUSTED TRAMP.

He Has a Roundabout Experience on a Kite-Shaped Track.

Kite-shaped tracks are all the rage nowadays, and not to be behind the times, the Santa Fe road has built an immense one on this model, taking in the principal towns in San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange counties. Starting at San Bernardino, for example, one may take a train and ride for several hours, never passing through the same town twice, and yet at the end of the trip he will be just where he started from.

A tramp who was not familiar with this unique bit of railroading, and who had been passing some time among the orange groves of the lovely San Bernardino valley, decided it was time to seek fresh fields, so with a party of his friends he went to the Santa Fe station in the city just mentioned, and finding a train there on the point of starting out, he bade his comrades a long farewell, agreed to meet them somewhere in New Mexico within a couple of months, and as the train moved, swung himself in on a brake beam and was soon flying through the country. The train made many halts, but none long enough to allow the impecunious traveler an opportunity to get out and stretch himself. Finally, however, a place of large size was approached, but when the train stopped it was evident a long halt was to be made. The tramp concluded it must be a division headquarters, so he sneaked out from under the car, straightened up and then looked around him to see what sort of a place he had struck anyhow. There was a familiar air to his surroundings, and, looking at the signboard on the station he was paralyzed to see the name "San Berhardino!" He had put in the best part of a day riding on a belt train over a kite-shaped track!"

NEWS reached San Antonio, Texas, that Col. Guadienca Gongalez del Lave and a detachment of Mexican Troops which were sent by President Diaz in pursuit of the bandits who made their recent assault on the Cuila Hacienda, met the desperadoes in the mountains near Orizba a fight ensued which resulted in six of the brigands being killed and twenty-two captured. The captives were taken for trial.

THE Pennsylvania Railroad company has obtained full control of the William Penn Coal company's collieries. This is an immense property, and is owned principally by E. and G. Brooks, the Birdsboro iron manufacturers. It is located at William Penn, two miles west of this place, and has an annual shipment of close to 500,000 tons, employing fully 700 men and boys.

C. M. SCHNEIDER & Co., Omaha, notions and men's furnishings, confessed judgment in favor of the Commercial National Bank for $20,500. The liabilities amount to $52,000. Poor collections is given as the cause.

THE trouble in St. Stanislaus church, Cleveland, which caused a riot and several fights, culminated in the withdrawal by Bishop Horstmann of the right of sacrement to the entire congregation, thus temporarily excommunicating at least 800 members.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

Composition of the College of the President.

The electoral college for the present year is composed of 444 electors, as against 401 at the last presidential election in 1888 an addition of forty-three votes arising from an increase of twenty by the admission of six new states, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota and Wyoming, with three votes each and South Dakota and Washington with four votes each, making a total of twenty, leaving twenty-three for the new apportionment based apon the recent census, Minnesota being among the states having a gain, with nine votes this year against seven four years ago. Two hundred and twenty-three votes are necessary for an election. The votes by the states in 1892 is shown by the table, the vote of 1888 being given for comparison:

The national convention apportionment of delegates is double that of electors, so the conventions at Minneapolis and Chicago will be composed of 888 regular delegates and the same number of alternates, entitling 1,776 party representatives to seats upon the occasion of nomination of president and vice president.

ALLIANCE VS. PEOPLE'S PARTY.

Not Much Chance of a Political Coalition Between These Two Organizations.

St. Paul Dispatch.

Like the nimble sprites which haunted the ruined halls of the fallen Alcaids, that organization known as the state central committee of the Farmers' Alliance of Minnesota continues to make the political future of its would be usurper, the People's party, a decidedly precarious existence.

There are hundreds of the honest yeomanry of Minnesota's fertile fields and prolific prairies who joined the alliance, not as a distinct political organization, but simply as an association, to further the interests of the farming and laboring classes. When it was decided two years ago that the alliance take independent political action this element was against the proposition, but bowed to the will of a majority and supported the candidates nominated. The partial success of the move in the election of 1890 had scarcely begun to be felt, when the organization fell into the hands of a who sought to use the third party as a means to accomplish their own aggrandizement. To carry out their schemes and combinations the Donnelly-Fish element of the alliance throttled the conservative element and held it in a death-like grip until the Cincinnati conference of 1891, when the Minnesota alliance, through its president and executive committee, resolved to become an integral part of the people's party. A committee of this new organization was appointed to organize the state, and very rapid were the conversions reported in the county alliances under the instruction of Donnelly and Fish.

But the conservatives were not converted. They were patient observers of the camp meeting methods of political warfare. They bided the time, not neglecting to keep the of their scalpels in first class order.

Hon. Carrington Phelps is the Roderick Dhu at whose command thousands of the Alliance men who will refuse to sacrifice principle for political help will arise and follow where he leads.

The old Alliance state central committee at the Merchants hotel this afternoon to consider plans for the approaching campaign. An informal meeting was held during the forenoon, when Messrs. J. B. Dukes, of Hennepin; A. L. Gardiner, of Blue Earth, and J. C. Meyers, of Ramsey, representing the labor element, took occasion to protest against the subtreasury plan, which forms part of the substructure of the people's party platform. Gen. J. H. Baker, who fought so vigorously against the adoption of this heresy at the Minneapolis convention in January, is now formally arrayed against the Donnelly faction and is present at todays's meeting.

W. W. Erwin, the great apostle of human rights, also lends his counsel to the Phelps committee, and holding a proxy for Carl Judson, he essayed some wholesome advice. Charles Canning, of Duluth, he of elevator fame; Hon. George W, Sprague, and Albert Warren, of Lake Benton, are also in the city for the purpose of attending the conference. The main question discussed at the executive session this afternoon was Chairman Meighan's reply to Mr. Phelps' request between the alliance and people's party committee. While it is not given out just what the reply contains, it is understood that the people's party committee have held out an olive branch, and are willing to allow the alliance to join with them in the call for a state convention July 13. The call has not been issued. From the temper of the alliance members of the committee, who are in session today, it is safe to predict that they will not accept the invitation, unless certain important concessions are made, chief of which is the renunciation of the subtreasury idea.

RAILROAD WORLD.

Decision in the Case of Eau Claire Against the Milwaukee Road.

The Long Standing and Unjust Differential on Lumber Will Be Removed.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special, June 21.—The interstate commerce commission at Washington has decided in favor of the complainant in the case of the Eau Claire board of trade against the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul et al. The lumber freight rate differentials, which have been the curse of the lumber business in this city for the past eight or nine years, have thus been wiped out. The result will be of vast benefit, not only to the lumbermen, but to the whole community and the whole Chippewa valley, and, incidentally, to the state at large. The lumber industry in this city will eventually be almost double its present proportions.

The defendants in this case were thirteen railroad companies and forty-seven lumber firms. Among the down-river towns which are unfavorably but justly affected by this decision are: Lansing, Dubuque, Clinton, Rock Island, Davenport, Moline and Burlington. They have been prospering for several years at the expense of Eau Claire and at the expense of the commonwealth of Wisconsin. It will not hurt any one of them, however, as much as it

WILL HELP EAU CLAIRE.

The decision will add a profit of about $200,000 a year to the lumber industry in this city. The tendency will now be to manufacture lumber here and at Chippewa Falls which is now being manufactured along the Mississippi and to pile it here for shipments. Fewer logs will be floated past us to the Mississippi and more saw mills will be built here for the advantageous manufacture of lumber close to the points of supply.

This case was conducted on behalf of the Eau Claire board of trade with great ability, skill and vigor by H. H. Hayden. He was assisted by Davis, Kellogg & Severance of St. Paul. The victory is sweeping and complete. Mr. Hayden said to-day:

The great point is that the commission holds positively that Eau Claire must not be deprived of any of her natural advantages for the manufacture and shipment of lumber by such excessive rates as would tend to make the manufacture and shipment of lumber at this place no more profitable than at other places. It was contended on the other side that, because we were so situated that the business was naturally more profitable here, the railroads possessed right to give other towns more favorable That contention is denied by the com- Omaha road is excepted from the order e it does not reach with its lines the competing points named in the complaint (except apolis). We may amend our complaint in a manner as to show that the Omaha e Northwestern are combined as a single nd reach these competing places, and we ave the Omaha included in the order. decision reduces our lumber freight Missouri river points by $12.25 per n the basis of the rates as they were the petition was filed, and reduces ate $10.50 per car on the basis of the nt rates.

HERESY CHARGED.

ial of Prof. Smith, of Lane Seminary, Commenced.

CINCINNATI, June 21.—The presbytery of Cincinnati virtually began to-day the heresy trial of Prof. H. P. Smith, of Lane seminary, by hearing the indictments presented against him by the special committee under Dr. Leonard appointed for the purpose. The report was lengthy and declared that, while the church desires peace, war has been forced upon it by Smith and others, who are seeking to undermine the authority of the Scriptures while holding chairs of theology in the seminaries. The committee says that it has carefully considered all of Prof. Smith's teachings and writing and has in vain endeavored to secure an audience with the professor. It concludes that he is contradicting the Presbyterian faith, has wrong ideas of the ordination vows of the professors of theology that he is causing dissension in the church and that he is false to his vows.

The report produced a profound sensation among the sixty ministers and elders present. Prof. Morris, of Lane seminary, immediately sprang to his feet and gave notice that he should fight the report, especially the ban against the seminary, as it reflects upon the entire faculty of the seminary. It is probable that the entire report of the committee, as made to-day, will be adopted.

During the conflict many many persons were injured and numerous arrests were made. The excitement continues.

BECOMING EXCITING.

Opinions of Norwegian Lutherans Differ on Some Points.

DAWSON, Minn., Special, June 21.—When President Herman called the meeting of the Lutheran conference to order to-day everybody expected to see a lively discussion and a big day's work accomplished. The convention proceeded to elect the following trustees of the united churches: Nels Jacobson, Hon. Ole Nelson, Olaf Hoff. The committee on translation appointed to translate opinions of lawyers on points of law, Prof. G. Lund, N. C. Brun, Rev. A. C. Anderson. A motion to order opinions of Attorneys W. S. Pattee and Seldon Bacon translated as to the legality of transferring Augsburg seminary and St. Olaf's school to the United Norwegian Lutheran church was lost. Prof. Ottesdahl called for the ayes and nays, the first direct test of relative strength of the factions. The motion was again overwhelmingly defeated. The delegates denounced the proceedings as filibustering to delay business. The discussion over school matters waxed warm in the afternoon. The remaining three days will be interesting.

Unable to Agree.

WASHINGTON, June 21.—The conferees on the river and harbor appropriation bill are not making progress towards an agreement. After reaching an amicable understanding relative to nearly all of the important points of disagreement between the two houses the conference failed completely to agree upon the two senate amendments embodying the Lake Washington canal and the Dalles boat railway projects. They reported this disagreement to their respective houses and were instructed to insist upon the disagreement. They have carried out this instruction to the letter and, indeed, so faithfully that the idea of a free conference with the intention to reconcile the differences seems to have cut no figure, for the other side was not willing to surrender a single point. So the prospect of speedy action upon the bill is not particularly encouraging.

Weaver a Favorite.

HURON, S. D., Special, June 21.—A car load of delegates to the Independent state convention at Redfield to-morrow were here to-day. Weaver of Iowa is their choice for president and Loucks of this cito for vice president, provided he will not accept the nomination for governor. Both will be in Redfield to-morrow. Not one of the crowd talked in favor of fusion.

Trainmen Killed.

MONTREAL, June 21.—A local passenger train was ditched near Hillhurst on the Grand Trunk to-day. A washout, caused by a cloud burst, was the cause. The engineer, fireman and Express Messenger Baron were killed. The mail clerk, a passenger named Clement, two section hands and two brakemen were injured.

Murray County Alliance.

SLAYTON, Minn., Special, June 21.—The Murray county Alliance held its annual convention to-day and elected L. Mason president and A. Baker secretary. H. F. Pfeifer was elected to represent the county at the People's party state convention and instructed to vote for Donnelly for governor. Donnelly was present and delivered an address.

Placating Platt.

NEW YORK, June 21.—The Herald says that ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt received his first overture from the Harrison administration yesterday. Secretary Tracy met him at the Manhattan Beach hotel. The conference was a satisfactory one. Just what was asked of Mr. Platt and what was promised to him it will be impossible to say until these things develop during the approaching campaign.

CHICAGO, June 21.—In Judge Hutchinson's court to-day the indictment against ex-Ald. Michaelson, of the Fifteenth ward, charge with conspiracy to bribe, was nolle prossed. It is believed that similar action will be taken in the case of Ald. Bowler. These are the last of the so-called aldermanic boodle cases, of which all have been dismissed.

Oct. 21 a National Holiday.

WASHINGTON, June 21.—In the senate today, on motion of Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota, the house amendment to the senate bill authorizing the president to issue a proclamation making Oct. 21, 1882, a national holiday, commemorative of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, was concurred in. The amendment substituted Oct. 21 for Oct. 12.

Against the Police.

New York Advertiser: The political campaign in Ireland is growing hot, and the shillalah and cobblestone arguments of the factions are leaving deep impressions upon the minds of the voters. It is cheering to observe that when these debates are at their height the appearance of the police is a signal for all hands, of whatever faith, to fall to and demolish "Balfour's bulldogs." There is a unity of purpose, it seems, on the part of the Parnellites and anti-Parnellites, and that is to rid Ireland of the constabulary as a condition precedent to a free discussion of the issues. Negotiations for Reciprocity With Canadians Now Off for All Time.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—In a state paper sent to the senate to-day in answer to a resolution of Feb. 4 last, calling for information relative to reciprocity negotiations with Canada, the president sounds the death knell of the project and plants a mile post in American history by deliberately, in effect, recommending that congress proceed to retaliate upon the dominion for its persistent denial of the rights of American citizens, guaranteed by the treaty of Washington, in connection with the navigation of Canadian canals. The president in his communication says that his answer to the resolution was delayed at the suggestion of the secretary of state until the conference of the 3d instant took place between the secretary and the British minister and Hon. McKenzie Bowell and Hon. George E. Foster. Hon. J. W. Foster also appeared on the behalf of the government of the United States at the request of the secretary of state. The president says:

The result of the conference as to the practicability of arranging a reciprocity treaty with the Dominion of Canada clearly stated in the letter of Mr. Blaine and was anticipated, I think, by him and every thoughtful American who has considered the subject. A reciprocity treaty limited to the exchange of natural products would have been such only in form. The benefits of such a treaty would have inured almost wholly to Canada. Previous experiments on this line had been satisfactory to this government. A treaty that should be reciprocal in fact and of mutual advantage must necessarily have embraced manufactured articles and secured to the United States free or favored introduction of these articles into Canada as against other nations; but it was not believed that the Canadian ministry was ready to propose or assent to such an arrangement.

THE CANADIAN CONCLUSION.

The conclusion of the Canadian commissioners is stated in the report of Mr. Blaine as follows: "In the second place, it seemed to be impossible for the Canadian government, in view of its present political relations and obligations, to extend to American goods a preferential treatment over those of other countries. As Canada was a part of the British empire, they did not consider it competent for the dominion government to enter into any commercial arrangements with the United States from the benefits of which Great Britain and the colonies should be excluded."

It is not for this government to argue against this announcement of the Canadian official opinion. It must be accepted, however, I think, as the statement of a condition which places an insurmountable barrier in the way of the attainment of that large and beneficial intercourse and reciprocal trade between the United States and the dominion. Mr. Blaine reports as one of the official results of the conference, "an informal arrangement to repeal and abandon the drawback of 18 cents a ton given to wheat (grain) that is carried through Montreal and shipped from there to Europe. By the American railways running from Ogdensburg and Oswego and other American ports the shippers paid the full 20 cents a ton, while in effect those by the way of Montreal is only 2 cents. It was understood that the Canadian commissioners, who were all three members of the cabinet, would see to the withdrawal of this discrimination."

From the report of the recent conference by Mr. Foster it will be seen that the Canadian commissioners declare that this statement does not conform to the understanding, and that the only assurance they had intended to give was that the complaint of the government of the United States should be taken into consideration by the Canadian ministry on their return to Ottawa. Mr. Foster, who was present at the first conference, confirms the statement of Mr. Blaine. While this misunderstanding is unfortunate, the is that instead of rescinding the discriminating canal tolls of which this government complains the Canadian ministry, after the return of the commissioners from their visit from Washington on April 4, reissued without any communication with this government the order containing the discrimination by which a rebate of 18 cents a ton is allowed upon grain going to Montreal, but not to American ports, and refusing this rebate even to grain going to Montreal if transshipped at an American port. The report of Mr. Partridge, the solicitor of the department of state, which accompanies the letter of the secretary of state, states these discriminations very clearly. These orders as to canal tolls rebates are in direct violation of article 27 of the treaty of 1871, it seems to be clear. It is wholly evasive to say that there is no discrimination between Canadian and American vessels, that the rebate is allowed to both without favor upon grain carried through to Montreal, or transshipped at Canadian ports to Montreal. The treaty runs:

"To secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence and other canals in the dominion on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the dominion."

It was intended to give to consumers in the United States, to our people engaged in railroad transportation, and to those exporting from our ports equal terms in passing their merchandise through these canals. This absolute equality of the statement was considered for concessions on the part of this government made in the same article of the treaty, and which have been faithfully kept. It is a matter of regret that the Canadian government has not responded promptly to our request for the removal of these discriminating tolls. The papers submitted show how serious the loss inflicted is upon our lake vessels and upon some of our lake ports. In view of the fact that the Canadian commissioners still contest with us the claim that these tolls are discriminating and insist that they constitute no violation of the letter and spirit of article 27 of the treaty, it would seem appropriate that congress, if the view held by the executive is approved, should with deliberation and yet with promptness take such steps as may be necessary to secure the just rights of our citizens. In view of the delays which have already taken place in transmitting this correspondence to congress I have not felt justified in awaiting the further communication from the government of Canada which was suggested in the recent conference. Should any proposition relating to this matter be received, it would immediately be submitted for the consideration of the senate, and forwarded within the time suggested will undoubtedly anticipate any final action of congress.

The president encloses a report from Secretary Blaine and also one from Mr. Foster on the same subject.

A Frightful Fall.

While driving down Third street north, Minneapolis, this morning at 12:30, Levi N. Patterson, the Twelfth street druggist, met with a frightful accident. He drove over the stone abutments at the intersection of Third street and Fourth avenue south. He was precipitated, together with his horse and carriage, to the railroad tracks below. The horse was killed and the carriage smashed, but Mr. Patterson was picked up shortly afterward still breathing. He was taken to his home at 1531 First avenue south, and will probably die.

FOR GOOD, SOLID WORK HORSES and MARES, go to

M. R. BROWN,

The old reliable dealer, who has sold horses in this county since 1878, and who is always on hand to make his guaranty good. Every man who ever sold horses here is ready (when he sells) to guaranty, but later, if you happen to want him to make his guaranty good you can't most always sometimes find him ready to make his recommend good. He handles only good young horses and has sold more than any dealer in the county. He is now prepared to supply the demand for good teams—he handles no other—and guaranty them just as recommended. Before you buy you will do well to call at

Brown's New Stables,

Main Street, one door north of the old M. E. church building.

Alderman Fred Anderson met with an accident last week which compelled him to wear both hands in bandages awhile. In attempting to discipline a broncho his hands were badly lacerated by the rope. Fred says he rather try to manage Morrissey in the council than to break a wild broncho.

E. C Davis is busy at work with a force of men putting in a coffer-dam, preparatory to commencing work on the new building for the Crookston Water Power and Light Co. He has been delayed somewhat in this work; but will probably be able to go ahead now and push the work to completion rapidly.

The dog-catcher is having busy time in these days, and woe unto the luckless canine that falls into his clutches—for unless he can manage to persuade his owner to put up for his appearance at court, verily his name is Dennis, as he straightway departs for the happy hunting grounds, and the place that knew him once knows him no more forever.

Mrs. A. D. Wishard, wife of Prof. Wishard, passed into the mysterious beyond on Wednesday of last week, leaving a husband and a little son to mourn the early death of a loving wife and mother. Mrs. Wishard was a young woman, but a few months over twenty-five years, and had been but a few months a resident of this city. Her death was caused by consumption, which dread disease she contracted about a year since. The remains were taken to Indiana for interment.

F. R. Stevens, of Angus, dropped in on Friday to set his subscription ahead a peg and see our little gasoline engine. Stevens reports a large acreage sown this year and that he will soon go to work to thresh the balance of last year's crop. The threshing machine will have lots of work to do to clean up last year's grain.

S. B. Palmer was up from Lockhart last Wednesday to go to the circus, but got so interested selling gasoline engines that he did not get time to take in the circus. The gasoline engine that he represents is a perfect power; is the leading engine, simple, practical and the coming power for the northwest. In an elevator, for a printing office or in fact for most anything, no more complete power can be had. If you want a cheap, safe practical power, don't fail to see what Palmer can do for you.

The union temperance meeting at the new Methodist Episcopal church was very well attended, every seat below being occupied and many in the lecture room and gallery. Rev. R. H. Battey, of the Congregational church, delivered an eloquent discourse. The central thought was the power of moral suasion in the temperance work, the speaker taking the ground that far more good could be accomplished on that line of action than by any political party. The pulpit, now, to a certain extent, uses the power of moral suasion, and the press, both religious and secular, should do so far more than is done. The speaker aimed to show the worse than folly of the drink habit, and also that temperance was conducive to long life as it certainly is to true happiness and manly independence. We have an idea that more real good could be accomplished in temperance along the line as outlined by the speaker than by all the efforts and expense the third party ever did or can put forth. Unless a man can be convinced of the reasonableness of a proposition or a theory it strikes us as the height of folly to attempt to coerce him into accepting it by any act of legislation. For some good reason the Supreme Being has created man a free moral agent, to a certain extent, and it does not seem to be the divine plan to limit its extent by the laws of man.

A. Boddy was in from Beltrami on Tuesday. Says crops are looking as well as could be expected, and real estate is booming some. He looks for more lively times, later, however.

The railroads will give half fare rates to Crookston during encampment week. Now if they would arrange excursions on the branch lines it would be profitable for them and a great accommodation to their patrons.

The various committees on the encampment are indefatigable in their labors, and soon everything will be in readiness for the event. An attractive program has been arranged, and lots of fun may confidently be expected.

Several of our citizens have had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. Clara Hoffman, who will speak in this city on Saturday evening, and they all speak in very high terms of praise of her eloquence and earnestness. Our citizens should not miss this opportunity to hear her.

No. 20 brought in freight engine 307 on Wednesday morning, and on account of a broken wheel, set it out on a side track, where during the day it attracted much attention, owing to the fact that it is the engine whose boiler exploded in Montana a short time since, killing the fireman and seriously wounding the engineer.

Jake Francis called at the JOURNAL office one evening last week to register a vigorous kick against the location of a cow-yard at his back door by one of his neighbors. We had occasion to be in that neighborhood on Monday evening, and—well, we don't blame Jake for complaining. The board of health should investigate.

Jas. E. O'Brien took a ride Friday evening and in some way or other his horse got away from him and started on a go-as-you please for the barn. To say that Jim was scared wouldn't half convey the actual condition of his feelings, but, to his great relief, when he reached the barn he found the horse quietly awaiting his arrival, as cool as though nothing unusual had happened.

During the exercises on Sabbath evening a young man (?) in the audience relieved his overcharged feelings by ejecting a quart or so of tobacco spittle upon the new carpet. If you must use tobacco in such a place, better carry a cuspidor in your vest pocket and not ruin a good carpet that you, probably, have not contributed a cent toward the purchase of. Even if you did, it is no excuse or ruining it.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman, well and favorably known as a temperance lecturer, will speak in Crookston Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Hoffman is one of the best speakers employed by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and all interested in temperance should be sure to hear her Saturday evening in the Methodist church at 8 o'clock, and Sunday afternoon in the Baptist church at 3 o'clock.

Joseph Sauve was in from his farm on Tuesday to get several miles of slat and wire fencing, which is a very sensible kind of fencing to have on a farm.

At the people's party congressional convention at Moorhead on the 21st inst., H. E. Boen was nominated. Had Polk county had but one aspirant, it is probable that he would have had the nomination.

Will Arnold is closing up the assessment business as rapidly as possible The work of assessing this city is a thankless task, but a very important one, and we venture the assertion that Will has done it as well and thoroughly as it ever was done.

E. K. Overland was up from Garden on Monday visiting with his old friends. E. K. says that while Blaine was his choice for the nomination, he thinks that Harrison has given the people an excellent administration and will do well again.

Services at the M. E. church next Sabbath as follows: In the morning at 10:30 the pastor will preach from the subject "The Power of Silence." In the evening a Children's Service will be held. The program consists of singing, readings, recitations, etc., etc. Everybody welcome.

The greatest attraction of the season will appear at the opera house on Monday evening, July 4th, when the Fierce Columbus Company will open a week's engagment. Tickets will be placed on sale at Tom Morris' store on June 30, when you can secure reserved seats for the week.

Judge Nelson, of Pasadena, California, is visiting old friends in the city this week. The judge is one of the old settlers at Warren, and lived there until a few years since, when he went to California, where he made a large fortune in real estate. He is spending the summer with his son in Warren.

Reports of damage to crops in stack reach the JOURNAL. It is said that in many cases the grain at the bottom of the stacks is utterly ruined, owing to the cold, wet feet the stacks have had. Where the stacks were built on high ground and well built, the grain is said to be all right, though the beating rains and snows have been very trying.

S. B. Palmer was up from Lockhart last Thursday to go to the circus, but got so interested selling gasoline engines that he did not get time to take in the circus. The gasoline engine that he represents is perfect power; is the leading engine, simple, practical and the coming power for the northwest. For an elevator, for a printing office or in fact for most anything no more complete power can be had. If you want a cheap, safe, practical power don't fail to see what Palmer can do for you.

On Thursday last Prof. A. D. Wishard missed his little two-year old boy who had been playing about in the front door-yard of the family residence near the N. P. depot, and thinking he had strayed off over to the tracks he went over to the depot. As no one had seen him in that neighborhood he went up to the circus grounds with the impression that the boy had wandered off up there. Upon arrival he was met by a rather rough-looking individual who inquired of the professor if he had lost anything. Mr. Wishard informed the man of the loss of the boy, and the man said he thought he could find him if there was anything in it for him. Mr. W. said that he would willingly pay a good sum for the safe return of the boy, whereupon the man started for the circus tents and Mr. W. went and acquainted Chief Gonyea, and also told him about the man he had met. The chief went with Mr. W. and they soon met the man returning with the boy and vociferously insisting that he had not stolen the lad even before he had been accused of it. The chief was so well convinced that the man had stolen the lad that he put him under arrest and he was held for trial. As nothing could be proved at the trial the man was released.

An Educated Hog.

The Ringling Bros. have succeeded in introducing a genuine novelty into their circus performances in the form of an educated hog. We have seen hogs trained to play cards, to tell the time of day and various things like that which are done in a perfunctory manner and do not require intelligence or education. Now the things that this educated hog could do were not so many nor wonderful as the things that by reason of his education he could not do. What he did do was to stand on his nose and think, at the same time keeping his weather eye peeled on his companion so as not to lose the combination and destroy the bond of sympathy that seemed so perfect between the pair. He marched about the platform obedient to command, climbed a double step ladder and waltzed about in great shape. What he could not do, by reason of his superior intelligence to the average hog, was to stand on sidewalks in a group and stare ladies out of countenance as they vainly try to pass the gang without being obliged to step off the walk into the mud; or go to a temperance meeting on a Sabbath evening, sit on the back seat and spit tobacco juice all over the elegant new carpet (this hog did not chew tobacco). He could not occupy a whole section in a crowded railroad coach with his feet and his other baggage, while some less fortunate fellow being is obliged to stand in the aisle or roost upon the wood box; he could not occupy the best seat in the park or any other like public place and enjoy a pleasant (?) hour or two swapping shady stories with his fellow hog; he could not go to the opera or other public meeting and disturb the whole meeting in the endeavor to bring his only talents into public notice, nor could he take a paper from the post-office for several years then fire it back upon the publisher without paying for it. Another pleasant feature about this hog was his perfect cleanliness. While he did not seem to expend a fortune in dress his suit seemed to be a perfect fit very neat and admirably adapted to his business. As we observed this specimen of a very much abused race we were impressed with the capacity for improvement in the genus hog as never before.

TOWN TALK.

P. S. Ware: While up at Thief River Falls last Friday I held the plow that turned the first furrow on the railroad grade between St. Hilaire and Thief River. The road will soon be built and I am glad of it.

G. J. McManus: Say, I've had more enquirers for insurance since I commenced advertising in the JOURNAL than ever before. It's the first time I ever traced any benefit directly to an advertisement.

G. J. McManus: I'd like to express through the JOURNAL my appreciation of the kind treatment accorded several Crookstonites, among whom was myself, by the Union League club of Minneapolis during the convention. We were royally entertained, and the boys all feel grateful for it.

M. E. Kirsch: If I lived in a manufacturing state I should be a rabid protectionist, a republican. But for Minnesota, a purely agricultural state, I do not believe in it.

[What's the matter with making Minnesota a manufacturing state, Mike? The nearer a farmer can get manufacturing interests to his own door, the more he can realize for his crops, don't it? ED. JOURNAL].

A. C. Wilkinson: If I thought the Chicago convention would not make a worse blunder than you fellows did at Minneapolis, I should feel easier in my mind—but then they will do it, they are morally sure to do so.

John Amundson: We had nine transfers of real estate filed for record on Monday, which is about an average day's work, though on the 30th day of May there were 28 instruments filed. Real estate transfers, as a rule, are not as numerous at this season of the year and this state of things indicates a healthy condition of the real estate market.

Chas. Bailey: Yes, we have started up again at the great mill and are running full time. The quality of the logs so far received could not be beaten. I expect we shall beat all former records this season in the extent of the cut and the quality of the lumber turned out, and we shall probably have a long season. Everything was put in first-class condition for a long run.

DON'T READ THIS!

This is only of interest to farmers and others who have growing grain this season. Everything indicates that during the present summer there will be constant rain and thunder storms. Any person who has observed the different seasons in this or any other state knows that during a rainy summer hail storms are of frequent occurrence. Much damage is done to growing grain every year by hail. No locality is entirely exempt from this disastrous element. You may escape for a year or two, but you are sure to have a hail storm sooner or later.

The only way to protect yourself from loss by hail is to insure your crop. But the rates are so high with most of the hail companies doing business in this state that the farmers cannot afford to insure their crops. The only way to get cheap and reliable hail insurance is through a mutual concern—a company which covers the entire state and is not confined to one county. The risks must be distributed over a large area, so that if one county should be hailed there will still be plenty of uninjured grain to pay the losses.

The Minnesota Hail Association of Crookston covers the entire state. It is a mutual concern, with but few officers and each one working on a commission. This company can give you cheap and safe protection.

For further particulars see by-laws or talk with any of the company's agents. It will pay you to investigate this matter.

General Kelton Retired.

WASHINGTON, June 23. — Adjutant General John C. Kelton, U. S. A., has been placed on the retired list of the army, having reached the age of 64 years. General Kelton entered the service as a cadet July 1, 1847, making nearly forty-five years service in the army. There are about six assistant adjutant generals all anxious to become successor of General Kelton, but no selection has yet been made.

Force of Lightning.

Lightning has been proved in one instance to have struck a church with a force equal to 12,220 horse power. A single horse power, in mechanical calculations, is equivalent to raising a weight of 33,000 pounds one foot high in a minute. The force of lightning, therefore, has been proved to be equal to the raising of 403,260,000 pounds one foot high in a minute. This is about equal to the united power of twelve steamships, having collectively twenty-four engines of 500 horse power each. The velocity of lightning is so great that it would travel round the world eight times in a minute.

Struggle for Existence in Germany.

Nowhere in Europe is the struggle for existence fiercer at the present moment than in Germany. The nation is growing at the rate of 13 per cent per annum—practically at about the same rate as the British. Allowing for deaths, there is an addition to the population of 600,000 yearly, which, deducting 200,000 who emigrate, leaves an increase of 400,000, for whom room must be made and food provided.

City-Bred Girls.

Two young city-bred women, daughters of a prominent wholesale merchant in San Francisco named Lowenstein, are living on and working at a land claim in the state of Washington, between Hadlock and Port Ludlow. They took up the claim two years ago and have lived on it continuously since, built the cabin in which they live, and have cleared and grubbed twenty acres of land. Their nearest neighbor is four miles away.

CHANGE OF OWNERSHIP.

A Line of Dakota Elevators Purchased by Minnesota Parties.

WINONA, Minn., June 23.—An important business transaction was consummated when the Winona Mill company purchased of Dyer, Ingham & Co., of Dover, a two-thirds interest in the line of elevators operated by them in South Dakota. Those elevators are situated at the following points in South Dakota: Balaton, Aurora, Bruce, Estelline, Arlington, Hetland, Cavour, Manchester, Esmond, Ree Heights, Highmore, Bremhall, Mansfield, Doland, Verston, Conde, Ferny, Turton, Groton, Blunt. A flouring mill with a capacity of 100 barrels a day at Arlington is included as well as a steam clearing elevator with a storage capacity of 100,000 bushels at Aurora. The total storage capacity of the elevators is 500,000 bushels. The firm of Dyer, Ingham & Co., which has had its offices at Dover, will be dissolved and the business transacted there will be transferred to Winona.

Caused by Ill Health.

Gillmore, shot himself in the head during the morning, at his home here, and was dead before medical aid could be procured. Mr. Gillmore was partially paralyzed, and had been unable to do business for a number of years. He formerly was in business in Boston, Mass., but was compelled to give up on account of ill health.

Want Ruffer for Agent.

WHITE EARTH, Minn., June 25.—The Indians here are pleased with the probable oppointment of Charles A. Ruffer as Indian agent to succeed B. P. Shuler. Major Ruffer is well known to all of them, by whom he is held in high esteem for the very successful and progressive manner in which he conducted the affairs of the agency when he had charge here some twelve years ago.

CHEATING POOR LO.

Congressman Pickler Denounces Many Indian Depredation Claims as Infamous.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—Congressman Pickler said in an interview: "I have recently held several lengthy conferences with the commissioner of Indian affairs in regard to claims being filed and judgments rendered in the court of claims against Sioux Indians. I find that a large number of Indian depredation claims are being filed upon affidavits without any notice to Indians, and judgments being rendered in many of them, which must first be paid out of annuities of Indians, if they have any money coming to the tribe, otherwise out of the United States treasury—I find that the claims allowed and filed under the late act of congress amount to about $1,000,000. I insist with the commissioner that the Sioux Indians in my state have an attorney appointed at once to appear for them and combat these claims. Major Pickler has no objection to proper depredation claims being paid, but thinks this is one of the greatest wholesale attempts to take the Indians' money without value received of which he ever heard. He is determined that the Sioux in his state shall not be deprived of their rights if he can prevent it. As a result of his statements the commissioner promised to appoint some one at once to take care of Indian interests.

A BLOODY BATTLE.

Revolutionists Attack Brazilian Soldiers. A Thousand Dead.

NEW YORK, June 26.—The Herald correspondent at Rio Janeiro says that Colonel Silva Barbosa has reported to the war office that the revolutionists have attacked the federals. After a bloody battle in which upward of a thousand men were killed, they retired but left the result undecided. At Cuyaba, he says, all sorts of outrages were perpetrated. Senhor Seraedello succeeds Minister Ramires at Cuyaba.

Prominent Business Man Suicides.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 27.—Dr. A. B. Rose, aged 80, one of the most prominent business men of this city, committed suicide by blowing out his brains. The deceased was president of the phosphate miners' exchange. No cause is assigned for the deed.

Palacio at Martinique.

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad, June 23.—Dr. Andusa Palacio, ex-dictator of Venezuela, an exile from his native land, has arrived at Martinique on his way to Europe.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—No business of any importance has been transacted in either house of congress this week, no quorum being present in either house most of the time. The senate has adjourned till Monday.

Friday.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—The house was in session fifteen minutes, the question of "no quorum" being raised by one of the Alliance members.

Saturday.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The house held the shortest session on record, lasting less than three minutes. The question of "no quorum" was raised before the reading of the journal and adjournment taken till Monday.

Monday.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—A sufficient number of Democratic congressmen had returned from Chicago to constitute a quorum, a call of the house showing 178 members present. Mr. Sayres, of Texas, called up the general deficiency bill and moved its passage. Mr. Watson, of Georgia, demanded the yeas and nays. The bill was then passed. Yeas, 185; nays, 4. The conference report on the military acadamy bill was disagreed to and a new conference ordered.

In the senate a communication from the interior department setting fourth that the Indian depredation claims already filed amouuted to over $25,000,000, and asking instructions was read and ordered to be printed and referred. Mr. Hale introduced a resolution praising the working of the McKinley bill and directing the committee on finance to inquire into the effect of a policy of "tariff for revenue only" upon the labor and industries of the United States, and to report upon the same to the senate. The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was taken up.

Philadelphia Pretzels.

Philadelphia pretzels are a thing by themselves; that is, the genuine Philadelphia pretzel is, but unscrupulous manufacturers have been making imitations with machinery which have served to lessen the high standard raised by the reputation of the homemade pretzel. The pretzel came over with the Dutch, and it is still found in its original purity in Lancaster and Berks counties, the inhabitants of which have been so many generations in this country that they are unable to speak their mother tongue. They have not been here long enough to learn English, so they make their pretzels as they were taught, and talk the language which they have manufactured.

TRAFFIC IMPEDED.

RESULTS OF RECENT RAINS IN WISCONSIN, IOWA AND ILLINOIS.

Landslides and Washouts Demoralize Chicago-St. Paul Roads—Considerable Damage Done to Property by a Flood at Decorah, Iowa.

ST. PAUL, June 24.—The flood gates of heaven have been opened over Wisconsin, Iowa and Illinois during the past few days, with the result that all railway service is nearly demoralized. President Egan, of the Kansas City, telegraphed from Chicago that it was practically impossible to get out of that city. Of the lines running into St. Paul the Omaha seems to be the only one which has not suffered severely. After strenuous exertions the Milwaukee succeeded in raising the blockade on its line so as to get the Chicago trains through twelve hours late. The Burlington has suffered from washouts, while the Kansas City has been peculiarly afflicted. Communication with Chicago over this system has been temporarily suspended owing to two landslides, one on either side of Dubuque. These slides are no small affairs. In one case it was jocosely remarked that nearly a whole farm came down the track. The rains are said to be altogether unprecedented, and the damage which they have caused to the railway systems of the country is immense. Fortunately the interruption to traffic in this region has been limited to the St. Paul-Chicago roads and has not extended to the systems to the west and the north.

A DYKE GIVES WAY.

Three Suburbs of the Big City of Chicago Now Lie Under Water.

CHICAGO, June 26.—What is known as the Eighty-seventh street dyke, separating the towns of Dauphin Park and Grand Crossing, gave way Sunday afternoon, having been cut, it is presumed, by some one. The breaking of the dyke let the flood with all its force in upon the suburban village of Dauphin Park, submerging every yard to the average depth of about twent-four inches. In many places the water was much deeper and the first floor of nearly every house is under water. Basements everywhere were filled and the damage not only to streets and sidewalks but to the foundations of houses and all household effects that were not early removed will amount to thousands of dollars. There was a heavy rain fell during the afternoon and at 8 o'clock the water was rising at the rate of an inch an hour. The only outlet for this great mass of water that is drowning out the homes of the 300 residents is through ditches and culverts to the lake, which are wholly inadequate. The water comes from a large submerged territory in the region of Mud Lake. The Chicago authorities have been asked for aid.

At midnight the water was from two and a half to three feet high in the principal streets of Grand Crossing and Dauphin Park and is flowing with a strong current. A high wind is lashing the waters against the buildings in great waves and an enormous amount of damage is being done. The situation is critical, as it is feared that some of the less substantial structures will be torn from their foundations, imperiling the lives of the inmates. The flood has spread to the suburb Burnside and the entire village will be submerged to a depth of one foot by morning.

INVADED HOMES.

Water Drives Two Thousand Families Out at Ravenswood, Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 26.—Two thousand homes in Ravenswood and Gross Park were suddenly invaded by water during the night, and the territory bounded by Roscoe boulevard, Addison street, Western avenue and the Chicago river, was converted into a vast lake within two hours. Many persons were forced to abandon their homes and seek shelter for the night with the more fortunate ones beyond the reach of the deluge.

Highest Point Ever Reached.

DAVENPORT, Ia., June 26.—The Mississippi river here is 19.1 feet above low water mark, the highest point ever reached. In Davenport many factories have been compelled to shut down. Many dwelling houses are flooded and the damage is very extensive. The South Rock Island embankment still holds but water is pouring over it and hundreds of homes will be flooded if a break occures. The town of Milan, Ills., is flooded. Hundreds of cattle and horses have been drowned in the Rock River valley.

Twenty-Eight Miles Wide.

BURLINGTON, Ia., June 26.—The Mississippi at this point is nearly twenty-eight miles wide and boats can run to Gladstone, twelve miles inland. Many buildings are submerged in the lower part of town. The St. Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern railroad and the Carthage branch of the Burlington railroad are in danger of being washed out at several points.

Senor Matta Dead.

NEW YORK, June 26.—A special cable dispatch to the Herald from its Valparaiso correspondent, announces the death of Senor Don Manuel Antonio Matta, who succumbed to a stroke of apoplexy while in his coach on his way home on Thursday. President Montt has decreed him a public funeral with full honors. Senor Matta was minister of foregn affairs at the time of the Baltimore imbroglio, and to his intemperate language was largely due the constrained relations between Chili and the United States. He was very popular with the radicals, and in the election following the revolution he was elected to the senate.

CAMPBELL WILL DIRECT.

Unanimously Elected Chairman of the Republican National Committee.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The Republican national committee after two sessions elected the following:

Chairman, W. H Campbell, of Illinois; vice chairman, M. H. De Young, of California; Secretary, Thomas H. Carter, of Montana; treasurer, Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York; sergeant at arms, Colonel L. H. Swords.

Mr. Fessenden succeeded in introducing the following and having it adopted;

Resolved, That in accordance with the rule adopted by the Republican national convention an executive committee of nine composed of members of this committee or of others not members thereof shall have the conducting of the management of the campaign of 1892 and that the chairman of this committee after conference with the candidates shall select the members of such executive committee and its officers.

Resolved further, That the chairman, vice chairman, secretary and treasurer of this committee shall be ex-officio members of such executive committee.

Resolutions on the retirement of Mr. Clarkson were presented by Mr. Payne. They were highly eulogistic of the ex-chairman and were adopted by a rising vote.

William J. Campbell.

William J. Campbell, the new chairman of the Republican national committee, is a native of Philadelphia. His family came to Chicago when he was quite young. Mr. Campbell's home has always been in this city. He attended the Northwestern university at Evanston and also the University of Pennsylvania, but owing to ill health did not continue in that university beyond the junior year. Entering the office of the firm of Goudy & Chandler, he studied law with that firm. In 1879 he formed a law partnership with Jacob R. Curtis under the firm name of Campbell & Curtis, which firm still exists. Mr. Campbell has always taken an active interest in politics, but has held but one political position—that of senator. He was elected in 1878 and served eight years. January 5, 1881, he was elected president of the state senate and in 1883 was again elected. Mr. Campbell's residence is in the suburb of Riverside, and he is president of the board of village trustees. He is a man in the prime of life, of large proportions, well known about town and of the class of politicians who are undemonstrative but alert.

GRESHAM DON'T WANT IT.

He Will Not Consent to the Use of His Name at the Omaha Convention.

FRENCH LICK SPRINGS, Ind., June 26.—Judge Walter Q. Gresham will not be the standard bearer of the People's party in the coming campaign all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The judge and Mrs. Gresham are enjoying a few days' outing at the springs. In an interview the persistent use of his name as a possible presidential candidate in connection with the third party movement was called to his attention. He said:

"I have not permitted and shall not permit the use of my name at the Omaha convention. Without declining an honor that has not been offered me, I will say that my name will not go before that convention with my consent. I have not, as reported, informed any leaders of the third party that if selected as its standard bearer I would not decline the honor."

M'GRATH WITHDRAWS.

The Ex-President of the Kansas Farmers' Alliance Leaves the People's Party.

TOPEKA, June 26.—At a caucus here a letter was read from Frank McGrath, ex-president of the Kansas Alliance, in which he announces his withdrawal from the People party. McGrath was recently defeated for re-election to the presidency of the Alliance by W. H. Biddle, People's party candidate for state treasurer. He charges that the People's party is under the control of political tricksters and that the farmers are without influence in its councils. Democrats and People's party men claim that the letter will not affect the situation in Kansas, but the Republicans declare that McGrath's action will bring back to their party its old-time majority.

Nominated a Silver Ticket.

RENO, Nev., June 25.—A state silver convention has been held and three presidential electors nominated. During the session George W. Cassidy, an ex-congressman and Democratic nominee for congress, fell dead at the close of a speech.

Warned Against a Swindler.

LONDON, June 27.—Minister Lincoln has issued a notice warning Americans against a swindler known as William Lord Morre, who advertises for American claimants for mythical fortunes said to be in the bank of England.

Cholera Reaches Russia.

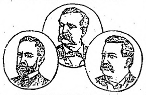
LONDON, June 27.—A dispatch to The Times from St. Petersburg says: The cholera has reached Tiflis. In their panic the Russian trans-Caspian censors are suppressing cholera telegrams to newspapers.

ALGEBRAIC POLITICS.

THE THIRD PARTY IS AN UNKNOWN QUANTITY.

Men Who Will Figure Prominently at the Omaha Convention—An Imposing Array of Candidates for the Presidential Nomination.

Algebraically stated, the People's party, which is to convene by its delegates at Omaha on July 4, is X—the leading unknown quantity. Perhaps it would be more exact to represent it as X Y Z under a radical sign, for it is a combination of several unknown quantities, with a surprisingly "advanced" platform and an array of speakers who have long figured among the most radical agitators of the country. Among these are such men as Ignatius Donnelly, Jesse Harper, C. C. Post, N. M. Barnett, Robert Schilling and many others.



PENNOYER—WEAVER—CLOVER.

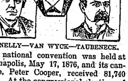
A very prominent man before the convention, if not active in it, will be Governor Sylvester Pennoyer, of Oregon, who was re-elected in 1890 by a majority of 10,000, though the state is Republican. He is spoken of as the new party's candidate for president, for though elected governor as a Democrat, he is now in full sympathy with the third party men. Still another active spirit will be ex-Senator Charles Henry Van Wyck, of Nebraska. His career has been singularly picturesque. Born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1824, he entered congress in 1859 and left it for the army. He came out a brevet brigadier, was again elected to congress, removed to Nebraska in 1874 and became United States senator in 1881. He made a fierce onslaught on the railroads, was denied a re-election in consequence and, as a further consequence, has no love for big corporations.

Numerically, however, these will be swallowed up by an army of new, or comparatively new recruits, such as Senators Kyle, of South Dakota, and Peffer, of Kansas; Congressmen Winn and Watson, of Georgia; Jerry Simpson, B. H. Clover, John Davis and William Baker, of Kansas; Kittel Halverson, of Minnesota, and William Arthur McKeighan, of the second Nebraska district, whose phenomenal majority in 1890 astonished the country and convinced the old politicians that the people had "taken the bit in their teeth." And now the all absorbing question is, Was the vote of 1890 a mere "spurt," or, as our English friends say, a "beastly fluke," or did it indicate a permanent strength?

It is a common and a cheap and easy explanation to say the People's party is "the successor of the old Greenback party," but this is only a part of the truth. The greenback has evidently come to stay, and the national banks, as Senator Sherman recently pointed out, must soon be wound up by the payment of the bonds, but the whole field of capital and labor, the concentration of wealth and increase of poverty, and especially the great puzzle known as the "depression of agriculture," lies open to the new party. The alternating movements of new parties since the war present a curious study, each leaving something to the next.

In all the seventy-two years of the nation's existence before the war there were not as many strikes and labor riots as in two months of the single year of 1877, and though many labor organizations were formed, there was no general political party based on them. It is questioned also if there were in the United States in 1860 a score of millionaires; now there are 1,100 in New York city alone, and believed to be 5,000 in the nation. New parties were therefore inevitable as soon as the war issues were settled, and the first to affect local elections was probably the Eight Hour league. In 1866 this and kindred organizations grew into a party, and on Aug. 20 the first national labor congress met in Baltimore.

In 1870 the Labor party affected elections considerably in many places, and soon after the famous Grangers rose rapidly to great importance. The panic of 1873 resulted in a tremendous political revolution—the change of votes between 1872 and 1874 amounted to nearly 1,100,000—and soon after the raging elements of discontent found expression in the Greenback party. Its first distinctively national convention was held at Indianapolis, May 17, 1876, and its candidate, Peter Cooper, received 81,740 votes. At the congressional elections of 1878 the party cast nearly 1,000,000 votes, and in 1880, despite the fact that specie payments had been established for nearly two years, General James B. Weaver, Greenbacker, received 306,867 votes for president.



DONNELLY—VAN WYCK—TAUBENECK.

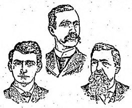
It is important to note that as the point of attack changes each reorganization of third party elements secures a larger vote. It is unnecessary to note in detail the movements of labor organizations after 1880 and their gradual crystallization as the Union Labor party, which may be said to have taken the lead in organizing the present People's party. The National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry, called Grangers for short, had at one time about 26,000 local Grangers in the nation. The Farmers' Mutual Benefit association came next, and has at least half a million members, chiefly west of Ohio. The National Farmers' league is strongest in the eastern states, and the Colored Farmers' Alliance and Co-operative union is necessarily strongest in the south, but gives out no exact figures.

Out of all these grew the national Farmers' Alliance, which has its headquarters in Washington, and its platform was put forth at Ocala, Fla., in December, 1890, the much abused "subtreasury" scheme being the chief point for criticism. Colonel L. L. Polk, of North Carolina, recently deceased, was its president. Its vice president is B. H. Clover, of Kansas; its secretary treasurer, J. H. Turner, of Georgia, and its lecturer, J. F. Willetts, of Kansas. The first attempt to combine with other labor organizations was not a success, but on the 20th of May, 1891, representatives of many industrial organizations at Cincinnati presented the platform of the People's party. The St. Louis platform of 1892 is now its recognized expression of principles.

Hon. H. E. Taubeneck, of Illinois, is chairman of the national executive committee and Robert Schilling, of Wisconsin, is secretary. Among the active men in the convention besides those already mentioned will probably be Dr. C. W. Macune, of the Alliance; N. M. Barnett, candidate for governor of Illinois; Anson J. Streeter, of Illinois, the Labor party's candidate for president in 1888; Congressman Moses, of Georgia; General Weaver, C. C. Post, Mr. Kolb, of Alabama, and several who were once prominent in the Greenback party.

The organization allows four delegates from each congressional district and eight at large from each state, so if every section of the country is represented the delegates will reach the suggestive number of 1776. It is of course impossible to estimate the voters behind them, but some of the figures in the elections of 1890 are startling in their suggestion of possibilities. In the second Nebraska district William Arthur McKeighan received 36,104 votes to 22,996 for all others, while in the Third district Omer Madison Kem had 31,831 against 25,440 for the Republican, 22,353 for the Democrat and 961 for the Prohibitionist. In South Dakota F. A. Leavitt received 24,907 votes, but was defeated, while in Kansas B. H. Clover had 4,430 majority, John Grant Otis 4,996, John Davis 5,484, William Baker 8,644 and Jerry Simpson 7,422. And the latter's opponent was Colonel James R. Hallowell, a veteran whose army record was phenomenally brilliant and a gentleman noted for affability.

In the ninth Georgia district Thomas Elisha Winn was elected as "an Alliance man and a Democrat," and in the tenth Thomas E. Watson was nominated as a Democrat but received the Alliance vote as a practical farmer. In the first Minnesota district William Henry Harries was "indorsed by the Alliance," and defeated the talented and popular Mark H. Dunnell by 3,323, while in the fifth district Kittel Halvorson received 21,514 votes, against 19,372 for the Republican and 16,203 for the Democratic candidate. Many causes, however, co-operated in the latter case, for Mr. Halvorson is a native of Norway, made a good record in the war for the Union and was indorsed by the Prohibitionists. Norwegian, soldier, practical farmer and Prohibitionist—a hard combination to beat in that latitude.



WATSON—KYLE—STREETER.

Thus far the phrase "People's party" has been used, but it is rather a phrase of convenience than exact designation, for in truth the party has not yet been officially named, and "People's party" is admittedly a very inadequate title. It has been applied dozens of times to organizations of the widest possible variance. The so called "People's party" of 1854 was a combination in the then western states of anti-Nebraska Democrats, antislavery Whigs, radical temperance men and reformers of various kinds, but after one campaign under that name it became the Republican party.

"Third party" is a still worse designation, besides being already applied in the popular mind to the Prohibitionists. "Nationalist" is too vague, "Labor" too limited, "Industrial" is not exactly the thing and "Antimonopoly" is really quite "fishy." A humorous critic has suggested that the new party name itself the "Adullamites" (see I Samuel xxii, 1, 2), but this is an old and painful joke. To sum up, it looks as if the selection of a good name would be one of the hardest tasks before the convention.

Intelligent African Tribes.

As white men advance into Africa, as they are now doing from all sides, they find the same differences among the people as among the aborigines of other continents. The lowest types are the exceptions, and there are pure negro races of extraordinary native talent. Among these are the Makololos, who nearly fifty years ago, under the rule of Sebotoane, a native Cæsar or Alexander, conquered the whole upper Zambesi country. Although in 1864 the subjected tribes revolted and obtained their independence, the Makololo language still prevails through the whole region.

The Highest Priced Newspaper.

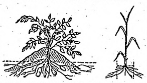
The Mashonaland Herald and Zambesian Times, printed in Fort Salisbury, Africa, enjoys the unique distinction of being the highest priced newspaper in the world. It is about the size of a sheet of foolscap, is issued daily and costs a shilling a copy. It is printed on the hektograph.

POTATOES AND CORN.

An Important Point in the Cultivation of These Two Crops.

Early planted crops, or ground that was early worked, may have become more or less crusted on the surface. With a good steel rake pulverize this surface and change it to a finely mellowed top soil. This will hasten growth, and any foul seeds just starting will be destroyed, according to Country Gentleman, which illustrates as follows another important point in the cultivation of potatoes and corn:

In cultivating potatoes, avoid the common practice of drawing the earth in hills around the plants, because in doing so you scrape the earth away from the roots between the rows, and pile it up needlessly high against the plants. The hill, with the natural level and the mass of soil piled above it, is shown by one of the figures of the cut. The effects of the two methods may be easily tested by experiment. Cultivate ten rows level and ten in heaps, and the level hills, when the crop is measured, will have from 10 to 20 per cent. more potatoes. There will be a difference, between slight hills and steep hills, and there will be a difference in soils. Try both ways and compare the results.



ERROR IN HILLING POTATOES AND CORN.

Take the same care in cultivating corn, the roots of which are nearer the surface than potato roots and more easily injured. Both corn and potatoes send out roots from the young plants two or three times as long as the height of the plants. Avoid cutting the corn roots, therefore, near the plants. In the cut is also represented a hilled young corn plant, the dotted lines showing how the roots are cut off when working deep and near.

Kentucky Blue Grass.

The most noted and most widely distributed of American pasture grasses is the Kentucky blue grass or June grass (poa pratinses). Very few of the many who own and have been reared amid blue grass pastures are aware of the wide difference in quality between such pastures. They know that some pastures are richer than others—that is, grow more luxuriant grass—but not that many pastures produce a grass that yields more and better flavored butter than others that bear heavier crops of ranker grass. In other words, it is not the rankest crop that makes the most butter, or butter of the highest quality. There is another grass (poa compressa) which is really more entitled to be called blue grass than the Kentucky grass. It will grow anywhere that the Kentucky grass will and flourishes on some soils where the other will scarcely live. On favorable soils it makes a butter grass equal to the best Kentucky and is highly deserving of more general cultivation.—Jersey Bulletin.

Coop for Young Turkeys.

A farmer's daughter, writing to The Country Gentleman, says: "The most satisfactory coops I have ever had for young turkeys was box shaped, 2 by 3 feet, tall enough for the hen to stand upright, and while sufficiently close near the bottom to confine the young poults, yet well ventilated under the eaves, over which the inclined board roof projects on every side to keep the rain from beating in. In the front and rear two of the slats extend out as handles, for the coop is light enough to be easily lifted to a clean spot every day. Short, thick grass makes the best of floors, but care must be taken to select ground that drains itself naturally, lest water should collect after a hard shower. Turkey hens give the keeper less trouble if they come off in pairs, for being company for one another they are less restless and wandering, and therefore take better care of their little ones."

Water for Bees.

When bees have formed the habit of going to any place for water it is a difficult matter to prevent their continuing to go to the same place, and hence they should be provided with water at home early in the spring, and be "enticed" there for their regular supply. The editor of The American Bee Journal suggests that a little salt in the water at the home trough will make it inviting to the bees, and at the same time to give the sides of your neighbor's trough a coat of kerosene oil would help to cultivate a liking for the home trough, which should be placed in a sunny spot.

Treatment of Celery Plants.

Celery plants should be transplanted in beds two or three inches apart as soon as they are large enough to handle. Orchard and Garden says that a good place to put them is a cold frame from which the sashes have been removed. Screens made of laths tacked an inch apart will give shade needed. This transplanting will cause the development of fibrous roots and make them more easy to transplant to their final quarters in late summer.

Here and There.

Sixty pounds of potatoes are a legal bushel in New York state.

Many of New Jersey's muck meadows are being reclaimed and devoted to onion and celery growing.

There will be at the World's fair not only a live stock exhibit, but in connection with the same a fat stock show.

California, Florida and Texas threaten to make it unnecessary soon to purchase Mediterranean fruits and nuts.

A dairy club of deaf mutes has been organized in South Dakota, with Charles H. Loucks as president and H. McP. Hofsteater, secretary.

Increasing favor is shown by British stockmen for cotton oil as a fattening ingredient in stock rations.

THE MATCHMAKERS.

A STORY OF LOVE AND FIREWORKS BY CHRISTINE GRIFFIN.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

FIZZ, bing, bang! Boom, boom, boom! All through the night and all through the day. Will it ever stop? Perhaps it wouldn't be so bad if one's thoughts were happy, but when they are not it is just awful.

Bab leans out of the library window and lifts her flushed face to the light breeze that sweeps by.

Things are going all wrong with her. They have been going wrong ever since Mr. Archibald Jones has seen fit to devote himself to her with a persistency that has driven away all the other men.

To be sure she rather liked him at first. He has horses to take her driving with and plenty of money and leisure time to spend with her at the theater, lawn tennis parties and all the other good things that come along through the seasons, and at a dance especially he acquits himself very creditably in spite of his extreme thinness and extreme height.

"If he only would talk about something or somebody besides himself," Bab said once reflectively.

She was trying on a love of a new bonnet at the time—touching its loops of ribbon lightly and twisting her head from one side to the other to get the effect in her miror; so that very naturally the sight of her own loveliness brought to her mind a pardonable wonder why he did not occasionally vary his egotistical themes by a little wholesome praise of herself.

Bab was a little amused at his conceit in the beginning, but as she sees more of him, night after night, week after week, and the chances of the final recital his remarkable existence grow more more remote, she begins to find it wearisome, and catches herself e than once looking back with long- to the time when Mr. Archibald Jones s not—the dear old life when she had nd so sweet a happiness in the words d glances of another man, a man who rely in these later days comes to her t all.

Beyond a doubt it is some thought of him that brings that pathetic light to her eyes and that tender little smile to her lips this July morning as she leans against the window frame with careless, dreamy abandonment, her fingers wandering restlessly through the soft, loose locks of hair upon her temples.

Things happen just right sometimes, even outside the pages of a story book, and it is certainly a very happy coincidence that at this moment a tall young man should come quietly around the corner of the house, and looking up see the girl and her smile.

Bab is all in a flutter as soon as she sees him.

"Why, Mr. Brayton," she cries, with an excited, broken little laugh, "where did you come from? I—oh, I'm awfully glad to see you."

She flushes prettily as he steps across the grass plat that lies between them. He takes the pretty white hand extended to him in his own sun tanned palm and perhaps he holds it there a trifle longer and just a trifle tighter than would be prescribed by the etiquette of polite society.

"I don't believe you're half as glad as I am to see you, Miss Barbara," he says, and his voice is a very good voice to listen to with its deep, mellow tones. "I never have any luck with you nowadays. No matter when I come you are sure to be out or just going. It is really a pity that you are so popular."

Bab laughs. She looks a trifle self conscious, as she smooths out the folds of her morning gown.

"Oh, but I'm not," she declares; "truly, I'm not. Aren't you coming in? Do."

But he shakes his head.

"Thanks. Can't possibly. I must be in town by 11, and it is quarter of now. I was riding past on my wheel and thought I'd just run in to ask if you'd enjoy going to the top of the Waverly tonight to see the fireworks. I believe there's to be quite a display."

Bab flushes up to the soft unruly waves of gold brown hair upon her forehead. She looks down intently at the handkerchief that she is twisting and untwisting between the tips of her fingers.

Fate again. Mr. Archibald Jones has already asked her the same question and for the sake of escaping a tiresome tete-a-tete she has declared her intention of staying at home and enjoying the few illuminations that have been purchased for the children.

"I'm so sorry," she says, not very steadily because of some emotion that makes her heart throb furiously, "awfully sorry. It's too bad, but I have had to refuse one invitation like yours already, because I—we are going to have a few rockets and things on the lawn and the children want me to stay with them. Won't you—couldn't you come here, Mr. Brayton? I can't promise you much of a treat," she adds, laughing a little nervously as she thinks of the other one, who is coming on his own invitation. "I don't suppose it'll be very exciting, but you don't know how glad I should be if you would come."

Then she lifts her eyes and looks at him. They are such lovely eyes, so blue and tender and wistful. He sees the wistfulness, to be sure, but whether it is meant for him or the other man who has invited her, he cannot tell. Men are so stupid about these things. When there is any doubt of this kind to be considered they usually give the benefit of it to the other man.

"Thanks," he says again, but a little chill of reserve has crept into his voice now and frozen all the genial warmth out of it. "Ever so kind of you. Perhaps I will. I won't promise. Then you can't expect me and be disappointed if I don't appear."

The words end in a decidedly curt laugh, as he steps out into the path again. An innocent looking torpedo gleams white against the red gravel at his feet. He stoops down, picks it up and flings it against the stonework of the steps. Perhaps its sharp report serves as a vent for his turbulent thoughts. Then he looks back at the girl, and their eyes meet for an instant—a single glance, incomprehensible to both.

"Goodby, and allow me to wish you a very pleasant evening, Miss Barbara."

A pleasant evening! Poor Bab. She drops down in a little heap on the divan as he disappears, and buries her face in the depths of a big silk pillow. What is the use of trying to be happy any more? What is the use? He doesn't care for her—he never will care now. That hateful Jones is like a grinning skeleton, putting himself always between her and her one love. Oh, dear—The thought ends in a long sigh.

"You come over to my house first, Dolly."

"No, you come over here. That'll be nicest. We're goin to have eight rockets—maybe more—I dunno."

"So're we."

"An a whole lot of fires—red an blue an green."

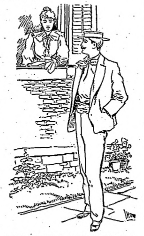
"So're we."

"Goody, goody, goody! Ain't it fun? I think Fourth o' July's nicer'n all the days in the year 'cept Christmas, don't you, Ducky?"

"Course I do."

A series of happy little giggles and the voices grow fainter as the children pass the window and go around the house. Bab drags herself up again and looks out through the bright sunshine, her eyes full of longing. If she could only be a child again and crave no greater happiness than the Fourth of July celebration. If there were only no such things as men and heartaches.

As the long day wears itself out and twilight settles down she becomes more and more restless. One question whirls through her mind again and again and routs all other thoughts. Will he come? That Mr. Archibald Jones will be prompt in arriving she does not doubt. He is always on hand with patient persistency, and no coolness of manner or scornful words could ever affect him to the point of keeping him away.



THEN HE LOOKS BACK AT THE GIRL.

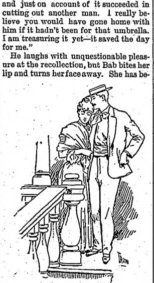
There is really something delightful to study in his imperturbable self esteem, or, that is, he might be a marvel to a disinterested outsider. To Bab he is a bore. Nevertheless she greets him with a winning smile as he crosses the lawn and joins the family group. The older boys are busy arranging the rockets and planning for the most advantageous places for the colored fires, and a small army of children are making the air hideous with their excited screams over the sputtering of firecrackers.

"Well, well," says Mr. Jones with an appreciative smile, "this is downright jolly. I really think, Miss Austin, you were wise to stay at home. Can I sit here on this rug beside you? No, no, I don't want a chair. This is ever so much nicer."

Mr. Jones looks at her with approval. It is not so dark yet but that he can see how very becomingly she is dressed. It seems to him that he has never seen her look so sweet and dainty before, and all unconscious of the irony of Fate, he placidly congratulates himself on the fact that it is all intended for him.

"Perfect night," he says, throwing his head back to peer up through the trees. There is not a cloud in the sky, and already in the far distance the stars are beginning to glimmer faintly. "Do you remember, Miss Austin, how we went to the lake a year ago and got caught in a drenching rain? Awful, wasn't it? That was the time, I believe, when I was lucky enough to have an umbrella, and just on account of it succeeded in cutting out another man. I really believe you would have gone home with him if it hadn't been for that umbrella. I am treasuring it yet—it saved the day for me."

He laughs with unquestionable pleasure at the recollection, but Bab bites her lip and turns her face away. She has become suddenly interested in the lighting of the Chinese lanterns that have been strung between the trees. That awful day! It had been the beginning of all her misery. Why did he speak of it and bring to her its flood of bittersweet memories?



TWO FIGURES UPON THE PORCH.

Mr. Archibald Jones is not at all conscious of having said the wrong thing. An entirely different train of thought has already taken possession of him. He, too, has become interested in the lighting up process.

"I wonder now if I couldn't help those boys? Will you excuse me, Miss Austin, and—er—let me go and offer my assistance? I've had such a lot of experience with those things, don't you know."

Bab nods gratefully. "Do," she says; "it would be ever so kind of you, and while you are busy I'll just run to the house for my shawl. It is growing chilly."

Bab looks on for a minute, then goes off across the grass, a little song on her lips. It is not too late yet for his coming. She will be happy until there is no more hope.

It is very dark by the house as she steps out onto the piazza some few minutes later. All the light seems concentrated on the front lawn, where the fireworks are being placed. Now and then a lot of sputtering against metal and a chorus of boys' howls of delight indicate the explosion of a pack of crackers under a tin pan.

Bab stands still at the railing for a moment to watch listlessly. She is in no hurry to go down to join the group under the trees again. He is so tiresome—that fellow, and Guy—ah, Guy!

Two shrill piping voices come up to her from the grass just across the path. Dolly and Ducky are sitting under the big maple tree curled up together on a shawl, having a little confidential.

"Well, I guess I know better," Ducky's voice. "My sister Mame, she says a girl wouldn't let a feller tag after her so if she didn't like him lots. She thinks your sister means to marry him—so there, now, Dolly Austin."

"Humph, well she needn't, then. The idea—the ve-ry idea!"

Dolly is getting excited. She talks very fast and not very low. Something makes Bab shiver in her thin gown, but she only draws her white shawl closer around her and stands very still. Right there, leaning against the veranda in the shade of the vines, could she but have known it, so near that his outstretched hand could touch hers if he had tried, stands, also very silently, a tall young man. He has not meant to play the part of an eavesdropper, but this childish chatter is amusing. It may prove instructive.

"Do you s'pose I'd ever have that old skinny Jones for a brother—him"— The emphasis is most emphatic. It makes Bob smile, "an do you s'pose for a single minute, Ducky Arnold, that Bab wants me to have him? Well, I guess I know a thing or two 'bout that. What'd she want to cry for the other night when that old Jones asked her to go to the lawn party and that awful nice Mr. Guy Brayton came and asked the same thing when it was too late?

"An what does she cry for most ev'ry night? It's cuz he don't come eny more. I hear her, but when I ask her what's the matter she says, 'Oh, my head aches—go to sleep—don't bother me.' Humph, should think her head would ache. An wait'll I tell you somethin else—only don't you dare to breathe it to a soul. Land! she'd be just wild if she knew I knew 'bout it. Well, the other mornin fore she waked up I saw the end of a picture stickin out from under her pillow, and when I peeked at it whose do you s'pose it was? Guess."

Bab brings her white teeth down rather sharply over her under lip. She kicks the toe of her pretty slipper restlessly against the edge of the step. Tomorrow she will give this small sister a little piece of her mind, but tonight—well, what is the use of making a scene tonight? Everything is said now that can be said, and what is worse it is all true. She actually comes quietly down a step to catch Ducky's answer.

"Mister Jones?" Ducky's voice is faint and a little doubtful, but her words win a storm of scorn.

"Mister Jones—Jones—Baldy Jones? Whyee, Ducky Arnold—well I guess it wasn't. Don't I tell you my sister Bab's dead gone on that handsome other one. Guy—what's his name? Course she is. So'm I. But I'd like to know where she keeps that picture daytimes. I never saw it before."

Their voices flutter off into a little giggle as they rise to run away under the trees. The fun is commencing. The boys are sending up a shower of Roman candles.

Bab gives an involuntary sigh.

"Oh, dear," she says; "oh, dear me."

And then such a strange thing happens. Somebody comes up the steps two at a time. Somebody's hand is laid over hers as it rests on the railing. Somebody's dear voice speaks.

"Is it true?" he asks a little huskily. "Is it true, Bab, darling? I couldn't help hearing. Do you care for me? I love you so. I have a right to know."

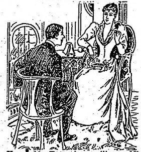
But Bab doesn't say anything after that one half startled "oh!" What she does is quite as expressive as words. When he slips his arm around her she lets it stay there and lifts her pretty face confidingly up against his own.

Fizz, sizz, whizz! A long, fiery tailed rocket shoots into the air and a great mass of red light flares up through the darkness, illuminating everything with its soft radiance.

Especially prominent for a moment are those two figures upon the porch, and most especially prominent is the tall young man's right arm, where it is thrown around the white shawl.

Yet in the excitement of looking for the next display no one sees the little tableau except one man, and as the light fades out he turns in his leisurely walk up the path toward the house and goes back—this time straight to the street and cityward.

A Gentle Reminder.



Young Mr. Tutter was calling on Miss Pinkerly on the eve of the Fourth, and naturally his eloquence turned in the direction of fireworks. "It needs but one touch of your gentle hand, Miss Clara," he said, "to send me soaring to the zenith like a gorgeous rocket."

"That's true, Mr. Tutter," replied Miss Clara; "but you mustn't forget that, like a rocket, you get to be a stick in the end."

EVERY American citizen will feel an honest pride in the ovation which Dr. Talmage is receiving in London. Last Sunday morning the crowds at the temple where he preached struggled and crowded each other in a vain endeavor to gain an entrance. So great was the crowd that women and children fainted, and some were slightly injured in the crowd. During his discourse many of his auditors were moved to tears, and after the service was over the crowd remained around the building until Dr. Talmage came out, where he was surrounded and shaken by the hand until he got in his carriage and escaped from his admirers.

WHAT a difference there is in the way the two national conventions were handled. In Minneapolis every visitor was taken care of and entertained right royally, the exposition hall was ample for the crowd, and was pronounced to be unexcelled for convention purposes. Every delegate and visitor went away filled with enthusiasm for the Flour city and the northwest. In Chicago the temporary wigwam erected for the democratic convention was a dizzy affair. During a rain storm on Wednesday, the roof leaked so that those who didn't have umbrellas got a good wetting, and it was expected every moment that the roof would be blown off. People went away from Chicago with anything but pleasant remembrances of the Windy city.

THE ENCAMPMENT.

All that is now needed to make successful the grand Fourth of July celebration and four days encampment of the Park Region association of the G. A. R. at Crookston is fine weather, and the weather forecasts give promise of this. The encampment has been well advertised for several months, and every one for a hundred miles around is figuring on attending. All the G. A. R. posts in the association will be represented, and some of them will turn out their full quota of members. A majority of the G. A. R. men will bring their wives, their families or their friends. The city will be in gala attire, and for four days the streets will resound with patriotic music, song and story. As the veterans of the war become fewer and fewer with each succeeding encampment, the ties that bind the survivors together become stronger. The battles, the victories, the defeats, the marches, the hardships, imprisonments and the thousand and one little incidents which go to make up the unwritten history of the war will be recounted. Army songs will be sung, army rations partaken of, and for four days war memories will file the heart and mind of every veteran present.

The northern Minnesota agricultural and driving association have prepared a splendid program of races for the entertainment of all who delight to see good equine sports.

There will be bicycle races for lovers of the wheel, and athletic sports of various kinds. There will be a grand display of fireworks on the night of the Fourth, and a good theatrical company will hold the boards at the Grand opera house, with a change of play nightly, and last, but not least, a ball will be given at McKinnon's hall each night, where the followers of Terpsichore may indulge in their favorite pastime. The program includes a range and variety of amusements to suit the tastes of everyone, and intending visitors can count on being entertained.

DEMOCRACY'S CANDIDATES.

Grover Cleveland, of New York, and A. E. Stevenson, of Illinois, were the nominees of the national democratic convention as the democratic candidates for president and vice-president. They are probably as strong a team as their party could put in the field, but they enter the race with the odds against them, and when the ballots are counted in November it will be found that they are left out.

With Harrison and Reid as the Republican standard bearers, there is no reason why the republican ticket should not receive as large and even larger majority than it did four years ago. The issues are practically the same as they were then, the heads of the tickets are the same, and public sentiment toward the presidential canidates is about the same, except that President Harrison has won the respect and admiration of many lukewarm republicans and democrats by his manly and straightforward administration. Even the most enthusiastic democrat cannot gainsay the fact that Harrison's administration has been clean, and they have not a word of complaint against him—except that he is a republican. In the controversy with Italy, with Chili, and with England, he showed that he was a true American to the backbone, and endeared himself in the hearts of all liberty-loving people of this nation.

Mr. Cleveland has as many friends as he had four years ago—but no more—and although the nomination of A. E. Stevenson, who was first assistant postmaster-general under Cleveland, and was Tammany's candidate, may compensate that element in New York for the defeat of their candidate for president—Hill—still everything will not be harmony among our democratic friends in the Empire state.

Both parties are thoroughly satisfied with their own candidates and those of the opposition. Each party thinks they have put up their strongest man, and each party is willing to concede that both presidential candidates are excellent timber, and good exponents of the principles of their respective parties.

There is another thing to be thankful for, and that is that the campaign will be free from all personalities and the battle will be fought out on the issues of the parties—the republicans for protection to American industry and the democrats for tariff reform. The nomination of Cleveland removes from the campaign the free silver issue, as he is not in favor of free coinage, and his famous letter on that subject defined his position very clearly and placed him on record.

HEATWOLE FOR CONGRESS.

We understand that there is a rapidly growing demand among the Republicans of the Third district for the nomination of Joel P. Heatwole as their candidate for Congress, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press. No better or stronger nomination could be made. His services to the party, first as secretary of the Republican state central committee for four years and more recently as chairman of that committee, have given him a highly creditable position in the party, and have earned for him whatever reward waits upon hard work well and faithfully done. He represents the young blood of the party, its generous enthusiasms. He is intelligent, earnest and popular. He knows the republican workers of the district, and they know him, like him and would work for him. With these claims to a nomination it seems likely to go to him naturally and spontaneously, especially in view of the fact that there seems as yet to be no candidate in the field against him. Ex-Congressman Horace B. Strait has been mentioned, but it is understood that this tried and successful vote-getter declines to be a candidate, as does also Darwin Hall. We have not heard of any other candidate.

JOEL NOT SIDETRACKED.

Neither by word or deed has Joel P. Heatwole, the Northfield editor, signified his intention of withdrawing as a candidate for governor. While he has consistently abstained from taking an aggressive position and has done nothing whatever that would imply that he would make a fight for the nomination, his candidacy can be considered as subject to the will of Minnesota Republicans in convention assembled.

Mr. Heatwole's only utterance in relation to his candidacy was in the letter published six weeks ago, in which he stated his position. The Third district congressional plum did not prove as attractive a bait as Mr. Nelson's managers thought it would, for Mr. Heatwole knows something about the situation in that district himself. He doubtless appreciated very highly the compliment intended in putting his name forward as the only one in the Republican ranks capable of redeeming that democratic district from the enemy, but at the same time he does not seem to be impressed with the allurements of a congressional contest.—St. Paul Dispatch.

A Matter of Opinion.

She had been having fun with Dudekins right along and he made up what mind he had to get even. It took the form of a brilliant and cogent conundrum, whose answer Dudekins thought was locked in his manly bosom.

"I have a conundrum for you, Miss Fannie," he said, when he saw her next.

"Ah," she replied, "what is it? Who gave it to you?"

"I made it up myself," he asserted, bridling somewhat.

"Indeed! What is it?"

"Why are my clothes like the moon?"

She hesitated a moment and Dudekins began to look triumphant.

"You may think," she said slowly, and Dudekins somehow felt the sand slipping from under him, "it is because they have a man in them, and you have a perfect right to think as you please, but, Mr. Dudekins, opinions differ."—Detroit Free Press.

Leaves Used for Paper.

Leaves of trees were used for writing purposes very early by the Egyptians, and probably by the Greeks. The Hindoos continued the use of this material until within a few centuries. Even at the present time books of leaves are not uncommon in the south of India and the island of Ceylon. The leaves of some Asiatic trees, from their size and smoothness, are admirably adapted for books. If we may judge from the name "leaf" being still applied to the paper of books, we should imagine these leaves to have been formerly the principal material in use.—New York World.

A Cunning Child.

"Oh, Tom, the baby is so sweet! To-day he took off his shoe and threw it in the fire, and when I told him that he was a bad, bad boy he only said 'Nah.'"

"'Nah,' eh? Well, what do you think I'm made of—money? That's the second pair he's lost in a week."

"Oh, no, dear; it was the mate of the one he tore to pieces."

"Oh, that's different—isn't he cunning!"—Harper's Bazar.

A Loving Jay.

Olive Thorne Miller tells of a jay that she once tamed, and that repaid her kindness with every mark of gentle regard. The jay never squawked at her as he would at others, but whistled gently and coingly. He always got as near her as possible, and did as near kissing as a bird can; that is, he laid his beak on her cheek.

ALLIANCE CONVENTION.

The Polk County Alliance-People's Party Convention at Crookston

Elect Officers and Delegates to Other Conventions and Pass Resolutions.

The Polk county alliance convention met Wednesday morning at the court house, Crookston, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year.

At 10 a. m. the convention made a temporary organization by the selection of E. E. Lommen as chairman and Nels Clementson secretary. After appointing committees on credentials, resolutions and permanent organization, the convention adjourned until 2 p. m.

On the convention reassembling at 2 o'clock the committee on credentials reported 136 delegates entitled to seats. The committee on permanent organization reported favorable to making the temporary organization permanent, which report was adopted, but the secretary refused to serve, whereupon M. Jeffers was elected permanent secretary. The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

Resolved, first. That we, the People's party of Polk county, Minn., in convention assembled on the 29th day of June, 1892, do heartily endorse the platform adopted at the St. Louis convention, February 29th, 1892.

Second. That we endorse the platform adopted by the congressional convention held at Moorhead, Minn., June 21st, 1892, and especially emphasize sections No. three (3) and four (4) of same relating to the abolition of the liquor traffic and protection of timber lands, and recommend and request that section three of said platform be adopted as a plank in the national platform at Omaha, Neb., at convention to be held July 2nd, 1892.

Third. That we disapprove of the one term clause adopted at the convention in Crookston held on the 29th day of May, 1892, believing that an officer who has filled his position to the best of his ability and to the satisfaction of the people at large is entitled to at least two terms.

Fourth. That we disapprove of and condemn the practice of office-seeking, fully endorsing the people's party motto, "Let the office seek the man."

Fifth. That we are opposed to the bill relating to the Natural Park scheme, which has already passed the House, and request our senators, Davis and Washburn, to use their influence to prevent it passing in the Senate and becoming a law.

Sixth. That we, the delegates to this convention, pledge ourselves to stand by and support each and all candidates who shall be placed in nomination on our ticket.

Seventh. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to I. Donnelly, "President of the Farmers' Alliance."

W. G. HUNT,
A. P. HANSEN,
J. S. NICHOLS,
T. H. NESSETH,
ROBT. ANDERSEN,
Committee.

A ballot was then taken on the delegate at large to the legislative convention at Crookston, July 30th. E. E. Lommen was unanimously elected.

The legislative delegates selected by commissioner districts were:

1st District—W. G. Hunt, J. T. Jorgenson.

2d District—J. B. Merrill, Martin Finseth.

3d District—Chris Houston, Ole Christianson.

4th District—Swan Anderson, Noe Brosseau.

5th District—John Dwyer, Martin Purcell.

Candidates for county commissioners in the districts to elect this fall were:

First district, John Opegaard.

Third district, Chris. Hanson.

Fifth district, Robt. Anderson.

This brought the business down to the nomination for county officers, and for the first position that of the auditor, two aspirants appeared, C. U. Webster, the present incumbent, and W. A. Marin. On ballot Webster received 104 votes and Marin 22. J. T. Beaudry was nominated for treasurer by acclamation. For register of deeds, eleven aspirants appeared resulting in no choice on first ballot.

On the second ballot the contest began to narrow down and on the third, John Amundson received 69 votes and was declared the nominee.

For sheriff six names were in the hat on the first ballot, which came down to three on the second, resulting in the nomination of the present incumbent, A. Grundysen, on the third.

For county attorney, J. G. McGrew and L. E. Gossman tried conclusions with A. R. Holston, who was an easy winner on second ballot. C. M. Benson was an easy winner for Judge of Probate. O. L. Hamery had no opposition for surveyor, but the matter of who should be superintendent of schools took some time to settle. On the first ballot Miss Martha Cruikshanks received 79 votes to V. D. Carruth 44. Just as the chairman rose to announce the ballot a letter was handed him which proved to be from Miss Cruikshanks, emphatically declining to run if nominated. A committee was appointed to acquaint the young lady with the fact that she was already nominated, but this flattering fact did not cause her to accept, so the convention decided upon Andrew Lommen, who is the nominee.

J. G. McGrew won the nomination for court commissioner without a struggle, while Henry Sheperd distanced all competitors for coroner. The convention broke up about 2 o'clock Thursday morning, peace and harmony prevailing.

The band that furnished music on the occasion was composed of farmers' sons, residents of the town of Roome and Fisher, who furnished the music, not for boodle, but from an innate love of country. The convention as a whole seemed very harmonious and did not appear to leave any sore spots.

Knute Sandvig was one of the good boys who greeted the JOURNAL man on Wednesday.

E. E. Abbott was down from Mentor on Wednesday to try to find out what hay-seed is worth.

J. T. Knight, the only original Knight, was in the city an Wednesday to see that the people's convention did not damage Cleveland's chances.

L. E. George, the Fertile Journal man, gave this office a pleasant call on Wednesday. The Journal has entered its sixth year and since Mr. George took control has been as excellent local paper.

A. K. Aker and Andrew Thompson were callers at the JOURNAL office on Thursday. They did not wax enthusiastic over crop prospects but expressed the hope that the future might not justify their fears.

Charlie Johnson was one of the deserving ones who went down in the cyclone on Wednesday. Charlie was one of the first to embrace the Alliance faith from a political stand-point; has been a faithful and courageous worker and this is his reward! Here is a bit of consolation for you Charlie in the language of the poet who said: "Learn to labor and to wait." You have learned to labor all right enough. You have done more good hard solid work for this country since you came than many who win a fat office without such work as you have done. Yes, you have learned to "labor" all right enough and now as soon as you learn to "wait" you will fill the bill—but just why all those who do the work should be required to wait so long for the reward puzzles us.

Compulsory Insurance in Germany.

In Germany the law of compulsory insurance against old age and infirmity, passed in June, 1889, completes the programme of legislation for improving the condition of the working classes which was set forth in the imperial rescript of 1881. It affects more than 13,000,000 people, giving them an inalienable legal claim to support in cases of infirmity and in old age.

The insurance is compulsory in all industrial occupations upon persons over sixteen years of age of both sexes. Clerks and tradesmen's apprentices who do not earn more than $500 a year also participate, but assistants and apprentices in druggists' shops are excluded.

Exemption from compulsory insurance is granted to persons who work for food, clothes and lodging only, and who receive no pay, or who are only in temporary employment.

The pension for old age varies from about twenty-five dollars to fifty dollars a year, and is granted to every insured person who has completed his seventieth year, irrespective of his ability to earn a livelihood, provided he does not already draw a pension for infirmity. The infirmity pension varies from about twenty-seven dollars to over a hundred dollars, and is given, irrespective of age, to persons who are permanently incapacitated from earning a living.

In order to establish a claim to a pension under the German law, contributions, regulated by the amount of earnings, must be paid for a prescribed period. The means of paying pensions are obtained by fixed contributions from the imperial treasury, added to regular payments on the part of the employers and employed.—Youth's Companion.

Punished by the Czar.

The czar of Russia knows how to brace up his military officers to their duty. A merchant of Charkoff was murdered by soldiers, and it was shown that had the officers of the regiment stationed in the town maintained proper discipline the murder might have been prevented. As a punishment for this they have been ordered to pay a yearly pension of 5,000 rubles to the widow of the murdered man.—Toledo Blade.

A LIVELY FIRE.

A Two Thousand Dollar Blaze This Afternoon.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: The fire gong sounded an alarm at 5 o'clock this afternoon, which brought out not only the home companies but the visiting teams, in short order. The gasoline stove in a restaurant on Bruce Avenue occupied by A. Pederson, started the conflagration and before an alarm could be turned in the entire structure was in flames. The fire connected to the adjoining building occupied by A. Donovan as a fruit and cigar store and Thos. Ulven as a residence, and in a few minutes the buildings with their contents were in ruins. The adjoining blacksmith shop occupied by M. Hagan was the next victim. The Yerxas, of Fargo, made a grand run and were the second company on the scene. The buildings are owned by M. T. Hagness. The loss on buildings will reach $1,000 and stock and furniture $1,000 more. The Hagness building was saved with only partial loss; insured.

SORE ON CHICAGO.

Minnesota Delegates Say the Arrangements Were Disgraceful.

Duluth Tribune:—Among other delegates who arrived home yesterday were Hon. Michael Doran, Alexander McKinnon of Crookston, J. G. Brown of Duluth and James Manning of Worthington, says the Pioneer Press. Henry Keller of Sauk Center was also a member of this party. Mr. Brown roasted Chicago to a turn for the manner in which the convention had been handled. Such a wigwam, he said, was an outrage and he believed it would be a long time before the Democratic national convention accept another like it. He said he should favor having a smaller convention. The method of distributing tickets, he said, was wretched, and very unsatisfactory to the Minnesotians. He spoke in the highest terms of the southern Democrats with whom he became acquainted. Mr. Brown's choice for vice president was Mitchell of Wisconsin, but the unit rule bound him to Gray of Indiana until the Minnesota delegation went over to Stevenson.

TOWN TALK.

Charlie Misner: Did you notice that everybody is painting up this spring, far more than ever before? I call that a healthy sign of the times.

Doc Rutledge: You may say that the Fisher club will be right on deck for a match game with your club if sufficient inducements are offered—not otherwise.

W. D. Wilson: The base ball boys who went to Red Lake Falls were entertained in splendid style. Nothing was too good for us. We virtually owned the town while we were there.

Judge C. O. Christianson: A Republican club was organized at Fertile last Saturday evening containing sixty members. That don't look as though republicanism was entirely dead in Polk county, does it?

Dr. Henault: How's business? Well, my boy, since I fixed up my office a bit—set my house in order, as it were, I have had an excellent run of custom. Have been just as busy as I could be, and that is all one could ask.

Manager Lent: I was over to Grand Forks during the tournament. Had a pleasant time, but am tired out. The Fierce-Columbus company played to crowded houses every night. The company is a good one and the repertoire is splendid.

Ed. Cooley, of Grand Forks: I am on my way to Marshall and Kittson counties to close some deals for the Peerless Machine Co. No, Mr. Lytle is not connected with the company now, nor has he been for some time. We have been doing a good business this spring, and expect to increase our trade this summer.

A. G. Gallasch: Have just came down from Thief River Falls, where Mr. Ellington, Mr. Wheeler and myself are putting in a bank. I think that place is going to be a good town. What do I think of Crookston? I always had faith in this city. It will always be, as it is now, the metropolis of northern Minnesota.

Dr. J. H. Thomas: In relation to the rumor that you have doubtless heard, that Dr. Thomas having sold out intends to leave the city, I wish to say that the doctor has not as yet advised me of such intentions. On the other hand he has informed me that he has purchased the Mosher property on Main street for a residence and has rented the building in the rear of the Merchants' National bank for an office where he will be glad to welcome all of his friends, both old and new.

During the encampment one of Behr Bros.' beautiful pianos will be on exhibition in the parlors of the Commercial hotel, and those intending to purchase a piano should call and examine this instrument. These pianos are equal to the Steinway in tone, finish, etc., but are sold at prices within the reach of all.

The Saratoga of the West.

Readers of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL who visit the Twin Cities this summer should run out to Hotel Lafayette at Lake Minnetonka for a day, and see the largest and finest resort hotel in the Northwest. Frequent trains on the Great Northern, which connect with steamers for a tour of the Lake. If you intend making a trip anywhere, see Agent W. W. Fegan, of the Great Northern.

If you have wool, snake root, eggs or butter, A. Sture will give you the highest market price in trade.

Attention, G. A. R. !

You will need some cards for the coming grand event and the JOURNAL will be prepared to fill all orders. We have samples of elegant embossed cards which we can furnish on order, if the order is given in time. Call and see our samples and leave orders.

The National Birthday.

Next Monday sunrise will be ushered in by the firing of cannon, and the accompanying fire-cracker. As the day advances, the display of the National colors will increase, until the whole city is red, white and blue. The city lads and lassies will seek the lakes and woods, leaving deserted streets and closed stores, while the smaller towns, in which lingers the "Spirit of '76," will be crowded with blooming country girls in white frocks and gay ribbons, admiring the marshals of the day in silk tiles and red sashes, the "Orator of the Day" will shout and perspire, the lemonade fakir will be in his glory, and to the small boy it will be a day of unalloyed delight. There is not much patriotism about it, perhaps—the "Reading the Declaration" is voted a bore—and yet, if Columbia should be assailed from within or without her sons and daughters would rally as quickly as in 1775 or in 1861. Many will take the opportunity to visit old homes and old friends, and the Burlington Route will be their favorite railroad, reaching, as it does, all principal towns and cities and making a very low rate for the Fourth of July. For particulars, call on your home agent or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER XX.—CONTINUED.

What was I to do? I dared not try to pull myself hand over hand up the wet rope, for the slightest relaxation of my hoid might allow the rope to slip, and I should be lost assuredly.

"Dear, are you there still?" Lola called from above.

"Yes," I replied.

"Here is the rope,—when I call, you can trust yourself to it."

At the some time I felt the knotted rope dangling against my shoulders.

"Now she called.

It was not an instant too soon. I felt the wet rope slipping through my hands. Leaving go with one hand, I clutched out wildly for the knotted rope, and by the happiest chance succeeded in seizing it.

I got a cross-piece between my feet, and I was comparatively safe, if Lola had strength to hold on for a few moments. But that I might not tax her too greatly, I still grasped the wet rope.

"Saved," I called out to her.

"Not for long," shouted Van Hoeck from the opposite side, and I heard the snap of the spring as he closed the breechloader, and then the "click" as he cocked the piece.

Would he shoot me or the girl? I asked myself in that moment.

He fired, and the ringing shot was followed by a sharp cry of pain from above, and the cross-piece on which I stood gave a little jerk, but no more. She must have escaped, despite that cry, or she could not still have held on to the rope.

But terrible as these thoughts that passed though my mind in those brief moments were, they were banished from my mind by a yet more terrific appeal to my senses.

Following almost immediately upon the crack of the rifle and Lola's cry, a mass of rock, probably disintegrated by the frost, and started from its place by the vibration ot the shoot, slid down the face of the precipice, hurtled against a rock, and some moments after fell with a deep "pong" into the water below.

But, as if this had been the keystone of the fabric that upheld the mighty weight of the enormous rock that covered the chasm, its fall was followed by the crumbling away and precipitation of others at intervals rapidly decreasing, their fall eventually becoming a continual down-pour, marked now and then by a louder crash as some larger block gave way.

The roar of artillery, the peal of thunder, was not to be compared with the awful din as the great rock jerked downward as the quartz splintered and gave way under it, shattering and grinding the opposing rocks, and brusting away huge fragments that struck from side to side as they hurtled down, tearing and splitting the very heart of the mountain, as it seemed.

The fall was most violent at some distance away from us further down the ravine; only an occasional block, ground under the great mass as it jerked down, was shattered to pieces, and fell in dust and rubble about us.

But our turn was at hand.

It seemed to me as if the last day had come, and the world were crumbling to pieces. To the terror of an earthquake was added the horror of impenetrable darkness, and the consciousness that the gigantic rock that vaulted the abyss was slowly jerking down upon us. I must have kept my hold upon the rock by instinct: I had no consciousness of volition.

The awful eruption hed continued for some moments—scarcely so long as one might take to read this description—with increasing intensity, when suddenly, with an appalling crash, the great roof tilted up. I saw the earth slowly gape above me, letting in the blinding sunlight; and then the upper lip of jagged rock, reaching its highest elevation, shot sidelong away, making visible the long strip of blue heaven between towering peaks of the mountain.

One last "pong" as the rock wedged itself afresh lower down the precipice, and then all was still. The sight of the blue sky, the sense of the relief, were too much for me. I trembled violently, and, for a moment, I thought I must relinquish my hold. But a piteous cry from Lola nerved me to fresh effort.

I saw now the two cut ropes, and, grasping one in each hand, I drew myself up, using the knotted ropes as I could; and so presently I scrambled upon the ledge.

Lola was lying upon the ground, drawn against the rock around which she had passed the knotted cord. The ball had struck her, and she had fallen; but the devoted girl had passed the noose around her body, and so saved my life for the second time. I knelt beside her, and raised her head. She opened her beautiful eyes, and smiled, as she took my hand. She could do no more.

CHAPTER XXI.

"I knowed it must go one day. How fares it, pardner?" called Brace from the opposite ledge.

Looking across, I saw him sitting on the boulder binding his arm with his neckcloth.

"Lola is hit. The villain has done his work." I said.

"He'll never do no more," Brace answered, pointing up the ledge.

Van Hoeck had tried to escape the way he came, after shooting Lola, and had got some distance along the ledge, when the great rock opened and slid away.

He stood on the narrow path now, a ghastly spectacle. A piece of quartz had struck him on the head; a thin stream of blood was trickling down his cheek. In one hand he held the Great Hesper; in the other he grasped his rifle.

But he dared not move from the position he had reached when the roof tilted up; for the light that burst in had blinded him once more. The pupils closed over the sensitive retinas, and the blank, sightless eyes stared wildly round, incapable of seeing.

It was possible for Brace to reach him by going along the ledge.

"Will you save him?" I asked.

"Not I, pardner," he replied. "I leave him to Providence, be his end what it may. The shot he fired at my poor youngster started the consarn, and brought the whole thing down. 'Tis God Almighty's judgment. Let it be."

Van Hoeck left the rifle slip from his hand; how insignificant to us seemed the sound that came up from below, as the weapon struck a rock, after the mighty discord that had thundered in our ears, and yet to him how terribly significant!

We could see his hand quivering as he groped along the edge of the wall.

In vain now he strained his eyes to see the ledge by which he had followed us. Yet he could not stand forever there.

He found a crevice for his fingers, and made a step forward; he advanced again, but the rock he put his foot on was a piece of the debris that had fallen upon the ledge. It rolled under his weight. He staggered back, swinging his arms in the vain attempt to gain an equilibrium, then he shot forward, and fell headlong down, down, down into the abyss.

I held my breath; it seemed minutes before that hollow "pong" reached our ears, telling us that Van Hoeck was gone forever, and the Great Hesper with him.

* * * * * *

There was cord, and to spare, in the coils. Weighting one end with a stone, I threw an end across to Brace; and, when the cut ropes were knotted, and a bridge once more formed, he crossed and knelt down by me over poor Lola.

He examined her wound, and shook his head in silence: there was no hope.

We made a mattress ot the rugs on the smoothest part of the rock, and attempted to lift her upon it. But the movement gave her pain, and she motioned us to desist. Then pointing upward, she made signs for us to leave her.

"Not while you are with us, my poor gel," said her father, with more tenderness than I had ever heard in his voice.

We had the flask, and some food in a wallet. We ate when we were hungry, seated beside Lola.

Then exhausted with fatigue, and the terrible strain we had been subjected to, we unconsciously fell asleep, with our backs resting against the rock. The last thing of which I was conscious was the pressing of Lola's lips upon my hand.

. . . .

Brace touched my arm.

"Pardner," he said, in a tone of awe, "the Kid's gone."

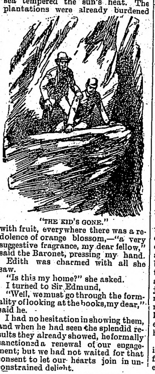
I looked where I had seen her lying with her face to my hand. She was gone literally. There was a little stain of blood upon the rock,—a drop further on, another close to the edge of the platform. She had kept her promise,—she had been good; and now the sufferings of her short life were ended.

"She knew it was no good our waitin'; poor little cuss."

I felt something in my hand; opening it, I found a ring I had bought for Lola. She had slipped it there before she went.

* * * * * * * *

Sir Edmund and Edith came to San Diego in June, the loveliest season of that lovely land. The air from the sea tempered the sun's heat. The plantations were already burdened with fruit, everywhere there was a redolence of orange blossom,—"a very suggestive fragrance, my dear fellow," said the Baronet, pressing my hand.



"THE KID'S GONE."

Edith was charmed with all she saw.

"Is this my home?" she asked.

I turned to Sir Edmund,

"Well, we must go through the formality of looking at the books, my dear," said he.

I had no hesitation in showing them, and when he had seen the splendid results they already showed, he formally sanctioned a renewal of our engagement; but we had not waited for that consent to let our hearts join in unconstrained delight.

Our second engagennt was happily longer than the first, but we were married the week after the vines were cleared.

Brace was at our wedding breakfast. When it was over, he took some of the flowers from the table and disappeared for some days. I knew how he had spent the brief holiday. If I had entertained any doubt, it would have been dispelled when, on his return, he took the old agreement from his pocket and pointed to the postscript:

It is understood between the above partners that, in the event of a lucky find, the Kid shall not be forgotten."

And, indeed, in my wife I had found a dearer prize than any I had dreamed of when I signed the compact.

THE END.

Medicine Lake.

Medicine lake is a wonder that draws many visitors annually—a body of water that does not contain a living thing, and at certain hours of the day is full of a gelatinous, spongelike substance that sinks and leaves the water clear. At the lake are two mountains, one of pure obsidian, the other of pumice stone in layers.—Potter Four Corners.

The Power of Observation.

The Bank Clerk—It's a shame the way some men rob their employers by loafing when they're paid to work. There's a bricklayer on that new building across the street who hasn't done a stroke for an hour—I know it, because I've done nothing but watch him.—London Tit-Bits.

CHOOSING A CAREER.

A TINSMITH DISCUSSES THE OPPORTUNITIES OF HIS TRADE.

A Practical Talk That Should Interest Thoughtful Parents—What a Boy May Expect in Work and Wages—Details of the Apprenticeship.

Matthew Barr is the walking delegate of the Tin and Sheet Iron Workers' union, and worked for many years as a tinsmith in a shop and in business for himself. "The tinsmith trade," said Mr. Barr to a reporter, "is split into several branches, and to be able to do all kinds of work in tin and sheet iron requires considerable time spent in each department. Sheet iron work, as it is understood in this city, is carried on in what are known as 'furnace shops,' while the manufacture of tin goods is restricted to what are called 'assortment shops.' Apart from these there are the cornice makers and slate and metal roofers, which are included among the branches that tinsmiths must know to round out their knowledge.

"The best age for a boy to begin the tinsmith trade is about sixteen. He ought to have picked up sufficient education from the common schools at this age to give him a fair start in life. No boy is bound out as an apprentice to a tinsmith in this country, but beginners are not looked upon as full fledged journeymen until they reach the age of manhood, no matter how proficient they may be. In some shops a boy has very little show, because there is a system of employment which practically excludes him.

"This is the result of a surplus of labor in other countries. Tinsmiths land here from other lands with but little knowledge of what the trade requires here, but with a general knowledge of the business and the use of tools. They apply for work in shops and they are taken on in preference to the native born boys who desire to learn the trade. These foreign mechanics can learn quicker than a boy generally, and while they are hired for low wages, they in a short time are able to do almost as much work as an expert tinsmith. This system is against the American boy, but so long as there is money in it for the bosses it will be kept up.

"This trade is not such a laborious one that it requires an unusual amount of strength. A tinsmith need not be as strong as a carpenter, blacksmith or bricklayer, but he must have plenty of endurance. He ought to be versatile intellectually, because he is not a mere machine, but is often required to make entirely new things, which can only be done with a fair degree of inventive skill, besides an expert knowledge of the use of tools.

"A boy will never become a good tinsmith if he is not obedient and patient. He will have to do some simple thing over so many times that life will become very weary in the shop before he is set to work upon something that appears to be important to him. In the assortment shops a boy will first be taught how to use the shears. He will be given a lot of old scraps to cut up, and before his muscles get used to the movement he will think that his arm will drop off. He will receive about three dollars a week on the start.

"The foreman watches the boy carefully, and if he does not take hold of the shears and other tools handily in a few days, he will probably remind him that he has made a mistake in his calling. Some boys are put at this and other trades by their parents who would make good clerks and salesmen, but never will be good mechanics. To accustom the boy to the use of the mallet and hammer, he is kept straightening old pipe. When he knows a little about tools and shows the proper spirit in doing his work, he is sent to the journeyman's bench to hold things for him, and in this way gets an idea of the practical use of tools. He may be kept at this for a long time, and this is the period that will test his patieuce.

"It is always a red letter day for the beginner when the foreman gives him a piece of metal and tells him to make a drinking cup. He has seen it done many times, but when he comes to cutting out the tin and getting it into shape his fingers seem to be all thumbs. He wants to make a good cup, but his anxiety will knock it out of shape. When it is all brightly polished it is taken to the foreman for inspection. Nine times out of ten the beginner is told to take it home as a memento. He feels very happy, but he would not think so much of his work if he knew that the real reason that it was not taken by the foreman was that it could not be sold.

"The boy will soon find this out when the foreman keeps him making cups until he gets a perfect one. From a cup he goes to other things of minor importance, which he is kept at until he gradually acquires skill. It depends upon the boy himself how much time he will waste before he becomes an expert. If he is civil and obliging the journeymen will teach him pattern drawing, and in this way the boy will learn how to block out the models of every kind of work and cut out patterns for himself.

"During the last thirty years there have been many changes in the tinsmith's trade. Machinery has taken the place of hand labor in the manufacture of nearly all utensils, but this has made no change in the tinsmith's condition. Organized labor has protected the workman. The principal machines in the assortment shops are presses giving the general outlines of manufactured goods, and lathes, which are used to perfect the lines of spinning. An important fact in the trade is the wheeling machine, which gives the bright polish and puts on the finishing touches. The polishing used to be done by hammers on an anvil, but the wheeling machine can do better and more work. During the five years that a boy ought to spend in learning this trade he ought to become expert in the use of all the machinery, if he has had the proper instruction. A boy will learn the trade better in a shop than in a trade school."—New York Recorder.

The First False Hair.

In very early days, as now, the hair was sometimes thin and it had to be eked out in various ways to make believe that nature had been spendthrift to all alike. About the first description extant of woman's hair speaks of "plaited locks," known as "Gretchen braids" to us. To make these braids seem longer, silk the color of the hair was braided in. Then they they took to putting the braids in cases of silk, elongating them with all sorts of stuff till they looked like umbrellas in covers. The Chinese pigtail is a modification of this style.—Washington Star.

THE LESSONS OF '76

BY JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE.

Middle aged men must remember how very different the celebration of the Fourth of July was during their boyhood from what it is in these days. Everything of course seems tame after maturity in contrast with its seeming in our early teens.

The civil war, with its terrible tension, solicitude, agitation, uncertainty, made the youngest of us feel old.

But, apart from age and event, the Fourth has in its observance long ceased to be what it was before the war. That great strife naturally dwarfed the minor but not less heroic struggle of the last century and rendered us comparatively indifferent to its commemoration. We should still remember, however, that our independence was won by trials, by hardships, by unflinching fortitude, to which in our later abundance and prosperity we were necessarily strangers.

In this generation we can scarcely realize, so altered are our surroundings, what our forefathers endured, suffered and dared, as colonists, in taking up arms against the exactions and oppressions of the mother country—one of the strongest governments and greatest powers of the Old World. They did not hesitate to oppose regular, disciplined soldiers, who had fought on many fields, with raw recruits, having no other weapons than such as they could get in an emergency, and no other hope than that inspired by love of freedom, and the resolution to resist tyranny to the death. Those were indeed the times to test courage and patriotism, and the hardy colonists never winced or faltered.

It is pleasant to recall the ringing words of Patrick Henry at the beginning of the troubles, when he declared at the old Continental congress in Philadelphia, in 1774: "British oppression has effaced the boundaries of the colonies. The distinctions between Virginians, New Yorkers, Pennsylvanians and New Englanders are no more. I am not a Virginian; I am an American!" The seven arduous, often desperate, years of the Revolution, in which we were so generously aided by the French, proved the stuff we were made of. Always without money, often without food or clothing or any proper equipment for war, Washington sustained defeat after defeat with equanimity and unfailing courage, and won his cause at last at Yorktown. Defeat and disaster never diminished his faith in ultimate triumph or dampened his excessive ardor. Within three months, during 1780, two American armies, numerous for that day, were destroyed, and the most formidable of the partisan bands in the south, under Sumter, was dispersed by Tarleton.

Nevertheless a detachment from Cornwallis' forces was wholly defeated in North Carolina, at King's mountain, by 900 of our militia, and 1,100 of the enemy were killed, wounded and captured. Thus failure and success alternated until the final and complete victory gained by the surrender of Cornwallis, with more than 8,000 men, including sailors.

Our troops raised during the Revolution numbered some 230,000 Continental soldiers and 56,000 militia. How small this force seems, compared with the grand armies the north and south marshaled in 1861–5; how insignificant the cost of life and treasure then to the estimate in the later struggle, of a loss of a million of men and more than a billion of money. But in the civil war the Union was immensely rich; it had unlimited credit; we were provided with every martial requirement. In 1776–83 the gallant patriots marched often over frozen roads with shoeless and bleeding feet; fought while half famished and half clad; left their plows in the furrow; quitted the harvest with scythes in their hands to give their lives, if need be, for independence. They were intrepid sons of intrepid sires; they were genuine grit, of unconquerable stock.

Too much honor cannot be paid them. We, their descendants, should always keep their memory green. Their example should never be permitted to grow dim. We should not allow the celebration of the glorious Fourth to languish. We owe it to them to keep it up as we did in the earlier days, when we were boys. We are boys now, though of an older sort; we should be boys in our enthusiasm and rejoicing over the immortal day that disclosed the spirit of 1776, commemorative of the stern period that put us to the proof, that tried us by fire in the crucible of adversity and brought us out pure gold.

Let us observe the Fourth as aforetime, with bonfires and illuminations, with music and cannon, with fireworks and reading the Declaration, with large assemblies and patriotic speeches, with every form of sympathy and demonstration belonging to the day and deserving of ourselves.

A Gem from Webster.

America has proved that it is practicable to elevate mankind—that portion which, in Europe, is called the laboring or lower class—to raise them to self respect, to make them competent to act a part in the great right and great duty of self government; and she has proved that this may be done by education and the effusion of knowledge. She holds out an example, a thousand times more encouraging than ever was presented before, to those nine-tenths of the human race who are born without hereditary fortune or hereditary rank.

Wanted a Light.

Wandering Wykes—Madam, you couldn't give me a morsel to eat, could you?

Kind Lady—I have some firecracker pie that I made up for the Fourth.

Wandering Wykes—That will do very nicely.

Wandering Wykes (half an hour later)—And now, madam, may I trouble you for a match?

A Plain Tale.

He packed some rockets in a box,
And thought he'd safely hid it;
The cook used them to light the fire—
They did it.

Everybody Takes It!

WE refer to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, and when we say that everybody likes it, we speak the truth. If a subscriber does not get his paper on the day of publication, he comes around to the office to see what is the matter, If he didn't care anything about it, would he inconvenience himself that much to get the paper? So we are perfectly justified in saying that everybody wants it. Another point about the JOURNAL is that it is carefully perused by its readers. The smallest item in the most obscure corner of the paper does not escape observation. Why is this? Simply because there isn't a dull item in it. A paper makes mistakes, and the JOURNAL is no exception to this rule. Sometimes there are articles in the paper which should be left out and sometimes there are items left out which should be published. But the matter in the JOURNAL is all interesting and readable.

FRIGHTFUL WRECK

A TRAIN ON THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD TELESCOPED.

Twelve Dead and a Large Number Injured, Several of Them Fatally—Probably the Result of an Operators Carelessness.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 25.—A fearfu wreck took place here during the morning. The first section of the Western express, which is due here soon after midnight, was flagged below the city because it was late. The second section came thundering along at the rate of fifteen miles an hour and dashed into the first section, killing nine and injuring some seventy.

The following are the identified dead;

RICHARD ADAMS, Harrisburg.
KATE GINGERICH, Norristown; Pa.
MRS. URAH HEBBNER.
DANIEL MASON, Hagerstown, Md.
JOHN RAYMOND, Harrisburg.
E. M. WIBLOCK, Cleveland.
E. M. WHITLOCK, Pittsburg.
ROBERTS S. RAYMOND, Columbus, O.
CHARLES S. LEE, Allegheny, Pa.
MRS. NORSTROM and her son, aged 17.

F. G. O. Ely, Buffalo; J. J. Cone, Jersey City; F. W. Ferthing, Buffalo; Dan Mason, Clear Spring, Md., will die.

Cars were piled in confusion over all the tracks and forty feet high. The Westinghouse car, which was attached to the first section, was upturned and totally demolished. The screams of the wounded could be heard for squares and one of the most heartrending scenes took place. Before the debris could be moved several more persons died in the wreck.

A deluging rain was pouring down, causing those who were injured to suffer intense pain. The engine of the second section telescoped several of the cars of the first section. A crowd soon gathered and an ambulance carried the wounded, numbering up to this time seventy men, women and children, to the city hospital. Several persons who were injured left the wreck and went to various houses in the vicinity and it is impossible to ascertain the names of all who are missing. Robert Pitcairn, of the Pennsylvania road, was on the train but escaped uninjured. The city hospital is a mass of maimed. morning. The city physicians were called out to assist in caring for the injured. The cause of the accident is not definitely known, but there seems to be a mistake in reading of signals. Several Hungarians, who live in the vicinity of the accident, were busy robbing the dead, but were arrested and locked up. An immense crowd has gathered at the scene of the wreck, and the entire police force has been called out to preserve order. Several undertakers are busy, and the wrecking crews have been at work carrying away the debris. One track is now open for traffic.

Richard Adams, who is among the killed, is a furniture dealer of this city. He had gone to Philadelphia with his wife, who remained in the city.

The road officials are seemingly paralyzed by the extent of the disaster, which is by far the worst the road has known in many years. They decline to make any statement whatever, but are giving the wounded every attention possible.

W. H. Woodard, the porter of the Westinghouse car, who was the only one in the car hurt, said: "We hadn't the slightest warning. We had no idea but what the track was clear. Most everyone was in bed. Mr. Westinghouse had just told me he was going to retire when the crash came. How anyone escaped serious injury is a mystery."

The operator at Steelton is alleged to have been responsible for the accident in having given Engineer Kelly the wrong signal. The sharp curve at Dock street also made the disaster more serious. The mangled bodies were in several instances unrecognizable. One car had to be jacked up to recover the body of a woman whose head was crushed to a shapeless mass.

NORMAN, O. T., June 27.—Advices from County D say that the United States deputy marshals, twelve in number, who were searching for the Santa Fe train robbers, met the Dalton boys, who were suaposed to have committed the crime, a short distance from Taloga, but did not have the courage to capture them.

The Vega in Port.

NEW YORK, June 27.—The steamship Vega which was five days overdue and which was supposed to have been in collision at sea with the sailing vessel Fred B. Tayor, arrived at quarantine at 5:12 a. m. She reports that she was not in collision with the Taylor or any other vessel.

Whittier Will Write the Ode.

AMESBURY, Mass., June 27.—It is now a settled fact that the poet Whittier will write the opening ode for the world's fair at Chicago. When the matter was first broached to the poet he was unable to give a definite answer, but improved health will permit him to do so. The title is still a secret to everyone except Mr. Whittier.

Borup Recalled.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Secretary Elkins has issued an order recalling Captain Borup from Paris. Captain Borup's recall was requested by the French government.

Will Succeed Borup.

NEW YORK, June 27.—Lieutenant Glassford has arrived here on his way from Washington to Paris where he will temporarily assume the duties of military attache of the American legation in place of Captain Borup.

Wisconsin Legislature.

MADISON, June 27.—The special session of the legislature to reapportion the state into senate and assembly districts will meet at 10 a. m.

As It Used to Be.

The following song was published some years ago. It was written by the late Royal Tyler, formerly chief judge of the supreme court of Vermont. He was the author of "The Algerine Captive," a novel which was popular over half a century ago:

Squeak the fife and beat the drum,
Independence Day is come!
Let the roasting pig be bled,
Quick, twist off the cockerel's head;
Quickly rub the pewter platter,
Heap the nutcake fried in butter;
Set the cups and beaker glass,
The pumpkin and the apple sauce.

Send the keg to shop for brandy,
Maple sugar we have handy;
Independent, staggering Dick,
A noggin mix of swiggering thick;
Sal, put on your russet skirt—
Jotham, get your boughten shirt,
Today we dance to tiddle diddle,
Here comes Sambo with his fiddle.

Sambo, take a dram of whisky
And play up "Yankee Doodle" frisky;
Moll, come leave your witched tricks
And let us have a reel of six.
Father and mother shall make two,
Sal, Moll and I stand all a-row;
Sambo, play the dance with quality,
This is the day of blest equality.

Father and mother are but men,
And Sambo is a citizen.
Come, foot it Sal—Moll; figure in,
And mother, you dance up to him;
Now saw as fast as you can do,
And father you cross o'er to Sambo,
Thus we dance, and thus we play,
On glorious Independence Day.

Timely Thoughts.

Fourth of July orations should not be empty glorifications of America, but rather expositions of American freedom, said the late Rev. Howard Crosby, which will equally resist the tyranny of the government and the tyranny of the mob, which insists on law and order as the only security of personal liberty, and which will crush the anarchist as quickly as the despot. The great public should have these fundamental doctrines expounded to them on our great national holiday, and the people should so thoroughly understand them that any attempt by man or church to mar the symmetry of our liberties would be met by an effectual and crushing indignation. We do not sufficiently appreciate our enormous advantages, and hence we are careless regarding their conservation. Were these advantages lost the world would be set back many centuries. Let us therefore encourage true American sentiment as the antidote to the poison introduced among us from foreign sources, and let our Fourth of July be consecrated to this elevation of the American standard.

Here It Is Again.

All night we heard the clanging bells
And the cannon's loud report,
And at the early hour of three
Our boys began their sport.

Our eyes are filled with battle smoke;
We're deaf in either ear,
And thus by all wondrous signs
We know the Fourth is here.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

The various encampment committees have been busy as bees and have everything nearly in readiness for the great event.

See those Grand Army medals at Saake's; a souvenier of the Park Region encampment. Everybody wants one.

Reckon we are going to celebrate the 4th in great shape this year. A carload of fire crackers arrived last week as a starter.

Don't forget to call at the JOURNAL office and order your cards if you are a vet. and want some elegant cards. Call and see samples.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work, from a fine handsome label to a full sheet colored poster in a first class manner.

Boyd & Clark are not painting the Commercial red—they are just painting it. We hear it rumored that they know how to keep hotel.

Maj. Mix wants to secure a Red River cart for next week. If any one knows where such an animal can be secured he will do the Maj. a favor by informing him.

Comrade John Pelham was up from Fertile on Saturday looking for a house to rent. John has sold out down there and intends to make Crookston his future home.

Remember to reserve your seats for the week at Tom Morris' store on June 30th. The Fierce-Columbus company is said to be the best one that will visit our city this year.

Al. Sargeant went up to Red Lake Falls on Monday to see about the horses burned in the fire; says he found nine horses dead and four so badly injured that there was no hope of saving them.

From the southern portion, from the central portion and from all over the state come reports of a vast army of G. A. R. and others who are coming to our encampment next week. The JOURNAL bids all welcome.

When transferring our subscription list to our mailer several names were inadvertently left out. Any subscriber who does not receive the paper regularly will confer a favor on the JOURNAL by notifiying this office.

Max Errieson came in from the lake on Monday with the index finger of his left hand done up in a rag. Splitting kindling wood with a tommy-hatchet and made a mis-lick. He drove over to Fisher on Tuesday morning.

Our reporter interviewed that genial Scotchman, Tom Johnstone, of Fisher, who was enroute home from a trip west, last week. Tom says he is well satisfied with Polk county in preference to anything he has seen out there.

S. L. Collins says his father writes him that they have been having great rains in Iowa which are doing immense damage to crops. One man down there said to Collins Sr., "Don't be discouraged, Collins, turnips and buckwheat have a chance yet!"

Ex-mayor McKinnon returned from Chicago looking as dry as though he had never been in that wigwam at all. He thinks that Tammany will work in the harness all right, but he says their schemes and machinations are past finding out.

Sauk Centre Avalanche: Henry Knott left last night for Crookston to take a position on the JOURNAL of that thriving city. He has been on the Avalanche force, and it can cheerfully testify to his faithfulness to work and gentlemanliness of deportment. He is an acquisition to any office.

A few Democrats and boys attempted to "ratify" on Thursday evening of last week, and wasted a little kerosene oil in a half a dozen torches or so. The band headed the forlorn hope and the rain helped to dampen the ardor of the paraders who seemed to lack enthusiasm even without wetting down their forms. If that is a sample of Cleveland enthusiasm his name is Dennis already.

A. C. Schmidt is painting H. Steenerson's residence.

For plain or fancy job work leave orders at the JOURNAL job rooms.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

Fargo and Moorhead will contribute many on the occasion of our encampment next week, we are told.

S. B. Palmer was up from Lockhart on Monday to talk gasoline engines with some of our citizens who are interested in those things.

Alderman & Finseth are completing the building on Broadway that they commenced some time since and suspended operations on pending litigation.

Advices from Grand Forks are to the effect that not only the Grand Army boys but every body else intends to visit Crookston during encampment week. The JOURNAL bids them a hearty welcome.

A. C. Schmidt has finished the relief work (that's what he calls it, whatever he means) at the Episcopal church and that edifice now shines forth resplendent. A. C. is an artist of no mean proportions.

Bishop's genial traveling man, McClellan, attended services at the Congregational church on Sunday evening, and loaned his rich bear-tone voice to the choir for the evening. Mac knows how to sing as well as how to hustle.

Maj. Mix informs the JOURNAL that an excursion train will be run from St. Vincent on Monday next, arriving in this city at 10 o'clock a. m. This will afford all who desire an opportunity to spend the 4th in Crookston, Half fare rates will prevail during the encampment.

A. C. Schmidt has kept his painters so busy trying to keep up with his orders that some of them got rattled on Monday morning, went clear off their feet and started in to paint the town a beautiful carmine. They are all on deck again ready for the regular order of business.

A. C. Wilkinson, right of way agent for the Great Northern R. R., was in the city on Tuesday, dropped in to make this office a pleasant call and complimented us on the improvements he noticed, He says that the extension from St. Hilaire to Thief River Falls will be completed by Sept. 1st.

Maj. Mix attended the tournament last Wednesday and on his return was saying to the boys: "Say, fellows, I want to tell you on the quiet that those Grand Forks people know just how to entertain. Never enjoyed myself better in my life—and what a parade they did get up with no material at hand! It was a corker and no mistake.

After several weeks wrestling with repairs we begin to see daylight ahead and can consider our improvements nearly completed. We have yet some work to do to fully complete the program, however, we are now ready and shall be glad to greet all our old friends and many new ones at the old stand. To one and all we extend a hearty invitation to come and see us.

Lots of work in our job department for the past week has kept us too busy to think twice in the same spot; however, that's what we are here for and we like it. We are now fully ready to meet all the demands upon our time and talents and invite your patronage fully assured that we can supply your wants in the line of plain or fancy job printing. Call at the JOURNAL office and see what we can do for you.

B. F. Welter was up from Edna on Saturday. He informed the JOURNAL that he has sowed 300 acres in wheat and oats and barley, sufficient for use upon the farm and is making extensive improvements this season. He is doing lots of fencing and intends to buy a flock of sheep, believing that sheep will pay well in this country. He says that he is more than pleased with the horses he bought of M. R. Brown this spring.

Rev. R. H. Battey preached an eloquent discourse on Sabbath evening on the relation of the press to the pulpit, which was listened to with good attention by a fairly large audience. Mr. B. is indefatigable in his efforts to build up that church, and its members should do all in their power to stay his hands—to strengthen and encourage him. Whether they could do more than they are doing is a matter for each individual conscience to settle.

Al. Sargeant met with a severe loss on Saturday last. Together with Bill Welsh and others he had several horses at work on the grade near Red Lake Falls, and the barn in which the horses were kept took fire and was destroyed. Four of Al. Sargeant's horses were burned to death, one of Bill Welsh's and the other horses in the stable were very badly burned. Bill's broncho team broke out and got away. The cause of the fire seems to have been a smudge that was carelessly left smouldering when the men left camp to go to town for the evening.

Fierce & Columbus all next week at the opera house.

The Northwestern hotel now boasts of a wooden awning over the sidewalk in front.

The Fierce & Columbus Co. at the opera house all next week. Don't fail to see this company.

A. C. Cowing's new residence approaches completion. He will soon have an elegant residence.

If you want neat and stylish job work call and see what we can do for you. Any kinds—all kinds.

Mrs. W. E. Walker and her sister Mrs. W. L. McDonald have returned from a visit to friends in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Harry Ives came down from St. Hilaire on Monday evening to be in time for the People's party convention on Wednesday.

The Minnesota Hall Association continues to do a rattling business in insurance and are now insuring hundreds of acres daily. See one of their agents or call at their office in the Reckitt block.

A. H. Gaab, of Fergus Falls, an old schoolmate of Fred Rauch's spent Sunday in the city with Fred. He says that Fergus Falls will be represented at the Encampment next week over 100 strong.

Felix Fournet had the iron posts for the front to his new building put in this week and the iron caps upon them. The fact that these iron furnishings were cast at Morrisey's foundry, speaks volumes for that institution.

Mine host Clark, of the Commercial hotel, bravely grasped his fishing rod in his right hand, and a small boy in his left and marched down to the river on Monday, and "he never came back"—until the small boy had caught a fine large string of fish.

The trotters were kept busy on the track last week and this, preparing for the great events to occur next week. Doc. Warninger had got the track in excellent condition and we have heard old horsemen say that it is the finest track they ever saw. Big times next week.

Dr. C. E. Dampier was the first one to take a receipt for a paid up subscription in our new office. We had scarcely moved our desk into the new office before Doc. appeared, eager to set his subscription ahead. We are now ready to receive 4,000 or 5,000 more. Call and see us.

Our new Potter press was kept humming during the latter part of last week. Besides the JOURNAL and the Message we had a run of 10,000 programs for the encampment, and received several other jobs which kept the press moving right busily. That's what we like to see.

The committee on decorations offer prices for the best decorated store or residence for encampment week, as follows: Best house or store, $15.00; second best, $10.00; third best, $5.00; fourth best, $2.50. The committee is prepared to furnish evergreen trees at 20 cents a piece, or three for fifty cents.

Frank Jerome has workmen about Hotel St. Louis as thick as they can stand in the endeavor to get the building ready for occupancy by next week. Says he thinks he can make it all right. When complete he will have one of the finest hotels in the city, and they do say Frank knows how to keep hotel.

Street Commissioner McDonald has done a good job cleaning up the streets and he says if our business men will now co-operate with him by keeping their waste papers out of the streets the task of keeping them neat will be comparatively light. Some seem to be trying to do this while a few seem to be negligent.

W. H. Averill, who was in from Fosston, said to a JOURNAL reporter: I do not like the nomination of Cleveland one little bit, and I believe the opposition of Hill in New York will defeat him. I think any other man would stand a better chance of election, and I am positive our party made a greater mistake than the republicans did.

Pete Hoffman had his juvenile drum corps out on parade on Saturday evening. The little chaps look nicely in their uniforms and deserve very high compliments for the proficiency they have attained in the short time they have been drilling. They will be all right for encampment week. Mr. Hoffman has shown himself a most excellent drill-master.

Since we have changed our forms and got our new press at work our subscription list has grown in a manner truly gratifying, as it seems to be an evidence of appreciation on the part of our patrons. The JOURNAL has always advocated the welfare of the people, and will always strive to be the true friend of the people, believing this course to be for the true interests of the country. We have opinions and shall express them on all the leading topics of the day, and we cordially invite all who admire a frank, fearless expression of opinion to become subscribers to the JOURNAL.

Erick Hoff was in from St. Hilaire this week.

Everybody seems to be in the city this week—i. e. everybody in the county. The nominating convention may have something to do with it.

The rumor that one of Ed. Walsh's boys was nearly killed on Saturday by a vicious horse, arose, no doubt, from the fact that he was thrown from a horse and bruised up somewhat in the deal.

Miss Francis Gage will address the ladies of the Congregational church and all others interested, at the Congregational church next Saturday, July 2nd, at 4 p. m. Ladies of all other churches cordially invited.

M. E. Bartlett sets an example that other farmers could profitably follow by hauling straw and piling it in convenient piles along the northern line of his farm for the purpose of making frost smudges later should they be required.

Rev. R. H. Battey will speak at the Congregational church next Sunday morning, and conduct the communion service. Miss Francis Gage, of St. Paul, will speak at the evening service. A very cordial welcome extended to all.

Tony Hansen, one of the proprietors of the Central House in this city, died on Tuesday from a complication of diseases superinduced by la grippe. He had been ailing for some time and had been away in hopes of finding relief, returning a few days since.

Mrs. Anna Marshall, of Bismarck, who was in the city a few days visiting her brother, Dan. McDonald, left Wednesday morning for her home, intending to visit her brothers near Grand Forks on her way. Mrs. M. has been in St. Paul under medical treatment for three months, and is returning to her home entirely cured.

Frank T. Haseltine: My business this spring has been excellent, and I am now making preparations to go on the road and canvass for the fall trade. My strawberries have been injured somewhat by the inclement weather, but I shall have a pretty fair crop, I think. I anticipate a lively fall trade for this whole country this fall.

A. D. Stephens returned on Wednesday morning from a trip to New York, Boston, and Washington, D. C., looking very much improved by the trip. While in Washington he called upon President Harrison to explain the referendum plan, which so impressed his excellency that we expect to see mention made of it in the next message to Congress.

The Crookston base ball team went up to Red Lake Falls on Friday to play the Falls club and returned with victory gently roosting on their banners by a score of 16 to 17. At the seventh inning the score stood 9 to 3 in favor of Crookston, at which time the Crookston team changed pitchers and the Falls team made a great lead to the finish. The boys all speak very highly of the manner in which they were treated by the Falls boys—they were given the freedom of the city and made welcome to the best the town afforded in the line of eatables and drinkables.

From Dr. Warninger, who was called to Red Lake Falls to attend to the horses that were injured in the fire of Saturday night, the JOURNAL learns further particulars. Eight horses were burned to death, and one was so badly burned that he was shot to put him out of his misery, and four so badly burned as to render recovery problematical, though Doc says they were doing nicely when he left there. The stable was a premature affair constructed of posts set in the ground, the top covered with straw and the sides open, which allowed any horse that could break his halter to escape, which several of them did. The injured horses were all burned about the head. The fire evidently started from a smudge that the men in charge had supposed to be entirely out when they left it to go to town. The loss will be a severe one to Al Sargeant, taking as it does four of his best horses, while Bill Walsh losing one and having another seriously injured, suffers a considerable loss.

The lecture given by Mrs. Hoffman in the Methodist church on Saturday evening was well attended and very interesting, as the speaker is very eloquent and very much in earnest. It is quite evident that she is impressed with the idea that there is only one way to accomplish the desired end, and that through the Prohibition party, and the way she scored the old parties was a caution. One would get the idea that to be a member of either of the old parties constituted a greater crime than to be a liquor-seller, even. While the speaker was very much in earnest, her views were somewhat circumscribed—not to say extremely narrow on many points. Her lecture on Sabbath afternoon was on the pathetic order, in which field she is a master of eloquence. As furnishing food for some good, profitable thinking these lectures were invaluable and should have been heard by all, but the class of people best calculated to have been benefitted by them were conspicuous only by their absence.

W. N. Godfrey of Maple Bay made the JOURNAL office a pleasat call on Wednesday.

Editor George of the Fertile Journal was in the city Wednesday to attend the Alliance convention. He says the people of Fertile are all figuring on attending the encampment.

Judging from the length of the trains run on the Fosston branch it would seem as though there was business enough on that line to warrant a daily service instead of a tri-weekly.

The work of decorating buildings already commenced will be pretty general during the last of this week, and by Monday the city will be gaily decorated for the festive scenes of the coming week. Everybody talks of decorating.

Many of our friends from the country aviled themselves of the opportunity afforded by the convention on Wednesday to drop in and give us a social chat for which we wish to return our thanks and extend a cordial invitation to all our friends to call when convenient.

Tom Harris has begun the work of moving A. Dufresne's residence and Sylvester & Finseth's hardware store to make room for the new brick block to be built by Ed Barrette and A. Dufresne. Work upon the new block will be commenced as soon as the site can be cleared.

Miss Frances Gage, of St. Paul, has been engaged by the Women's Board of Missions both home and foreign to visit the Congregational churches in the interest of missions. She will speak in the lecture room of the Congregational church, Saturday, at 3 o'clock p. m. All ladies interested in the mission work are cordially invited to be present.

The young four year old daughter of F. F. Williams was severely bitten on the left cheek on Wednesday morning by a dog which the child was playing with. Mr. W. and his wife took the child and drove in from their farm, in Lowell, and Dr. Dunlop dressed the wound and gave his opinion that nothing more serious than a bad scar would result.

A young lady passing along Main street on Wednesday morning was thrown to the ground and quite severely injured by a storm door being blown against her. The door, instead of having been taken proper care of, had carelessly been left leaning against a building to cause some such an accident. The JOURNAL was unable to learn the name of the victim of this untoward accident.

The editorial family took a drive into the country on Tuesday evening to dine with Aaron Cooke, Esq., on his 81st birthday, at his residence four miles out. The old gentleman looks as hale and hearty as many a man of sixty, and looks to be good for many a return of the occasion. After a few pleasant hours and a bountiful repast we returned wishing the old gentleman many happy returns of the day.

D. J. Bell, of West Superior, Wis., supreme organizer of the Northwestern Benevolent Society, is in the city with a view to organizing a local branch in this city. The object of this society is to furnish insurance at lower rates than the old-line companies, and it also covers a wider range. Mr. Bell comes to us well recommended by several of our former citizens who are now residents of West Superior, and is also well known and highly recommended by N. J. Mosher, of our city. We have not had time to fully investigate the subject as yet, but from what we have seen we are led to regard it very favorably.

Arries & Lancaster have received another carload of horses and E. M. is kept busy disposing them off.

DON'T READ THIS!

This is only of interest to farmers and others who have growing grain this season. Everything indicates that during the present summer there will be constant rain and thunder storms. Any person who has observed the different seasons in this or any other state knows that during a rainy summer hail storms are of frequent occurrence. Much damage is done to growing grain every year by hail. No locality is entirely exempt from this disastrous element. You may escape for a year or two, but you are sure to have a hail storm sooner or later.

The only way to protect yourself from loss by hail is to insure your crop. But the rates are so high with most of the hail companies doing business in this state that the farmers cannot afford to insure their crops. The only way to get cheap and reliable hail insurance is through a mutual concern—a company which covers the entire state and is not confined to one county. The risks must be distributed over a large area, so that if one county should be hailed there will still be plenty of uninjured grain to pay the losses.

The Minnesota Hail Association of Crookston covers the entire state. It is a mutual concern, with but few officers and each one working on a commission. This company can give you cheap and safe protection.

For further particulars see by-laws or talk with any of the company's agents. It will pay you to investigate this matter.

Of the Park Region Association of the G. A. R. a Decided Success.

A Large Attendance of Soldiers and Citizens From all Parts of the District.

Plenty of Attractions Furnished and a Good Time Enjoyed By All.

Speeches, Songs, Music and Amusements of all Kinds Were Indulged In.

The "Glorious" Fourth.

Another Fourth of July has been written on the pages of American history.

The national holiday was celebrated by the Queen City as never before, and every citizen may well feel proud of Crookston and her patriotic people. The city was dressed in her best; the streets were lined with evergreens and the national colors were flung to the breezes from the housetops, while every business house and many of the residences were drapped with bunting. Pictures of Grant, Sherman, Logan, Sheridan and Custer, were to be seen everywhere, and mottoes of welcome and G. A. R. badges and other insigina were to be seen on every hand. It was a gala day—one long to be remembered by those who participated in the festivities.

Despite the fact that the third fell on Sunday, the celebration began on that day as usual. The enthusiasm of the small boy and the patriot could not be checked, and the time honored fire-cracker was brought forth and during the evening and all night long the snapping of the crackers and the booming of the anvil could be heard. At sunrise a cannon salute was fired, and the day was ushered in with as much noise and display as the oldest veteran could wish for.

The procession moved about 11:15, with the marshal of the day at the head, followed by Chief of Police Gonyea and his force. Next came the posts of the G. A. R. Park Region association, the Sons of Veterans and St. John's society. Then came a float upon which sat forty-three little girls dressed in white, each wearing a crown with the name of the state she represented upon it. In the centre of the group stood the Goddess of Liberty. Following this came the Ladies Relief Corps, and then the Crookston drum corps composed of girls and boys in charge of Peter Hoffman. The Crookston Fire Department followed the drum corps with steady step, and then came the Juvenile Fire Department, the school children—the girls dressed in white and the boys in black. The secret organizations were next in line and were followed by the calithumpians in goodly numbers and ridiculous costumes. The orators of the day, the mayor, aldermen, city officers and citizens in carriages came next. The rear of the procession was brought up by trade emblems, among the most conspicuous of which were Larsen, Carpenter & Co., with a traction engine hauling a load of coal, a separator and three wagons, all loaded with people, and Stone & Columbus with an engine, wagon, mower, hay rake and buggy. The line of march was from the school grounds, along Third street to Main, Main to Fletcher, Fletcher to Broadway, Broadway to Houston Ave., Houston Ave. to Ash, Ash to Robert, Robert to Main, Main to Second, Second to Park. Arriving at the park the exercises were opened by prayer by Gen. Adams after which Mayor Anglim gave a hearty welcome to the Grand Army boys and their families and the thousands who came to enjoy the festivities of the day with them, after which the Declaration of Independence was read by J. G. McGrew, Esq., then the Crookston Glee Club sang the Star Spangled Banner, then Mayor Anglim introduced Gov. W. R. Merriam, who spoke as follows:

It is a happy coincidence, Mr. President and fellow citizens, that the re-union of the soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic should occur upon the nation's natal day.

Insensibly there arises before us in vivid recollection all the incidents that resulted in freeing the nation from bondage and in founding a magnificent republic.

We see again the fathers of the nation as they gathered stern and resolute for the purpose of promulgating the magnificent document that declared that men were free and equal, and asserting that a people were ready to enforce their demands upon the fields of war.

Today, all over this fair land, the workshop is closed, the husbandman has left his fields, and the counting house is vacant that a nation of happy people may celebrate the birthday of the republic.

As we look back over the century we are unable to realize the mighty forces that have been at work to evolve the changes that have resulted in that magnificent, moral and mental development that greets us upon this one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the founding of the nation. The onward has far eclipsed any results which the wildest dreams of the imagination could have foretold. Our harvests might almost feed the world. Our materials find a market in every part of the globe. Machinery, the product of American brain and capital, is the acme of perfection. From ocean to ocean stretches a perfect network of railroads. Our cities are marvels of architectural stability and beauty. Our public and private institutions flourish. Our educational system, if not perfect, has an enduring foundation, and is equal to the requirements of an exacting civilization. The transactions in our money marts give tone to the commericial pulse. From thirteen stars, fourty-four are counted upon the blue field of the country's emblem. With almost dynamic force the nation has advanced upon a tide of prosperity unexampled in the history of nations. Our system of government has withstood the trial of over a century and is firmly entrenched, upon a foundation that has for its corner stone the patriotism and loyalty of the people. Since Washington became president at least a dozen different kingdoms of the old world have been overthrown and either destroyed or merged into a form of government granting enlarged liberties to their people. Our ancient friend, France, after bloody revolutions, has tried the government of the Bourbons, convention, directory, consulate, empire and citizen king, of hereditary sovereign and republic, of empire and again is republic.

The great German families, long autocratic in power, have been compelled to grant constitutions to their people. England, from whom the colonies were wrested, has become more republic in character, and is constantly granting new suffrages to her people; and today Ireland is knocking at her door, insisting upon being granted a parliament of her own.

Amid the vicissitudes and uncertainties that have befallen other nations, we have stood firmly entrenched behind the embodied in the constitution and upheld and maintained in the personality of Washington. In all that pertains to material and intellectual development and in the rapid increase of population our progress has been the wonder of the nations of the civilized world. To-day we stand upon the dividing line between the first and second century of constitutional government. No clouds hang over us and there are no evidences of convulsions under our feet. What shall be our condition when the second century of our national existence shall have passed? We have thus far met each exigency as it has arisen. Shall we be able to maintain ourselves when entirely new conditions in our social and intellectual existence arise? We may look for a continuous growth of population and wealth. Our cities will expand; the vast unoccupied territories to the west and south will become the home of the husbandman; art, that refines and acts like a civilizing influence, shall flourish to a degree only experienced in other lands old in age and rich in history. Science in all its various phases shall add its part to our development. Bright with hope the future is as dazzling as the wildest imagination can paint. What shall be our social condition? With growing cities and fully occupied lands, with the spirit of unrest that comes with large numbers of unemployed men and women (the result of largely increased population), we may be met with a condition hitherto unknown in the states, and one that may lead to vast distress and anxiety, and possibly revolution. A great floating mass of humanity ready for any emergency that may arise is in society, and should be guarded against by every reasonable means.

In the years before us, denser and denser will the throng become of people intent upon securing a livelihood, the competition that now prevails in commercial operations will be sharper, and we, no doubt, shall see a repetition of conditions existing in the thickly populated portions of the old world.

But the new conditions will be met, and the American people may be depended upon, loyal and true, to meet the new situations and new surroundings and overcome them with resultant honor to themselves and to the country.

I cannot refrain as I look upon the old soldiers scattered about in this audience from calling your attention to the fact that in the pages of our history as a state which tells of the development and the remarkable progress of Minnesota, which speaks of our fertile soil, of our hidden mines, of our magnificent forests and of our fair cities and hamlets; which tell of our mighty river, capable of bearing upon its broad bosom the commerce of a hundred cities, of the beautiful lakes which dot our fair landscape—there are none that burn with more brightness than the ones which tell of the achievements of our citizen soldiery.

Soon after I landed in St. Paul, on a bright October morning in 1861, I stood by and

SAW THE SECOND REGIMENT,

Minnesota volunteers, preparing for their march for the southern country to take part in putting down the great rebellion. I see them now as they marched down the street to the grand music of war, with banners flying and bayonets glistening in the atumnal sunlight. I see here and there one drop from the ranks for a moment to say good bye to a mother or to a wife, or to fondle some little one, and with hurried embrace pass on with the great crowd to the theater of war. I see them in camp, upon the picket lines, with the stars as their only comrades; I see them in the hospital sick with fever; I see them upon the battle field, wounded and dying; I see them in the prison pens, with famine and disease and death on all sides of them.

Some are buried in unknown graves, with no slab to mark their last resting place, and with only the Southern pines waving over their forgotten graves. I see some return to their homes, lay aside their knapsacks and again going to the fields, to the counting room and the workshop; their work done, their country generate and slavery a thing of the past. Grand history of grand men, who fought that the nation might live and the stain of slavery be forever stamped out as an institution from the land. The history of this regiment is the history of a hundred regiments. Another regiment of Minnesota fought at Gettysburg, one of the most memorable contests of the war. This engagement was the decisive battle of the rebellion; the fate of a nation hung in the balance and the Union soldiers were triumphant.

Just about one-third of a century ago, upon almost this day (July 3, 1863) this memorable and decisive conflict occurred.

THE FIRST MINNESOTA

was ordered to charge upon a great mass of Pickett's men as they came up in solid column prepared to drive back the Union troops. Bravely they went to the charge and over 80 per cent of them were killed and wounded, but the enemy was held in check until reinforcements came and the day was saved. Of all the magnificent fights of armies of which history speaks, where can one be found which compares in bravery and in sacrifice to this magnificent onslaught of the soldiers from Minnesota? They tell us of the charge of the 600 at Balaklava, or of the Old Guard at Waterloo when Napoleon went down and an empire vanished, but no deeds emblazoned in the pages of history surpass in bravery or patriotism the charge of the First Minnesota at Gettysburg. A monument will soon be placed on that memorable field by the loyal citizens of our own state who desire to emphasize in some permanent manner their appreciation of the brave deeds and valorous acts of the sons of our state upon that eventful field which saved the nation and made us possible as a great nation. In words of lasting granite shall be perpetuated the valorous acts of our boys in blue, and while the storms of time shall beat about, it shall endure as a monument to true patriotism and enduring loyalty.

It is one of the remarkable incidents of note in the late war of the rebellion that at the time of the firing on Fort Sumpter the Union had comparatively few soldiers, and no leaders in military or civil life; a bankrupt nation, an executive of halting and doubtful loyalty; members of the cabinet false to their trust and endeavoring by all means within their power to transfer arms and munitions of war to the South. The conditions of the outbreak of the rebellion for the success of the North were not hazardous, but the occasion demanded men of ability and sterling qualities, and they came forth responsive to the demand. Was a civil leader needed; from the prairies of Illinois and devoted lover of his country, a man of wide attainments and of undoubted statesmanship, and with high intent of striking down slavery and restoring the Union of the states; Lincoln, a grand man, a typical American. None can lessen the measure of his fame; none can pluck a single laurel from his brow. He has left the memory of a good name and the inheritance of a good example.

Great military captains came from the people. Illinois furnished a grand soldier and a mighty leader, of whom it was said that his fame was not earned by things said or things written, but by the ardous greatness of things performed. The war gave us Grant, the magnificent soldier, whose illustrious name will forever linger in the hearts of a grateful people.

There were other leaders who shared the glory of their fellows. Sherman, Sheridan and Hancock, and the Black Eagle from Illinois, the idol of a volunteer soldier, John A. Logan. It is a great tribute to a republic that it was able to furnish such illustrious names to go down to the history of the future. They are crowned with imperishable laurels of a nation's love.

There were three great scenes of the civil war; one was old John Brown lying bleeding at Harper's Ferry as a result of the first attack upon slavery. His life was sacrificed, but his soul goes marching on.

The second was at high tide, at Gettysburg, when the two armies fought the desperate conflict which resulted in the victory for the Union soldiers and the death of treason and the emancipation of the slave. But the culminating and last scene was at Appomattox when Grant received the sword of Lee and the drama was ended.

The mayor then introduced Dan. W. Lawlor, Esq., of St. Paul, who held his audience spell-bound for a half hour or so, when the exercises at the park closed for the day, after "America" had been well rendered by the Glee Club.

The exercises on Tuesday were carried out according to program and highly enjoyed. After the parade, in the absence of the speaker who had been advertised, Edward George, Esq., was called upon for an impromptu address which he gave in a masterly manner to the great enjoyment of the grizzled old vets., who, at the finish gave him a rousing three times three and a tiger. Other speakers filled in the allotted time, interposed with music by the bands and an exhibition on the drum by Comrade Peter Hoffman.

The Business Meeting.

The business meeting of the encampment, held at McKinnon hall on Wednesday at 2 o'clock was well attended. The following officers were elected:

DEPARTMENT COMMANDER, Harry Lowell, Farragut Post, Wadena.

SENIOR VICE COMMANDER, B. F. Zarracher, Col. Cobham Post, Crookston.

JUNIOR VICE COMMANDER, Capt. D. L. Wellman, of Perham.

SURGEON, Capt. Roberts, Col. Choate Post, Detroit.

CHAPLAIN, Comrade Martin, Col. F. C. Choate Post, Detroit.

After the election of officers the matter of the deficit on the cannon was taken up and discussed by several of the comrades, and the statement was made that there was still $50.00 unpaid on the gun, whereupon some comrade moved that we raise the amount right here. Which motion prevailing the hat was passed and the sum of $30.00 was found. Again the hat went around and this time only $3.00 short, the full sum was soon made up and the money placed in the hands of the quartermaster of Col. Cobham Post until a bill of sale for the gun shall be delivered to Park Region Encampment.

Many of the comrades indulged in complimentary remarks upon the manner in which they had been entertained by the citizens of Crookston, and then on motion a rising vote of thanks was given.

It was voted to hold the next annual encampment at Eagle Bend in Todd county, the time not to exceed three days.

Comrade B. F. Chapin of Col. F. C. Choate Post, Detroit, offered the following resolution:

RESOLVED: That it is the sense of this encampment that as a matter of education of the youth of this state that boards of all of the common schools procure and raise over every common school house building an American flag of suitable dimensions.

RESOLVED: That the newspapers of the Park Region be requested to publish this resolution.

On motion recess was taken until 9 o'clock on Thursday morning.

POSTS REPRESENTED.

The following Posts were represented at the encampment this week: Willis A. Gorman post, Grand Forks; S. McL. Hamilton post, Grafton; Preston post, Ashby; C. C. Parker post, Verndale; Shields post, Galesburg, Ill.; Keenfield post, Barnesville; Stanton post, Fergus Falls; Wm. Ketcham post, Ada; F. C. Choate post, Detroit; McIntyre post, Austin, Minn.; L. H. Base Ball.

On July 4th there was a game between Crookston and Fisher. As it was the first game which either of the teams had played this season, there were a good many errors made and some poor playing. The Fisher boys had a strong team and got away with the home team by a score of 13 to 9.

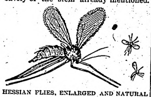
FARM GARDEN

THE HESSIAN FLY.

Methods Practiced for Circumventing This Troublesome Wheat Pest.

The adult of this insect is a small two winged gnat about one-tenth of an inch long. In a general way it is like the house fly, and is even more like the mosquito in size and shape. It does no harm to wheat at this stage of its life. The eggs produced by the fly are long and slender, of a pale red color, and are attached, from one to thirty or more in a place, on the upper side of the blades of young wheat. Young grubs which hatch from the eggs make their way downward and crowd themselves between the blades and the stems. They are white, short, rather stout, without head or legs, and may be recognized from other grubs which feed on the same parts of wheat by a little bony rod, a sort of a breast bone, which is imbedded in the skin of the forward part of the body. They have no biting jaws or other mouth parts, and absorb the juices of the plants through the skin. The large ones come to lie finally in a cavity which the continued pressure of their bodies makes in the sides of the stems.

The "flaxseed" or pupa stage is the one which follows next. The change from grub to pupa takes place in the cavity of the stem already mentioned.



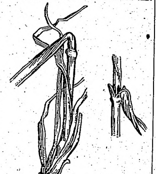
HESSIAN FLIES, ENLARGED AND NATURAL SIZE.

The pupa is smooth and shining, of a bright yellowish brown color and, as the name implies, resembles a small seed. The adult flies, which in turn emerge from the flaxseeds, loiter about until opportunity offers for placing their eggs on a suitable plant.

Two broods develop each year. Flies which have passed the cold months as flaxseeds appear early in spring and place eggs in young wheat. Most of the grubs hatching from such eggs become flaxseeds about harvest time, and many remain in this condition in stubble after the wheat is cut. The flies from this first brood emerge from stubble in time to place their eggs on fall wheat for the second brood, which pass the winter as flaxseeds. The injury done in fall consists in checking and killing the plant. Infested wheat is recognized by its unhealthy color. The spring brood of grubs also destroys the young plants, but more often the wheat gets its growth and then breaks down because of the injury done to the lower part of the stem.

In a bulletin from the Kentucky experiment station in connection with late planting, two other procedures are advised during outbreaks. First is that of burning over stubble fields as soon as possible after the wheat is cut for the purpose of destroying all flaxseeds that remain in the stems. The second practice is the planting of small plots of very early wheat as lures to the flies, so as to entice them into depositing their eggs before the regular crop comes up. The wheat of the plots can then be destroyed by deep plowing or otherwise.

These practices have the sanction of the most recent and thorough study of Hessian fly injury. It is believed that when farmers generally practice late planting with judgment, and supplement it by the precautions just mentioned, severe injury from Hessian fly need not be greatly feared.



WHEAT STALKS AFFECTED BY HESSIAN FLY.

With the above a few other methods of lessening injury may be mentioned as having had advocates among practical farmers: 1. The use of air slacked or water slacked lime sowed broadcast over growing wheat at the rate of one or two bushels per acre has been strongly advocated. 2. Close grazing by sheep has also been declared beneficial, the sheep being thought to destroy the grubs and flaxseeds. 3. The selection of "flyproof" varieties of grain, the Mediterranean wheat and red wheats being claimed to be nearly exempt from attack. The testimony on this head is, however, very conflicting, and no recommendations can be safely based on it. 4. The use of fertilizers here, as in other cases of insect attack, is to be recommended strongly as calculated to stimulate the growth of infested wheat until it is beyond danger.

In the second cut is shown the manner in which wheat stalks break after being attacked by the fly, the smaller figure showing "flaxseeds" in position.

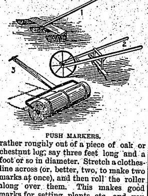
Field and Farm tells that the French farmer who is obliged to work his mare never lets her run to grass, but she is fed some cut grass or clover with the oats. The mare works hard and seldom fails to raise a colt.

GARDEN MARKERS.

Improved Implements That Can Be Made on the Farm.

The old fashioned garden marker which one has to pull over the ground is not satisfactory. If one wants to see what one is doing with one of them it is necessary to go backward, like a river crab; with a marker that is to be pushed the operator can keep the direction much easier, and see whether he makes straight marks or crooked ones.

The roller marker is all right. Any light garden roller will do, even if made rather roughly out of a piece of oak or chestnut log; say three feet long and a foot or so in diameter. Stretch a clothesline across (or, better, two, to make two marks at once), and then roll the roller along over them. This makes good marks for setting plants, etc., and you can make them perfectly straight in this manner, a task not quite so easy with the ordinary marker. Still, it will do well enough if pieces of rope are fastened around the roller, the required distance apart, one for each mark.



PUSH MARKERS.

Two more styles of push markers are also illustrated in Farm and Fireside, from which we quote. The simplest of these and most quickly made is shown in Fig. 1. Take three pieces of board, say fifteen inches long, rounded off sleigh runner fashion; have them the proper distance apart; nail a piece across the top on the straight side and fasten a handle as shown. This is easily pushed ahead and will make a good mark.

A barrow marker is shown in Fig. 2. The illustration makes an explanation unnecessary. Have the teeth slanting slightly backward. One great advantage of the roller marker is that you can make cross marks at the same time. Simply nail pieces of rope or clothesline lengthwise of the roller at the desired distances, between the pieces fastened around the roller. The roller thus arranged is shown in Fig. 3.

Kerosene Emulsion.

Kerosene emulsion, a most useful insecticide, is prepared at the Massachusetts station in the following manner: One-quarter of a pound of common bar soap is dissolved in two quarts of boiling water, and while still hot four quarts of kerosene oil are added and the whole mixture churned through a small hand force pump with a small nozzle turned into the pail. This churning must be continued about five minutes, until the whole forms a creamy white mass which becomes jellylike when cool. Care must be taken to have the solution of soap hot when the kerosene is added to it and the churning done, but it must not be near the fire.

Before applying this emulsion to the plants it should be diluted with water in the proportion of one quart of the emulsion to nine quarts of water, which must be thoroughly mixed. The above will make sixty quarts of the insecticide ready for use, but the emulsion will keep for a long time without injury and may be diluted when needed for use. This insecticide is said to be one of the best substances for the destruction of vermin on domestic animals and in henhouses.

To Transfer Sitting Hens.

It is often desirable to move hens from their own chosen nests to a place more convenient for their owner. In such cases, according to The Poultry World, this should be done at night, and the new nest should be well made and well filled with eggs. It is also important that it should be dark, and so arranged that a cover may be placed over it to shut off the hen's view of the surroundings until she has become fairly fixed in her new quarters and the old nest forgotten. Such transfers are advisable, since it is best to have a house devoted exclusively to sitters, where they will not be annoyed by the layers and where they can be properly cared for. Besides, it is often desirable to have chicks hatched at a season when your own hens are not broody. If you are not so fortunate as to have an incubator, you must buy sitting hens of your neighbors. By observing the above hints they can easily be moved and set to work in your own fowl house.

Farm Notes.

The "earth mulch" is something the grower should never forget in a drought. Deep stirring of the soil mixes the dry with the moist earth and hastens evaporation, but frequent stirring to the depth of an inch or so husbands the supply of moisture below this earth mulch.

According to government statistics the average values per acre of the various farm crops for the last ten years are: Corn, $9.47; wheat, $9.95; oats, $8.16; rye, $8.27; barley, $12.76; buckwheat, $8.24; potatoes, $38.34; tobacco, $61.57; cotton, $15.79; hay, $11.08.

The proper temperature for a brooder, says The Farmers' Journal, is 85 degs. the first week and 80 degs. afterward, gradually reducing temperature to 70 degs. by the sixth week. Remember that this does not mean the heat of the floor of the brooder, which should never be over 70 degs.

The farmer who undertakes to earn his bread by the sweat of a hired man's brow had better make up his mind to do without pie, says The California Fruit Grower.

One of the best implements for leveling the ground after plowing is a good drag. The roller is better to mash the lumps, but the drag is best to level or smooth down the surface.

BUYING PICTURES.

A REPORTER CHATS WITH SEVERAL WELL KNOWN ARTISTS.

The Painters Pretty Generally Agree That One Should Buy the Paintings Which Please Him—Judgment Is Capable of Cultivation and Will Improve.

"How do people buy pictures?" Colin Campbell Cooper repeated. "Well, I suppose the majority of collectors consult the advice of a dealer or some artist, and yet there are those, not pretentious connoisseurs, either, that know a good thing when they see it, and evince unusual wisdom in their purchases. To some, however, self reliance in investing on a large scale in paintings has proved rather a disastrous experiment. The other day a collection made by a man thirty or forty years ago was sold. There was hardly half a dozen good things in it, simply because he bought and he did not know what he was getting.

"Art in this country is gradually waking up. Perhaps the Centennial might be called the American Renaissance. We know infinitely more about art than our grandparents did, and with opportunities increasing from year to year it is fair to suppose our children will show a still more marked improvement in taste. Greater facilities for traveling have done much to bring about a change in our little world, and the tendency of our art is rather toward the cosmopolitan than provincial. Naturally, time is required to educate the public taste along artistic lines.

"I think people will buy more pictures when they understand painting is not an accomplishment merely a pleasure to the eye, but that it is a part of education, of civilization. It will require time to realize this. Exhibitions are visited and the majority like to look at pictures with an admiration rather ephemeral. When the picture is out of sight the impression is gone. With a general diffusion of art paintings will be bought not solely because they appeal to the senses, to personality, but for their artistic qualities; not simply because the subject illustrated is rather a pretty idea, but because the work is technically a good art production."

Stephen Ferris said: "The world is full of good pictures to be bought for reasonable prices, but unfortunately many thousands of dollars, many fortunes, are spent for nonsense, while good work remains unsought and unbought. Common sense is happy capital in picture buying as in any other business. One can hardly provide a set number of rules to be observed in buying. Many books have been written on military science; yet the world has seen comparatively few fine generals. Judgment rules the world, and in picture buying one person is more successful than another because a spirit of superior intelligence dictates his purchases."

Thomas Eakins would like to have people buy pictures that please them and appeal to their taste. "The majority are afraid to buy what they like; they must have some one else's advice. Well, if they start with bad art, perhaps before long they will come to the good. Let people buy what they want."

"I have not thought much about buying pictures," said Mr. Frederick Waugh. "We artists are more chiefly concerned in trying to sell them. It is the privilege of the artist to paint pictures which appeal to people; which they understand and want to have for their own. But he should have a high standard, and he cannot succeed if he lower it to cater to the popular taste. He is fortunate if in working out his ideas he pleases the public and yet does not lose his independence nor forfeit his originality. His work may be appreciated by large numbers, but it is always certain that some few will recognize his endeavor and will want to buy it.

"In the Old World art is accessible to all. The Luxembourg and the Louvre are filled permanently with the masterpieces of all ages, the best that have been done. There, too, the spirit of union is strong among artists. They gather together and talk of everything pertaining to the art world, consequently they live entirely in a congenial climate and they grow and develop in an essentially art atmosphere. Impressionism? Yes, this is the great word nowadays. Many have an idea that it is a synonym for vaguely treated and partially unfinished pictures. Impressionism claims to record facts as observed by the artist. Sincerity to nature is its aim. After all, there is nothing so beautiful as truth, and the nearer we get to it, as we find it in nature, the better artists we are."

"Many Americans buy pictures," Mr. F. de B. Richards responded, "because they have accumulated money, and pictures are the proper thing to have. Generally they know very little about it, and a dealer does the work for them. If people purchase pictures to flatter their vanity, let them spend big sums and buy high priced pictures. If they buy for pleasure, let them buy what interests them. I remember meeting Edwin Forrest after a sale. 'I've bought a picture,' said he. 'They told me not to do it, because very likely it is not original. But it pleases me, and I should buy it if it were by somebody I never heard tell of.' A picture pleasing to the eye is a source of education for the time being at least. Adverse criticism may lead a man to scrutinize it and study it more closely than if he had bought one he did not like half so well."

"I think I should be inclined to buy what I liked personally," was the opinion of Edwin Swift Balch, "not forgetting that the pictorial qualities should not be lost sight of in the desire to get a pleasing subject. Good handling, the proper placing of values and meritorious color, allied to a sympathetic subject, will tend to keep our interest in a painting alive."—Philadelphia Times.

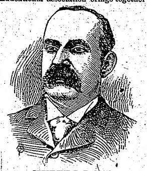
THE BRAIN WORKERS.

A SUMMER OF UNUSUAL ACTIVITY AMONG EDUCATORS.

Astonishing Progress of the Past Ten Years—The West Has Done Wonders, but Relatively the South Has Made the Greatest Advance.

The season for summer conventions has fairly set in, and a bare list of the important gatherings of this year would fill half a column. The political conventions are known and read of all men, and those of the various secret, social and benevolent orders are nearly as well advertised, but in gatherings to discuss educational matters the summer of 1892 will outdo all summers that have gone before it.

It seems but a few years ago that a state teachers' convention was a notable event, and even a county convention was organized with difficulty. But already an association embracing but one section of the states attracts the attention of the world, while the National Educational association brings together a larger gathering of intellectual men and women than any other organization. Twenty years ago it was a small and obscure body. For a few years past its meetings have been attended by from 10,000 to 15,000 people, and this year it is expected that at least 20,000 will gather at Saratoga.



PRESIDENT E. H. COOK.

The progress of education in the newer sections may be illustrated by taking two or three sample states. As late as 1850 Indiana had no general school system. The percentage of native illiteracy was such as to make the state a byword, and in a few sections the condition was such as is described and not very greatly exaggerated in Dr. Eggleston's novels. In 1860 the school system of that state was among the best in the world. A few years later it received the honor of being recommended as a model for the newer states, and by the last census the percentage of illiteracy is shown to be far below that of some of the oldest and most progressive states.

Massachusetts and Indiana had in 1880 nearly the same population, yet Indiana had more newspapers and periodicals, 5,000 more public schools and 95,000 more in daily attendance. Of persons over ten years who could not read, Indiana had 4.8 per cent. and Massachusetts 5.3, which was explained at the time by the fact of the latter state containing so many newly arrived foreigners. Now, however, Indiana statisticians claim that if her foreign born and recent immigrants from the south be deducted, the state really has no native illiterates. Incidentally it may be added that the most widely read novelist, the most popular dialect poet and the historian whose works have the largest sale among all American writers are natives and residents of Indiana—Lew Wallace, Whitcomb Riley and Professor Ridpath.

Men yet in middle life can remember when the Universities of Michigan and Wisconsin were feeble and struggling institutions, and now Kansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas have far more flourishing institutions than Michigan had in 1860. California is organizing one on a scale which excites the wonder of the world. All the new states have better school systems than any state had forty years ago, and even Utah is able to boast of some native born scholars. The growth of associations was slower, but within the past ten years it has been phenomenal.

The president of the National Educational association, which meets at Saratoga on July 12, is Dr. E. H. Cook, at present superintendent of the public schools of Flushing, N. Y. He is a graduate of Bowdoin college, one of the editors of The Educational Review, and has been president of the state associations of both New York and New Jersey, besides holding other places of trust and honor in his profession. He thinks the past year has witnessed greater progress in American educational fields than any previous year, and he and his associates have arranged the work for this year's convention with special reference to the vital issues of the times.

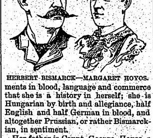
The complete figures of the census of 1890 are not yet available, but there is one department in which the facts already given out are such as to excite general astonishment and in devout minds an emotion of prayerful gratitude. Only thirty years ago it was a misdemeanor in many southern states to teach a colored person to read; today there are over 1,100,000 colored children in the common schools of the south, and several thousand colored students in select schools and colleges, and the single state of Georgia has within ten years educated more colored people than all the Christian missions in all the world had done in all previous time.

These facts and many more of equal interest will be discussed at the meeting of the Southern Educational association at Atlanta on July 16. The American Institute of Instruction will meet at Narragansett Pier, R. I., on the same day and many other educational bodies will follow soon after. The last named institute is said to be the oldest organization of teachers in the world, and is made up chiefly of New England educators.

HERBERT BISMARCK'S BRIDE.

She Is Beautiful, Accomplished and Vivacious.

The marriage of Count Herbert Bismarck, son of the Iron Chancellor, and Miss Margaret Hoyos has in it some elements which interest all Europe, if not all English speaking America. The bride represents so many diverse elements in blood, language and commerce that she is a history in herself; she is Hungarian by birth and allegiance, half English and half German in blood, and altogether Prussian, or rather Bismarckian, in sentiment.



HERBERT BISMARCK—MARGARET HOYOS.

Her father is Count George Hoyos, a partner in the famous firm for the manufacture of torpedoes at Fiume, and her mother is a daughter of Mr. Whitehead, the Englishman who founded the firm. As a result of this conjunction of German (possibly Hungarian) and English blood the lady has all the vivacity of the races of the Levant and all the advantages of an English rearing and education. She is a bright, handsome girl, with plenty of spirit, and will inherit a very large fortune.

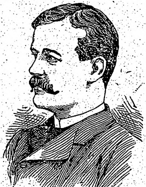
Fiume is a royal Hungarian city at the mouth of the Finmara, about forty miles from Trieste, and is one of the most important seaports of Austria-Hungary. The union of Austro or German Hungarian, Greek, Italian and other races has produced a population of unusual grace, intellect and vivacity, and the new Countess Bismarck has for some time been the belle of this composite society.

A Successful Woman Farmer.

Mrs. Nannie Osborne, of Utah, has lately taken high rank as a successful farmer. Her husband went to that territory for his health, and had just got a farm established on an island in Great Salt lake, about ten miles from the city, when he died. This was ten years ago, and she now has the finest farm in Utah, and is making large profits from the proceeds of it. Her ranch is on such soil that it is highly favorable for garden produce, and the greater portion of the place is devoted to truck farming, the product being sent to Salt Lake City for sale. A visit to the farm showed that Mrs. Osborne had the science of farming down to a fine point, and as a result of her labors she is clearing from $5,000 to $6,000 every year from the proceeds of the place, but this year expects to increase it to $10,000, as she has added a chicken ranch to the garden farm. She has two incubators in full blast and expects by early summer to have 600 broilers ready for market, which will find ready sale in Salt Lake City. Mrs. Osborne's ranch was under a heavy mortgage when her husband died, but now it is clear, and she has put over $5,000 worth of improvements on it since the debt was paid.

A Gubernatorial Candidate.

Charles F. Johnson, recently nominated for governor by the Democrats of Maine, is only thirty-three years old, but he has always been what is usually called "a precocious youth." He was but fifteen years old when he entered Colby university and he graduated from Bowdoin at the age of twenty, having been compelled to remain out of college a year and teach for the means to complete his course.



CHARLES F. JOHNSON.

He was born in Winslow, just across the Kennebec river from Waterville, his present home, and in his boyhood attended the common schools there. In 1881 he married Miss Abbie Bretton, daughter of Colonel L. W. Bretton, of Winslow. They have two children. After teaching several terms elsewhere Mr. Johnson located in Waterville in 1886, where he has since practiced law and has held various local offices, the most important being city clerk and city solicitor.

Russian Hounds for Wolves.

The stockmen of South Dakota have recently been greatly troubled by wolves, which have taken to killing calves and colts. They have suffered so much from these pests that they have concluded to exterminate them thoroughly, and with that end in view numbers of Russian wolfhounds have been carried to South Dakota, where they will be bred and kept by farmers to the exclusion of all other breeds of dogs.

The Elephant's Keen Scent.

It is a difficult matter for hunters to get within reasonable distance of a wild elephant, for its sense of smell is so delicate that it can scent an enemy at a distance of 1,000 yards, and the nerves of its trunk are so sensitive that the smallest substance can be discovered and picked up by its tiny proboscis.

A Fly That Kills Horses.

All white men who visit regions in Africa infested by the tsetse fly have much to say about it. There is now evidence that the tsetse is moving gradually to more northern regions, and the cause is supposed to be that South Africa is depleted of its large game, much of which is moving northward to get away from hunters, and the tsetse fly is going with it.

The insect is only a little larger than the ordinary house fly, and it resembles the honey bee. Its sting is hardly as annoying as that of the mosquito, but near the base of the proboscis is a little bag which contains its poison. It lives on the blood of animals, and only a few species are fatally affected by its bite. Cattle, horses and dogs, however, cannot live when bitten by the tsetse fly. Natives who herd cattle and travelers who depend on horses and oxen must avoid the fly regions or lose their stock. For human beings its bite has no serious consequences.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Perfectly Healthy People.

The Parsees are sun worshipers, and it is an interesting sight to see throngs of them on the shore of the bay as the sun rises, apparently from the sea, performing the simple rites of their religion, the fluttering robes showing their fine figures to the best advantage as the day begins. Their religious practices are simple in the extreme, consisting mainly in strict dietary rules and personal cleanliness.

The rigid observance of sanitary laws produces the natural result of perfect health among the adults, large families of active, healthy children and immense numbers of old men, gray bearded, white haired, but erect and princely in their gait and attitude, despite the naturally enervating character of the tropical climate. — Cor. Washington Star.

Limestone Caves in Burmah.

The question has been raised whether the numerous limestone caves in British Burmah have been explored for archæological remains. The Rev. F. Mason pointed out the probability of an examination of the stalagmite floors of these caves yielding important archæological discoveries in 1872. Many of the caves were known to have been used by the Buddhists of former generations, as Buddhist idols were found in them, and it is probable they were inhabited by men in the early time.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Pleasures of Being a Barber.

Barbering has been a very genteel art, and it might be fine yet. The fee is so small there is no excuse for doing a credit business, and there is no bore of bookkeeping. The chink drops in fast, and "Next!" is a merry cry.

And what a luxury it is to have a man fumble your face and head. The barber's nimble, strong fingers rouses your somnolent wits. It is delicious to be kneaded, combed, brushed, bathed, curried, spruced up.—National Barber.

Chicago and St. Louis.

Two prominent cities of the West are those whose names head this paragraph. Chicago, the chief marvel of city growth in America, fifty years ago only a fort on the frontier—an Indian trading post in a swamp—now known all over the world as the place where is to be held the World's Fair of 1893, whence more than a million workers send out their products to be used of all nations. St. Louis, founded in the historic "early days" when the lilies of France claimed dominion over the Mississippi Valley—now sitting a commercial queen, the centre of a vast river commerce, and sentinel at the gateway of the great and growing Southwest, a city of wealth, intelligence and solid worth, much talked of as a future location of the National Capital. These are worth a pilgrimage—they draw thousands of visitors, and the Burlington Route has its own line into both of them, so buy your tickets by that line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

EVERYBODY LIKES IT!

EVERYBODY WANTS IT!

AND ALMOST

Everybody Takes It!

WE refer to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, and when we say that every body likes it, we speak the truth. If a subscriber does not get his paper on the day of publication, he comes around to the office to see what is the matter, If he didn't care anything about it, would he inconvenience himself that much to get the paper? So we are perfectly justified in saying that everybody wants it. Another point about the JOURNAL is that it is carefully perused by its readers. The smallest item in the most obscure corner of the paper does not escape observation. Why is this? Simply because there isn't a dull item in it. A paper makes mistakes, and the JOURNAL is no exception to this rule. Sometimes there are articles in the paper which should be left out and sometimes there are items left out which should be published. But the matter in the JOURNAL is all interesting and readable.

There aae still a number of people in the county who are not on our list and in order to ecure them epublican Congressional Convention.

The Republican convention for the Seventh Congressional District, Minn., will be held in the opera house in the city of Moorhead on Thursday, Sept. 1st, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for Congress for said district and to transact such other business as may properly come before the convention.

All persons who believe in the principles of the Republican party, and who desire its success in the coming campaign, are invited to cooperate in the good cause. The basis of representation agreed upon by the committee is three delegates at large for each county and one for each 200 votes cast for S. G. Comstock in 1890 and one delegate for major fraction thereof. The various counties are entitled to the following number of delegates:

Big Stone	6	Polk	7

Douglas	7	Stevens	6
Grant	5	Swift	6
Kandiyohi	9	Traverse	5
Kittson	5	Wilkin	5

Protection to our woolen industries has increased the South's production of woolen goods from

in 1890. And yet the free trade Congressmen from the South support legislation that tends to shut up the woolen mills of that region. Who are the real enemies of the commercial prosperity of the South?—New York Press.

The Omaha convention seemed at a loss to know whom to nominate as People's party candidate for president, since Gresham declined that honor. There don't seem to be many men seeking that office this year—at least not through that channel.

In another column will be found the weekly weather-crop bulletin for the state, as compiled by Director Harmon, of the weather bureau. The JOURNAL will publish these bulletins during the summer, as no more interesting matter can be furnished than weekly crop reports. They show the general condition of the crops and the weather throughout the state, and enable one to tell exactly how the crops are growing in each county.

BOB DUNN's paper, the Princeton Union, says: "S. M. Owen announces in the July 1st number of Farm, Stock and Home that he is not ambitious politically, and that he does not want and will not accept a nomination for any office from any party. No more honorable and conscientious man than S. M. Owen ever wielded a pen, and yet many of the people he is honestly trying to serve denounce him as the tool of the plutocrats. What a pity that there are not more such "tools" as S. M. Owen.

More than one thousand men are now at work on the mammoth Manufactures building for the World's Fair. The force was recently doubled by order of the Exposition authorities, who concluded that the contractor was not making as rapid progress as was desirable. The authorities are determined that all the buildings shall be completed in time for dedication in October, and the public may be assured that this will be done. The total number of workmen at Jackson Park now exceeds 7,000. It will probably be increased to 10,000 or more.

A North Dakota editor who attended the recent convention at Chicago furnishes the following argument against the closing of the World's Fair on Sundays: "The visitors to the Chicago convention were left to the avaricious mercies of hotel sharks. Reputable hotels lost all decency and charged two or three times their ordinary rates. The great World's Fair crowds will be a temptation for plunder that from present indications, no Chicago landlord or eating house proprietor will attempt to withstand. Immense structures are being erected solely for entertaining guests next year, and the visitors are expected to pay for the buildings in the short time the fair is in operation. To close the gates of the exposition Sundays and turn the vast throngs of restless strangers into the motley amusement joints—to make the average countryman the prey of the Chicago fakir in the concert gardens and places of all sorts would be an act of stupidity that the Columbian commission can hardly be guilty of."

Commenting upon Ignatius Donnelly's speech at Fergus Falls, the Journal, of that city, says:

The manner in which Mr. Donnelly dismissed the tariff question—the great issue of the campaign—was amusing. He pooh-poohed it out of the way with less than a minute's talk. He is an ardent believer in protection, but it did not suit his purpose to give his honest views on the subject here.

* * * * * *

The two great ideas of the People's party are the sub-treasury and government loans on farms at 2 per cent. Yet Mr. Donnelly did not advocate either one of them. He remarked that there was some difference of opinion even among the reformers on these questions. "Let us not quarrel over them," said Mr. Donnelly. "Let us first take possession of the government." This manner of treating these two great questions and to which so many deluded people have been looking for relief, shows that even Mr. Donnelly himself does not take any stock in them, and does not advocate such measures to an intelligent audience. The greater portion of his speech was devoted to a tirade against elevators, railroads and banks. Such talk has become tiresome to people. They expected to hear Mr. Donnelly, as the greatest man in a great movement, advocate intelligently the principles laid down in the people's party platform. This he did not even attempt to do. The only conclusion is that they will not bear intelligent discussion.

A GRAND SUCCESS.

That the 7th annual Park region association G. A. R. encampment has been a success goes without saying. The weather was as good as could be expected, the attendance was large, and the accommodations were ample. The attractions were plenty and varied, the orations were eloquent and the music was all that could be desired. Nothing was left undone that could add to the pleasure of the occasion. The various committees worked hard and unceasingly, and although there was a lack of unaminity of action in some instances, the good spirit with which everybody worked made up for any mistakes which may have occurred. The houses of the citizens were thrown open to visitors, and thousands of strangers can testify to the hospitality of our people.

The veterans have enjoyed their meeting, and will return to their homes feeling that it was indeed good to be here.

Comrades, adieu.

WEAVER IT IS.

The Omaha convention put in nomination the old greenback leader J. B. Weaver, who will lead the forlorn hope to defeat as he did the greenback fad. Could Gresham have been prevailed upon to accept the nomination the People's party would doubtless have cut quite a figure and would very probably have held the balance of power, causing the election to be thrown into the House.

THE REPUBLICAN LEAGUE.

New York Press: The beginning of the presidential campaign, and the assurance that the Empire state will be the scene of the hardest political fighting of the year will direct more than ordinary interest to the annual convention of the New York State League of Republican clubs which assembles at Rochester to-day.

The State League is an organization of whose efficiency the New York Republicans have reason to be proud. At the Rochester convention it is expected that over 500 different clubs will be represented, and the actual working membership of the League at the present time numbers over 100,000. The power of this disciplined army of Republicans in a closely contested election is obviously very great. If ably led and working in perfect harmony, as it undoubtedly will be, it may well suffice to turn the scale in New York State.

An especially significant and encouraging feature of the League's work is the fact that it is successful in attracting such a host of young men to the Republican party and holding them there. To the great army of voters born since the Southern Confederacy challenged the supremacy of the nation by firing on Fort Sumter, the infamous record of the Democratic party before and during the Civil War is vague and indistinct. It is difficult if not impossible for them to realize that the Democracy of to-day, with its specious pretenses and its ostensibly patriotic Mugwump allies, is the same old party whose advocacy of treason and support of human slavery caused the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of precious lives and uncounted millions of treasure in the four years' struggle of the nation to defend its life against Democratic assaults.

With the younger voters the past history of the two great parties has comparatively little weight. The issues of to-day are those with which they particularly concern themselves; and in educating them in the knowledge that the Democratic party as constituted at present is the irreconcilable foe of industrial progress, of American commercial independence, of honest money, of a free vote and a fair count; in showing that its spirit is essentially and viciously un-American; that it is the champion of foreign interests as against American interests, and that its economic policy favors the European manufacturer at the expense of the American workingman, the Republican League is performing an invaluable work.

THE REIGN OF GROVER.

From the Khoran of Democracy—A Satire of the Times.

Verse 1. It came to pass in those days that the people chose Grover, the son of his father, to rule over them.

2. Forty and eight years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned four years in Washington.

3. And he forsook the path of the righteous, neither regarded he the ways of Washington nor Lincoln to walk therein.

4. But he made him new ways and got him strange counselors, giving the high places to those aforetime in rebellion.

5. Moreover, he sent away the veterans from the places of honor, and the widows in the Treasury Department saw and trembled.

6. For this was in the first year of his reign, about the month of April, which is by interpretation watery.

7. And the people murmured and said: "In the time of his election he regardeth the Civil Service law, and now behold! the sons of Belial fill the post offices."

8. And it happened that Grover called unto him General Drum and said: "Go to, now! Take of the standards captured in battles in times past and return them."

9. Then arose Foraker and said: "Am I not governor of, Ohio? 'Divil a wan of thim goes back.' "

10. Now, Foraker was a mighty man of valor and could probably overcome Grover.

11. And Grover lied and said: "Behold, now, it was not I, but General Drum, that wanted to give them back, but I, even I, would not let him," and he winked to Daniel.

12. Then Grover took unto himself a wife, whose beauty could not cover up the wrongs of his government.

13. In the ending of the third year of his reign Grover called unto him Roger of Texas, and said: "Lo, I am desirous of retaining power; go now prepare me a law opening our markets to our friends in England, and perchance they will send us some soap."

14. For in those days they needed much soap.

15. And straightway Roger went and drafted him a law, and it passed the House and Grover itched to sign it and it came to the Senate.

16. And the Senate sat down on it and Grover gnashed his teeth, but prevailed not.

17. And when the four years were nearly finished the people cried: "Enough!" and "four months more," and sundry other such remarks, and desired our Benjamin to rule over them.

18. And Grover retired to New York and Buzzard's Bay.

19. And the rest of the deeds that he did, behold! are they not written in the newspapers of his time?

PRESS GLEANINGS.

Thief River Falls Press:—The whole Republican party today wears the sumbre gown of sorrow and upon its bowed head falls the crape of sore bereavement. Without one word of explanation or parting good will the St. Hilaire Spectator announces itself an alien to her cause. Who can fully realize the enormity of this terrible blow or who can estimate the value of another's gain. How will the party ever survive this saddest of all calamities. We give it up. Ta-ta, Harry.

Thief River Falls Press:—Clerk of Court Muus and Editor Bydal of the Red River Dalen, were expelled from the People's party club at Crookston for expressing sentiments favorable to Judge Mills for re-election. Think of such tyrannical action by a party whose germ of existence is anti-monopoly and yet monopolize even a man's thought and speech. Is this the free country we read about? No one would suspect it.

Ada Index:—Capt. Russel of the Crookston Militia company is getting discouraged. After securing fifty rifles and drilling the boys, he finds that only eight men can be induced to join the company. Mr. Russel ought to come down to Ada and see the company this village turns out.

Ada Index:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL makes a fine appearance in its new dress, and we notice it wears the latest style of Republican politics, without any calamity leanings.

Princeton Union:—The Chisago County News, a true blue Republican paper, by the way, asserts that McGill and Nelson are the only candidates laboring to secure the Republican nomination for governor. The News is mistaken as far as Mr. Nelson is concerned. He is doing simply nothing to help himself. If the voice of the people is respected he will be nominated by acclamation. Come, Bro. Rowe, help wheel staunch Republican Chisago into line for the gallant soldier and incorruptible statesman, Knute Nelson. He is a sure winner.

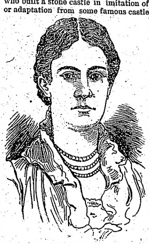
Review of Reviews for July.

The Review of Reviews, always timely in the subject matter it presents, is especially so in the July number. Although the month covered by this issue expired less than five days after the Republican candidate for president was nominated it contains perhaps the most complete and intelligent character sketch of Benjamin Harrison that has ever been written. In the text of the article appears a portrait of President Harrison at his desk, taken on the 13th of June, four days after the convention adjourned. In addition to this sketch of the nominee of the Republican convention there are reviewed and discussed, in the department "The Progress of the World," the work and proceedings of the convention itself. With this account are presented portraits of the most conspicuous figures in that great political assembly: Governor McKinley, Chauncey M. Depew, Senator Wolcott, General John C. New, Ex-Senator Ingalls, Ex-Speaker Reed and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster. There is besides these a striking portrait of Hon. Whitelaw Reid, the Republican nominee for Vice-President. The mind of the American public has been so engaged with home politics during the past month that it has given little attention to foreign affairs. In "The Progress of the World" of this number are discussed, as well, the political and social movements prominent in other countries of the world, particularly the political situation in Great Britain. The reader who has likewise allowed the general news to escape his attention will find in the department "Record of Current Events," a full summary of the world's happenings during the month. The department of "Leading Articles" includes a larger number of topics than usual. Mr. W. C. Taylor, who has had in charge the distribution of the Russian relief cargo of the steamer Missouri, contributes to the July number an exceedingly interesting paper on "Russia's Conflict with Hunger." The article contains portraits of Count Vorontsoff Daskoff, Head of the Czarewitch's Relief Committee, and of the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, at the head of the relief committee in Moscow, and scenes from the famine district.

WHITELAW REID'S HOMES.

The Editor of the New York Tribune Has Two Fine Residences.

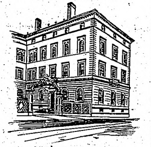
Whitelaw Reid, the Republican candidate for vice president, has a city and a country residence. His country seat has a history. It was founded many years ago by the famous Ben Holladay, who built a stone castle in imitation of or adaptation from some famous castle of the Old World. It stands upon a commanding point in Westchester county, N. Y., overlooking Long Island sound and a vast region eastward and westward. The place as a whole is not excelled as a country seat in America, and Mr. Holladay, in memory of his western career, named it Ophir Farm. He was reared in a cabin, lived to be many times a millionaire and to see both his daughters countesses then lost his wealth and consequently his lovely estate.



MRS. WHITELAW REID.

John Roach, the famous shipbuilder, became the owner and he, too, succumbed. His son Garrett became nominal owner and soon died. Then Mr. Reid bought it, but the "hoodoo," as our colored friends say, still "bore down," and in 1888 the mansion was destroyed by fire. A new and more imposing mansion has risen on its ruins.

Mr. Reid's residence in New York city is widely noted, and a complete description would fill many columns like this. It is the famous "Italian palace" designed by Henry Villard some ten years ago, and stands at the corner of Fiftieth street and Madison avenue, directly facing the famous Catholic cathedral. The location is in the very heart of high toned New York, in the central section of the creme de la creme. The plan, as drawn by Mr. Stanford White, was for a structure consisting of three wings, having the form of a square with one side open. The plan was slightly modified by Mr. Villard, so the style is now spoken of as that of "the Italian Renaissance somewhat Americanized."



REID'S CITY RESIDENCE.

Mr. Villard was "finished" as a millionaire before the house was, and in 1886, for $400,000, it became the property and home of Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid. Their dining room and the smaller room, known as a coffee room, with doors of heavy paneled oak, ceiling spanned by magnificent cross beams, delicately carved panels and magnificent fireplace, are the admiration of æsthetic New York. The library is also noted for its artistic beauty. Mrs. Reid is more devoted to her husband and home than to society, but has shown her social capacity in France, and is a fitting hostess for the New York palace.

The Newspapers of Persia.

Recent travelers in Persia find the newspapers of that land a source of perennial amusement. There were none till the shah returned from Europe two years ago. While in Paris he saw the cabmen with newspapers in their hands when idle, and naturally, it is said, attributed their general intelligence to this fact. As soon as he arrived in Teheran he established a ministry of the press, and called upon the nobles to aid him in his plans. As a result there are twelve journals in Persia today. Among them is the official organ, Iran. To read them, however, requires considerable linguistic ability, as they are printed in a mixture of Turkish, Persian and Arabic, with French and Russian words here and there. Sheref, an illustrated paper in Teheran, contains only portraits of Russian and European celebrities. When one can read them, however, he finds their grave comments on western affairs more amusing than the most labored efforts in Punch or the Paris comics.

Mr. Gladstone's Favorite Dog.

Mr. Gladstone is uniformly kind to all the occupants of his home at Hawarden, but he has two favorites—his youngest granddaughter, Dorothy Drew, and Petz, a Pomeranian dog, imported in 1888. Every morning the dog will wait outside the door of Mr. Gladstone's dressing room in order to accompany him in his daily walk to morning service at the church. Petz's favorite diversion is running after sticks, a game that never seems to tire him. No one, too, is fonder of joining in the game than Mr. Gladstone himself. "Nearly all the ex-cabinet ministers," says a Hawarden resident, "when visiting the castle, have had to contribute in this way to Petz's amusement."

LIGHT UPON ISLAM.

A BOLD DEFENSE OF THE DOCTRINES OF THE KORAN.

A Lucid Comparison of the Essential Points of the Religions That Have for Their Foundations the Bible and the Koran—Islam Democracy.

M. Mismer could not know the east any better than he does if he had been born there, and we copy from his new volume, "Souvenirs du Monde Mussulman," a few novel views and considerations addressed especially to statesmen and thinkers:

The greater portion of the precepts of the Koran have a meaning which escapes us, because that meaning is at variance with our ideas and our manners, and this is what gives rise to political errors of an incalculable reach. The Mussulmans do not fail to return the attacks that are made upon them. Conceding to us the advantage in a material and scientific point of view, they hold that the riches and learning of the few do not make the happiness of the many, and they claim superiority for their moral and social constitution.

Essentially democratic in its origin, Islam has a sumptuary law which puts a tax of 2½ per cent. upon the jewels of women and upon all objects of luxury. This money has served for centuries to assist poor tradesmen and to buy them tools. Thanks to the prohibition of wine and spirits, the social problem is solved for them. On seeing the dangers that hover over our civilization, the Mussulmans compare it to the smoking remains of a burned tent. They think that if it should disappear in the flames of anarchy for want of an organic principle it would be incapable of rising again from its ashes, while their faith maintains order in everything, the condition sine qua non of progress.

"You accuse us," they say, "of being depraved. Are you less so, you who keep up perpetual orgies in your great cities, expose your half clad wives and daughters at balls and feasts, and allow them to be whirled around in the arms of anybody and everybody? You reproach us for our ignorance. In order to pass through life with honor your instruction is not so good as ours. Thanks to the proverbs and the rules of wisdom that are taught to our children, they conduct themselves like little men. With you the men, and even the learned, conduct themselves like little children. You charge our functionaries with venality. Who contributes to its establishment if it is not the vulgar herd of traders of every class that Europe has scattered all ove the east? You cry down our judiciar We too have a right to accuse yours. Y charge us with fatalism. Fatalists are, just like your learned men and yo philosophers, who base their calculatio upon the immutability of natural law Resigned in the face of plagues, cata clysms and death, we say 'It was writ ten.' For the rest we follow the word of the prophet.

'One day the prophet asked an Ara visitor what he had done with his camel. The Arab replied, 'I have left him at thy gate.' 'Hast thou tied him?' inquired the prophet. 'No, I have left him to the care of God. 'Thou hast done wrong,' said Mohammed. 'Thou shouldst first have tied him, and then have recommended him to God.'

"The Christian doctrines of predestination and of grace are more depressing than our fatalism. Your ignorance of Islam makes you confound Mussulman slavery with ancient slavery and that which existed until recently in Russia and in Brazil. With the Mussulmans there are no slaves. All are brothers, not in the Platonic sense of the Bible, but actually, having the same laws and the same positive duties according to the terms of the Koran. Unlike Christianity, Islam has never treated as salable things, transmissible with the land, troops of men who professed the common faith, as was done with the serfs of the Middle Ages, the moujiks of Russia, and the negroes of your colonies. Prisoners of war are the only slaves that it recognizes, but their children are born free, and they themselves can become so by embracing Islam.

"It is the custom from time immemorial in certain countries for parents to part with their children for money, in order to ward off poverty and open up to themselves a career of fortune. By virtue of Mussulman equality this career is limitless in the east. How many slaves have become pashas, generals and ministers? Almost all the sultans have been the sons of slaves. The black slaves taken from central Africa find in Egypt and in Turkey a fate incomparably superior to that of the slaves of your colonies. Slavery is for savages the first step toward civilization. If their recruiting and their transportation give rise to well founded protests, the fault is not with Islam. Neither the Bible nor the Koran is responsible for abuses.

"The Mussulmans proclaim the superiority of their Allah; but they acknowledge Moses as a prophet and Jesus as Rouh Allah, the soul of God. Their veneration for Jesus extends to the mother. The immaculate conception, introduced into Catholicism by Pius IX, has been for twelve centuries a Mussulman belief.

"To the extreme simplicity of the dogma must be added the positive enjoyments which the paradise of Mohamm opposes to the platonic joys of t Christian paradise, in order to comp hend the resistance of Islam to all a tempts at conversion. 'Christianity a menace, Islamism a promise,' sa Napoleon I, and his opinion is worth of meditation."—Paris Figaro.

Eating Before Sleeping.

Scientific men now delare that eating before sleeping is of great benefit, and that a bowl of bread and milk, a mug of beer and a few biscuits, or a saucer of oatmeal before retiring will in a short time result in an increase in weight, strength and general tone.—New York Times.

THE ENCAMPMENT.

By Tuesday the Crookston team had got down to business and won a well-contested game from the Ada nine, although the latter team is a crack nine, composed of heavy-weights. The score stood 9 to 7 in favor of Crookston.

On Wednesday the Crookston nine crossed bats with a team composed of Indians from the White Earth reservation and white men from Fosston. About the middle of the game the score stood 6 to 5 in favor of Crookston, but the Indians failed to tally again and the C. O. D.'s added 5 more runs to their score.

THE ORATIONS ON WEDNESDAY.

On Wednesday the orators of the day were: A. J. O'Keefe of Grand Forks, Hon. Knute Nelson of Alexandria, H. Steenerson, Rev. Father Gamache of Detroit, and Eugene M. Hay, district U. S. attorney. Owing to the strong wind blowing at the time of the speaking, it was difficult to catch the words of the speakers, and many were disappointed at not being able to hear Mr. Nelson, who is an eloquent talker and made a stirring address. Despite of Mr. O'Keefe's claim of not being an orator, he gave sufficient evidence to show that he has all the necessary qualifications of one. Halvor Steenerson spoke briefly a few well-chosen words, and was followed by Rev. Father Gamache of Detroit, formerly of Gentilly, and Eugene M. Hay closed the speaking for the day.

There were six entries in the special trotting and pacing race, and but 3 heats were trotted, leaving the race to be finished next day.

The unfinished special trot and pace on the night of the 4th was fin- ed Tuesday afternoon. Four ats were trotted. Allie Graham on, Lady B second, Chicago third. me 2:52½, 2:53¼, 2:53½, 2:53¾.

Three horses were in the 2:30 pace, d five heats were run. First, Du- n, entered by Swan & Hunter; 2d, ohn Bonney, by Bob Slaughton; 3d, abel W., by O. R. Williams. Time: 49, 2:51, 2:49½ 2:58, 2:47½.

The trotting race for a purse of $350 was won in three straight heats by Nellie, entered by H. Thompson; 2d, Rowdy Boy, entered by P. C. McClure: 2d, Garrette, entered by C. P. Gove. Time, 2:44½, 2:46¾, 2:45.

There were five entries in the half mile trot, and five heats were trotted. F. Bivins took first money with Belle; A. M. Shaw took second with Fred; and N. Erschfeld third with Sorrel Nellie. Time, 1:40, 1:33, 1;30, 1:34, 1:35.

The half mile running race for ponies was won by W. E. Whitney with Bangum; 2d, J. Reisch with Sandy; 3d Gypsy Joe.

BICYCLE RACES.

On Monday Geo. Baldwin, of Detroit, won 1st money in the ½ mile dash, M. E. Farwell, Crookston, 2d, and W. Ayre 3d.

Tuesday—1 mile dash. E. C. Carruth 1st; Geo. Baldwin, 2d, and M. E. Farwell 3d.

Wednesday—Carruth again won the 1 mile bicycle race from Bald win and Farwell. This was the best race of the tournament, and as on the previous day a strong wind was blowing and Carruth's muscle won the day.

THE BANDS.

The Ada band came up Tuesday morning, but only staid during the day. They made a good appearance in their gray uniforms.

The Wadena cornet band which came up with the boys on Wednesday makes a fine appearance on parade and furnishes any quantity of excellent music. They are a credit to that thriving little village.

The Lakeside band, of Detroit, arrived on Tuesday morning to help to enliven the proceedings—and they did it. While you are talking of good bands, don't forget the Lakesides—they are the prize winners.

NOTES.

All the in-coming trains on Mon- ay were crowded.

Big delegations from Grand Forks ttended the encampment.

Marcus Johnson came up from St. Paul to celebrate the 4th in Crookston.

The Commercial hotel was taxed to its utmost to feed the visitors on the 4th.

Fontaine & Anglim had a nice spread of bunting out, besides a lot of G. A. R. and military pictures.

A number of Grand Forks wheelmen came over Sunday, and stayed during the week to participate in the races.

The JOURNAL will give the proceedings for Thursday next week.

The Arries & Lancaster hack line was the only one which did not raise their rates during the encampment.

Mine host Jerome, of the St. Louis, had his hotel gaily decorated and did an immense business feeding the hungry and caring for the weary on the Fourth.

Crookston has been truly honored during this week by a speech from the present governor on Monday, and one from the next governor (Knute Nelson) on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Lord and Master Archie, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Warren and Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Graber were among the Grand Forks delegation who came over to celebrate.

E. C. Carruth may well feel proud of winning the one-mile bicycle races on Tuesday and Wednesday, as Mr. Baldwin, who took second money, is a well known expert on the wheel.

Ed. George was invited to go to Hallock to deliver the oration for the 4th, but was too loyal to his own city to accept the invitation. Ed. believes in supporting home industries.

Peter Hoffman deserves great credit for the manner in which he drilled the drum corps. It is no small job to take a squad of children and educate them to handle the drum-sticks in unison as the Crookston drum corps do.

Gervais & Gervais had their windows dressed in magnificent style. One window contained about $1,000 worth of rugs, carpetings and other goods. In the other was an assortment of dress goods, and in the centre was a Goddess of Liberty enlightening the world.

The Crookston drum corps was the novel feature of the parade and excited the admiration of the spectators. With their jaunty costumes of the national colors, they made a striking and picturesque appearance as they marched along under the leadership of drummer Hoffman.

Miss J. M. Partridge and her sister Mrs. W. L. Conger, leave to-night for Glenwood, Minn. Miss Partridge is agent for the Howard, Farwell & Co's music house of St. Paul, and handles several lines of first-class pianos and organs, comprising Behr Bros., Fischer, Decker Bros., and Schaeffer pianos and Farrand & Votey organs. She is an experienced sales-woman, and her pleasing and agreeable manners make her successful in her business. Her sister came to help her during encampment week.

The Fair department store was the first to be decorated and set the pace for the balance of the city. A window full of fancy baskets made by the St. Regis Indians was a drawing card for the Fair during the week. Wilson can always be found somewhere around the head of the procession.

Soapsuds Are Valuable.

Few persons know how very useful soapsuds prove when employed as manure. Applied to the roots of vines, fruit trees, roses, etc., they impart a vigor and rapidity of growth which is perfectly surprising. No one who is so lucky as to have a garden should waste this valuable form of manure. It is an excellent plan to have a large tub, and put the soapsuds and dirty water into it till required upon the garden.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Search Lights versus Torpedo Boats.

It is stated that one of the most effective means of protecting a ship in these days of torpedoes (the grouping together of a number of stationary search lights, each illuminating its own section so that the ship is surrounded by an unbroken circle of light), is to be adopted in the new American warships. This has been suggested by a very pronounced defect in the usual search light practice. In order to afford sufficient time for a careful examination of the water's surface at points removed from the ship, the beam of light must be revolved very slowly, and hence during a great portion of the time any particular section of the water is left in darkness. As it takes only five minutes for a torpedo boat to run a distance of two miles, it will be seen that the conditions are all in favor of the attacking force. Before the revolution of the search light is completed there is plenty of time for the torpedo boat to run up and discharge her deadly weapons.—New York Telegram.

An Electrical Sunrise.

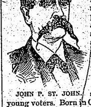
A Twenty-third street theater has brought out an electrical sunrise. A curved screen, part of which is made of gauze, so that the light may shine through, extends around the stage, and behind it is an elaborate system of incandescent lamps. The controlling apparatus is so graduated that fifty different degrees of light and shade can be produced, thus causing the sunrise to grow imperceptibly. Another use of the electric current made at the same place is in representing the explosion of a bomb.

A paper shell contains just enough powder to explode and make a flash. This is fired by electricity, while at the same moment another circuit controlled by the same key sets off a gun behind the scenes, which furnishes the necessary noise.—New York World.

PROHIBITION POSSIBILITIES.

Some of the Men Talked of for the Nomination at Cincinnati.

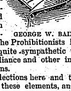
The impending Prohibition convention at Cincinnati will have several exciting questions before it. They have many possible candidates for president, and among them the candidate of 1884. Governor John P. St. John, of Kansas. The famous California pioneer, General John Bidwell, is also talked of, and he would be a "rustler," for he has had a career outromancing all romance and calculated to stir the hearts of young voters. Born in Chautauqua (good name—good omen!), N. Y., in 1819, he crossed the plains from Missouri in 1841 in the first overland company. He served in the war against Mexico, mined gold among the first, was a member of the California constitutional convention, has been a member of congress, is very rich, very popular and a fierce enthusiast for reform in many lines.



JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

Another possibility is the famous publisher, Demorest, and still another is Dr. A. B. Leonard, missionary secretary of the M. E. church. He has a record, too, as when a candidate for governor of Ohio he brought the Prohibition votes up to surprising figures. In this respect he has a decided advantage over Governor St. John, who came out of the campaign of 1884 with nothing more substantial than a very ugly controversy with General J. S. Clarkson, of the Republican national committee.

Other candidates spoken of are Rev. Dr. A. A. Minor, of Boston; Hon. H. Clay Bascom, of Troy, N. Y.; W. T. Wardwell, treasurer of the Standard Oil company; Colonel George W. Bain, of Louisville, and Colonel Eli F. Ritter, of Indianapolis. When a man or a squad of men cut loose from the old party on any one subject they at once become critical and soon decide that the old party is wrong on many other subjects, and thus the Prohibitionists have lately become quite sympathetic with the Farmers' Alliance and other industrial organizations.



GEORGE W. BAIN.

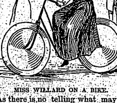
In 1890 local elections here and there were carried by these elements, and at least two congressmen of the new sort acknowledge their obligations for Prohibition votes. A regular fusion is now proposed, and if that is effected General Bidwell is the logical candidate. Several delegates, however, serve notice that there will be no fusion without a bitter fight. They do not go quite to the "over-my-dead-body" extreme, still they make it known that things will be extremely hot in Music hall (the locality of the convention) before there is any fusion or any change of the party's name, as is proposed.

Was Sir Edwin Imposed Upon?

Recent travelers in Japan ridicule the highly colored statements of Sir Edwin Arnold and others as to the charms of the women and pleasant manners of the people generally. In particular Professor Knott tells the Scottish Geographical society that, when the charm of novelty has worn off, the traveler generally discovers that the natives have been making fun of him. The experienced traveler in Japan finds the manners and the service of the inns fairly satisfactory, but far from romantic. He knows the ways of the country, and the fair waitresses get no extra amusement from him and treat him just as they would one of their own countrymen, with quiet respect and placid mien. When not perturbed by what seems to her simply foreign vulgarity the waiting maid of Japan, Professor Knott says, performs her duty quietly, faithfully and unobtrusively. Near the open ports, however, where the country is overrun with the globe trotter, Professor Knott says there is a marked deterioration in the manners of the lower class Japanese, and the traveler is himself to blame for it.

A Progressive Woman.

Every reader knows that Frances E. Willard is a progressive woman. Recently she has become so progressive that walking is too slow for her and she is learning to progress on a bicycle. So the president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance union will soon be a familiar spectacle on the beautiful highways of Evanston, Ills., gliding gracefully on the pneumatic wheel, which she thinks most healthful and recommends for ladies.



MISS WILLARD ON A BIKE.

As there is no telling what may happen, it is well to give her biography right now. Frances Elizabeth Willard was born in Churchville, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1839, graduated from the Northwestern Female college at Evanston in 1859, taught and traveled for ten years, became a student and writer in Paris, then dean of the Woman's college at Evanston, and finally, in 1874, quit her profession to devote her time to temperance. She has always been an enthusiast on athletics for women and has practiced as she preached. Long may she "wheel." Selah!

Balzac's Servant.

When Honore de Balzac, the novelist, stated in early life his wish to become a literary man, his father, who had destined him for the bar, was shocked and disappointed. Still he gave the boy two years in which to prove his fitness for a literary life, and Honore was accordingly installed in an attic near the library where he proposed to work.

His mother believed that a little hardship would soon bring him to his senses, but the correspondence which he thereupon began with his sister shows that the man who was afterward to attain distinction in his chosen work could afford, as a youth, to scorn such trifles as waiting upon himself. In the very first letter he confided to his sister the news that he had taken a servant. He writes:

"He is named Myself! And a bad bargain he is, truly! Myself is lazy, clumsy, thoughtless. His master is hungry or thirsty, and often enough Myself has neither bread nor water to give him; he doesn't even know how to shield him from the wind which whistles through the door and window. As soon as I am awake I ring for Myself, and he makes my bed. Then he sweeps the room, and clumsy he is at it.

"'Myself!'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Look at that cobweb with the big fly buzzing in it till I am half giddy with the noise, and the fluff under the bed, and the dust under the window panes!'

"The lazy beggar gazes at me and doesn't stir, and yet, in spite of all his defects, I can't get rid of that unintelligent Myself!"

And the same stupid "Myself" it was who afterward enriched French literature with a series of wonderful works.—Youth's Companion.

Number of People Since Adam.

Did you ever make a calculation of the probable number of people that have inhabited our globe since the beginning of time? No doubt you will say that such calculations involve a loss of time, and are after all barren of results. But let us take a few minutes' time and approximate, with a certain degree of accuracy, the number of souls that have been ushered into this wicked world since the time when it was "not good for Adam to be alone."

At the present time it is believed that there are 1,400,000,000 human beings on the globe; but let us suppose that there has been but an average of 900,000,000 living at any one time since the creation. Next, to give room for any possible doubt, we will put the average length of life at fifty years. (It may have been much longer than that 5,000 years ago, but has been much shorter for the last 1,000 years.) With the average length of life as above, we have had two generations of 900,000,000 each every century for the past 6,000 years.

Taking this for granted this globe has had 66,627,843,237,075,266 human inhabitants since the beginning of time. To even bury this vast number the whole landed surface of the globe, every inch of it, would have to be dug over 120 times!—Philadelphia Press.

How a Chameleon Looks.

Upon a crimson cloth the chameleon becomes almost crimson; move it upon a gray surface and the bright tints will quickly subside. But at night, whether disturbed or not, it invariably assumes its palest tints. Two which I caught in the Cape Town garden, which were of a very brilliant metallic green, were splendidly decorated. On the back or sides, sometimes saddlewise and sometimes lengthwise, were slashes of red. The markings vary in the individuals. The crest and decorations on the head and back are like fretwork, the whole body and limbs are dotted with very fine warts or tubercles like shagreen, and when angry all these distinctive features are exaggerated, the gills and crest are swelled, and the skin of the chin is puffed out so as to show white stripes, while the creature opens its mouth wide, displaying the yellow, fleshy interior, and closing its teeth on your finger should you provoke it to do so.—Cor. Forest and Stream.

Deaths in January.

It has often been noticed at the beginning of January the death is announced of a number of prominent men. The reason is probably found in the fact not that great men are more prone to die in January than at any other time of the year, but that the weather in that month is unsettled, and consequently hard on the constitution alike of great and humble. Great men are only human after all, and a great man physically weakened by hard work or disease is just as likely to die from a change of weather as though he were a day laborer.

The mortality tables show that the month of January and the first month of exceedingly hot weather in the summer are more fatal than any other time of the year, and the great must take their chances with other people.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Labouchere's Narrow Escape.

Labouchere was in Mexico during the rebellion, and he thought he might serve humanity by secretly giving both belligerents good advice. One night, as he approached the tent of one of the two generals, he heard the voices of these rival pretenders in converse. Creeping close to the canvas he listened, and discovered that they had agreed upon a truce in order to hang him in the morning as an example to both armies. In the morning, however, this misunderstood mutual friend had naturally disappeared.—Cor. New York World.

Told Him Why.

Marriage Records in South Carolina.

South Carolina is the only state in the Union in which no official record of marriages is kept.—Charleston News and Courier.

WHO LOVES HORSES LOVES WOMEN.

Perhaps Some Girls Look Unhappy Behind Speeders, but Don't Be Too Sure.

The usually apparently endless stream of wagons and carriages, two wheelers, drags and sulkies was filing along the west side drive in Central park, and a wide awake citizen was seated beside a reporter looking on, when the wide awake citizen relieved his mind by this speech:

"I never can understand the women and the horsey men—how they get along together. Several things are common to most men who are what I call addicted to the horse. They either wear the most peculiar and pronounced hats and coats that attract attention from afar, or they pay no heed at all to dress and look shabby even though they are rich. Next, they are rough in speech and often profane. Then again they are so fond of what is called 'talking horse' that many of them seem to warm up on no other topic. But last of all, they are all fond of women. That is no new discovery of mine. I suspect that, though women were men's first companions, the horse has been coupled with woman in man's admiration ever since the quadruped attained sufficient development to create the race of horsey men, and it has long been a rule that the men who love horses are also especially fond of women. But what I can't understand is what fun the ladies get out of the situation.

"I sit here in the park on every fine day and study the case. The horsey men do not talk to the women beside them. They are the most tiresome companions in the world. They never, as a rule, know anything about the scenery they are passing through. They see and enjoy nothing but the horse they are driving. They sit bent up on their seats with a rapt or a stolid expression of face watching the animal they drive. Whether there is a magnetic tingle in the reins, such as we fishermen feel in the pole that is tugged by a trout, I cannot say.

"Either that or the mere delight of watching the rise and fall of the horse's back as it warms to its work suffices to satisfy the man, and there he sits, silent and engrossed—about as admirable a companion to the woman by his side as a mummy or a statue, but that is not all. He has taken the precaution to put on big goggles to protect his eyes from dust and flying stones and clots of dirt. She cannot so disfigure herself, and therefore has to hold her head down and strain the rim of her hat to make it help protect her face. Sometimes she has all she can do to keep her hat from blowing away. What fun any woman gets out of such a companionship is more than I can see.

"But," said the wide awake man. "I was once speaking to a woman of this view of the case, and she plunged me deeper into the mystery. 'A man with a horse has a tremendous advantage over those who have not got horses in gaining favor with young girls,' said she; 'a horse will cover many deficiencies in a man, and a girl will take him and drop a dozen better fellows.' 'Why?' I asked, 'are women so fond of horses?' 'Well,' she replied, 'they like men who own horses: such men are not so numerous as those who don't.'"—New York Sun.

Is an Elopement Ever Excusable?

I should hesitate to say that an elopement is never excusable, but it is very rare indeed that the evils resulting from not marrying would approach in consequence those resulting from a marriage entered into under circumstances which made an elopement seem necessary. I believe in early marriages, but I also believe that every influence should be placed about that sacred institution to keep it pure and holy: that none should enter into it "lightly or unadvisedly." And it would be usually safer to postpone a marriage until objections could be overcome rather than to run the risks attending an elopement. It is a great temptation to a bad man if a woman is willing to enter into a secret marriage, and an elopement partakes of that secrecy. I certainly do not consider this an idle question, but one which calls for much thought.—Mrs. Lyman Abbott in Ladies' Home Journal.

Cows Milked by Machine.

A machine, it is claimed, that will milk thirty cows in one hour and do it so easily and neatly that the cows will scarcely know it has been invented in Glasgow. The machine is constructed on the vacuum principle, and when adjusted to the cow the milk flows in a continuous stream and the machine does the work without assistance. The contrivance is largely used in Scotland, and its practicability has been long ago demonstrated. The greatest objection to the machine by farmers will probably be its price. It is valued at $55 in Scotland, the duties add $45, making the total cost $100.—New York Telegram.

Never Lend Your Books.

If you like to give any one a book, by all means do it; but if you lend a book, it generally means losing it, for which you receive no thanks or even an apology. I have long ago given up lending books, for I have always found if a friend borrows a volume—which he probably does not look at for a fortnight—you immediately want to refer to it the moment he has left the house. —London Graphic.

Rats Come from Asia.

Rats are natives of Asia, and their raids westward belong to comparative modern times. From the fact that the rat is not mentioned by any of the early Europeans it is surmised that it was unknown west of the Ganges in ancient times.—Philadelphia Press.

Why Diamonds Are Liked.

The diamond was reputed as a preserver against epidemics and poisons. It calms anger and foments conjugal love. The ancients called it "the stone of reconciliation." It symbolizes constancy, strength and innocence.—Paris Figaro.

A Leaky Sausage Apparatus.

A little lady walked into a butcher shop and asked for two pounds of beefsteak. When it had been weighed she told the butcher to put it in the mincing machine and chop it up so that she could make meat balls out of it for dinner.

The meat expert, quite an ordinary looking man, entirely unsuited to be the hero of a story like this, followed the instructions, minced the meat and handed it in a paper to the customer. Then he turned in his matter of fact way to attend to a man new to housekeeping who was inquiring if he had any nice mutton steak, and if so how much it was a yard.

The little lady looked at the minced meat and asked the butcher to weigh it again. He did so, and there was just 1¾ pounds.

"There!" said the little lady indignantly. "Your sausage machine has stolen a quarter of a pound of my steak. I've suspected that machine for a long time. You've got to make it good."

"I will not," retorted the butcher. "It's a case of natural wear and tear. Maybe some of the weight of the steak has vanished in the process to which it has been subjected, but there's two pounds of nourishment there."

"The machine either leaks or there's a secret trap that steals my steak," the little lady insisted. "I won't take the meat till it weighs two pounds."

And she didn't.—New York Herald.

The Saltest of Salt Lakes.

A lake with a salt roof isn't frozen salt, and it isn't underground. On the contrary, this remarkable lake may be seen at any time during the year, fully exposed, being even at its best when the sun is shining directly upon it. This wonderful body of water is one of the saltest of the salt lakes, and is situated near Obdorsk, Siberia. The lake is nine miles wide and seventeen long, and within the memory of man was not entirely roofed over by the salt deposit. Originally evaporation played the most prominent part in coating the lake over with salt, but at the present time the salt springs which surround it are adding fast to the thickness of the crust.

In the long ago rapid evaporation of the lake's waters left great salt crystals floating on the surface. In course of time these caked together. Thus the waters were finally entirely covered. In 1878 the lake found an underground outlet into the River Obi, which lowered its surface about three feet. The salt crust was so thick, however, that it retained its old level, and now presents the curious spectacle of a salt roofed lake. The salt coat increases six inches in thickness every year. The many islands with which the lake is studded are said to act as braces and to help keep the arched salt crust in position.—St. Louis Republic.

The Innocent.

She stood looking up at him so innocently from under the sprig of mistletoe that still hung in the parlor as a reminder of the Christmas season; she was so pretty, and she was under the mistletoe, and he couldn't help it—he had kissed her.

It was an ungentlemanly and unmanly thing to do. He knew that now, as he remembered her frightened, startled look, and the miserable excuses he had tried to stammer out; yes, and the tears in her eyes, and the little choking sob with which she had received his stumbling apology.

"Who could think she would feel like that about it?" he thought: "dear little innocent!"

And she—after he was gone, she lay down on the sofa and cried. "I like him—so much and now—to think that he should kiss me at last—and then say he didn't mean anything by it. What does he think I stood there for?—the little idiot!"—Life.

A Parrot Seldom Forgets.

A maiden lady once had a fine talking bird, but, being subjected to headaches, she often put him in the kitchen. The cook objected and said to Polly, "You horrid thing, I wish you were dead."

Polly soon learned this; and when his mistress got better and took him to her own room, he said, "You horrid thing. I wish you were dead."

This shocked the delicate little lady. One day she met her rector, and, after he had inquired about her health, he said, "How is Polly?"

Then she told him how Polly had affected her nerves. The rector said: "Send him to spend a month with my bird. He may forget it."

She immediately accepted his offer. In due time Polly was sent home, and, as soon as his mistress went to the cage, Polly saluted her with:

"You horrid thing, I wish you were dead. We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord!"—New York Recorder.

In an English Railway Train.

First Artist—Children don't seem to me to sell now as they used.

Second Artist (in a hoarse whisper)—Well, I was at Stodge's yesterday. He'd just knocked off three little girls' heads—horrid raw things! a dealer came in, sir, bought 'em directly—took 'em away, wet as they were, on the stretchers and wanted Stodge to let him have some more next week.

Deposits of Loadstone.

A Kansas City paper says that there is a bowlder in the Ozarks which will attract a jackknife dropped nine feet away, and that along the line of the fifth principal meridian, in the counties of Carter, Reynolds, Iron and Washington, the lines of east and west surveys are deflected from the true course several degrees, the needle being affected by the deposits of loadstone.

Hebrew tradition says that the tablets of Moses were of sapphire. In Hebrew the word sappir means the most beautiful. It symbolizes loyalty, justice, beauty and nobility.

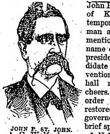
ENEMIES OF LIQUOR.

PROHIBITION NATIONAL CONVENTION MEETS AT CINCINNATI.

John P. St. John Temporary and E. F. Ritter Permanent Chairmen—A Snarl Over Revenue and Silver Planks of the Platform.

CINCINNATI, June 29.—The Music hall of Queen City has been the scene of many a notable gathering that has left its impress upon the history of the state and of the country; but never has it held a more determined, earnest and enthusiastic meeting of men and women than that now assembled under its big dome.

Frances Willard, Stevens, Black, St. John, Stewart and others of the old leaders as they appeared, were recognized one by one. By 10 o'clock every delegation was in its place and with their banners and flags and bright-hued badges, and with the life, energy and enthusiasm that they manifested, the scene was one of inspiration. Chairman Dickie called the gathering to order and introdued Rev. J. C. Evans, of Illinois, who delivered the invocation.



JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

The national committee recommended John P. St. John, of Kansas, for temporary chairman and at the mention of the name of the ex-presidential candidate the convention made the hall ring with cheers. When order had been restored the ex-governor made a brief speech.

A. G. Wolfenberger, of Nebraska; A. G. Wilson and G. W. Stevens, of Massachusetts were made temporary sectretaries.

The platform committee and national committee were then announced.

The convention reassembled at 4 o'clock when the committee on permanent organization reported the names of Colonel E. Ritter, of Indianapolis, for permanent chairman, and Rev. S. Small for secretary. The committee also reported a recommendation that the votes cast should only represent the delegates in actual attendance and the votes of delegates who had not come to Cincinnati should not be announced by the chairman of state delegations. For nearly two hours thereafter amid considerable excitement and uproar the convention debated the pros and cons of the question. At times the uproar was almost deafening and Chairman St. John almost splintered his desk and lost his voice in an effort to secure even a semblance of order. Finally, after the previous question had been ordered by 200 delegates and the chair had been unable to decide which side had it, a roll call was ordered and the amendment was defeated by 721 to 359. The majority report was then adopted amid prolonged cheers. At 6:40 the convention took a recess till 8 o'clock.

The delegates were slow in getting together for the night session and it was not until 8:30 that Chairman St. John resumed the gavel. The inevitable quartette had an inning of half an hour and the clock was pointing to 9 when the Hon. E. F. Ritter, of Indianapolis, was presented as permanent presiding officer. He made a lengthy address, rambling and anecdotal. There would, he said, be no peace in politics, no peace in the general commercial affairs of the nation, no peace in the house of God until the liquor question was settled. Then if they could not have peace let them have war. The committee on platform will not be ready to report till morning. It is in a snarl over the revenue and silver planks and an all night session seems probable.

THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Details of the Work Done by the Prohibitionists.

CINCINNATI, O., July 1.—It was 9:50 when the second day's session of the Prohibition convention was called to order by Permanent Chairman Eli Ritter, of Indianapolis. A prayer of remarkable brevity was offered by J. C. Quinn, Episcopalian, of Fremont, Neb., and the preacher was barely finished when W. W. Gibbs. of Virgina, was on his feet with a resolution that read as follows:

> Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that speakers who are accorded the honor of addressing the convention be requested to refrain from unnecessary references or illustrations that could be constructed as a reflection on any of the participants in the late struggle."

The resolution was considered under suspension of the rules and finally adopted.

An appeal for contributions to the campaign fund was then made and W. T. Wardwell, of New York, treasurer of the Standard Oil company, headed the list with $1.000. Then the state delegations came forward and contributed liberally, and Dr. Evans finally retired with the satisfaction of having raised $20,000 in two hours. The convention came to a sudden halt at this point for want of something to do, and at 12:15 a recess was taken until 2 o'clock.

The reading of the report of the platform committee was the first thing in order at the afternoon session and the convention promptly decided to limit speeches upon it to five minutes each. The main planks, liquor, finance and tariff, as put in the platform by the majority, are as follows:

Liquor Traffic.

The liquor traffic is a foe to civilization, the arch enemy of popular government and a public nuisance. It is the citadel of the forces that corrupt politics, promote poverty and crime, degrade the nation's home life, thwart the will of the people, and deliver our country into the hands of rapacious class interests. All laws that under the guise of regulation legalize and protect this traffic, or make the government share in its ill-gotten gains, are vicious in principle and powerless as a remedy. We declare anew for the entire suppression of the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation and transportation of alcoholic liquors as a beverage by federal and state legislation and the full powers of government should be exerted to secure this result. No party that fails to recognize the nature of this issue in American politics is deserving of the support of the people.

The Finance Plank.

The money of the country should be issued by the general government only and in sufficient quantities to meet the demands of business and give full opportunity for the employment of labor. To this end an increase in the volume of money is demanded, and no individual or corporation should be allowed to make any profit through its issue. It should consist of gold, silver and paper and be made a legal tender for the payment of all debts, public or private. Its volume should be fixed at a definite sum per capita, and made to increase in population.

The Tariff Plank.

Tariff should be levied only as a defense against foreign governments which levy tariff upon or bar out our products from their markets, revenue being incidental. The residue of means necessary to an economical administration of the government should be raised by levying a burden upon what the people possess, instead of upon what we consume.

Margins.

Speculations in margins, the cornering of grain and products and the formation of pools, trusts and combinations for the arbitrary advancement of prices should be suppressed.

The other planks in the platform demand woman suffrage and equal pay regardless of sex; demand government control of railroads, telegraphs and other public corporations; demand the further restriction of immigration and the extension of the naturalization period; opposes acquisition of lands by aliens and favors forfeiture of unearned land grants; denounces the reign of mob law and demands trial by jury of all citizens; demands one day's rest in seven for all persons; favors arbitration and pensions; unequivocally stands by the American public school system and teaching in English and opposes grants of money to sectarian schools and denounces both parties for truckling to the money interests and to the saloons.

A minority report on the financial and tariff planks was submitted by Captain Rassmussen, and T. W. Hart, of Illinois, presented a substitute for the financial plank of both the majority and minority reports. The majority report was finally adopted after the free silver plank had been stricken out by a vote on a call of states of 596 to 335.

Evening Session.

The hall was crowded to suffocation at the evening session. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Hagins, of Indianapolis, and then Chairman Ritter announced that the roll of states would be called for nominations for president. When California was reached Ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, took the stage at the request of the delegation and presented the name of General John Bidwell, of Chico, Cal. He reviewed his career from 1841 to date; how he had calloused his hands with picks as a miner; eulogized his life and works, and defended him from the attacks that had been made upon his career in congress. Hipp, of Colorado, Whitfield, of Iowa, Bain, of Kentucky, and numerous others seconded Bidwell's nomination.

W. Jennings Demorest, of New York, was nominated by J. Lloyd Thomas, of New York city, and seconded by Professor Grandison, colored, of North Carolina.

Ohio, through L. B. Logan, presented Giron T. Stewart, the venerable Buckeye Prohibitionist.

The ballot resulted: Bidwell 590, Stewart 139, Demorest 179. The nomination was then made unanimous.

The following vice presidential candidates were presented: Sam Small of Georgia, William Satterlee of Minnesota, Joshua Levering of Maryland, J. B. Canfill of Texas, and Thomas Carskadon of West Virginia. Small withdrew before a vote was taken, saying he was no man's fool and knew before he was here many days that the ticket had been made up. The ballot gave Levering 380 votes, Canfill 386, Satterlee 26 and Carskadon 21. Before the vote was announced changes were made and Canfill received 416 votes, nine more than enough to win. The convention then adjourned sine die.

Chief Justice Gilfillan, of the supreme court, has handed down his decision on the much talked of oil inspector case. The judgment of the lower court is reversed, but the decision is a victory for H. B. Willis, state oil inspector, nevertheless, and the oil companies will probably come forward and pay the fees for inspection over which all this legal wrangle has been created. Willis won his case in the lower court and the rulings of that court are sustained in every particular by the chief justice who reverses the judgment on a technical point merely. This is in the fact that Willis is not the proper party to bring suit under the circumstances.

WEAVER AND FIELD

THEY LEAD THE PEOPLE'S PARTY IN THE COMING CAMPAIGN.

The Nominations Both Made on the First Ballot — Much Time Consumed in Speeches—Platform Upon Which the Party Stands.

OMAHA, July 5.—General James B. Weaver, of Iowa, is the candidate of the People's party for president of the United States. For several days it has been manifest with the leaders that Weaver was the choice of the vast majority. It was not until the distinguished jurist, Judge Gresham, positively declined to be a candidate that the delegates turned to their own ranks and with almost one accord selected the veteran Greenbacker as their standard bearer. There were some who feared that greenback predilictions might affect his availability, and it was these gentlemen who brought Senator Kyle, of South Dakota, to the front; but the sentiment that one of the "old guard" should be selected to lead the party was overwhelming, and Weaver's triumph was finally complete.

A Southern man—General J. G. Field, of Virginia—was nominated for vice president.

THE FIRST DAY.

Temporary Organization Effected and Speeches Made.

The convention was first called to order Saturday morning by Chairman Taubeneck, of Illinois, and C. H. Ellington, of Georgia, was made temporary chairman, and J. W. Hayes, of New Jersey, temporary secretary.

Mr. Ellington proceeded in a somewhat labored manner to deliver a ponderous address, which was only finished by a final resort to manuscript, to which the speaker closely and awkwardly confined himself.

The states were called for committees, after which a recess was taken till 2 o'clock.

The afternoon session was devoted to speeches by various of the leaders present. After the speeches had been finished the convention adjourned till Monday.

THE SECOND DAY.

Loucks, of South Dakota, Chairman. Weaver for President.

hairman Ellington was prompt n ng the convention to order at the ified time, 8 a. m.

udge Robertson of Texas, presented report of the committee on perma- organization, naming H. L. cks, of South Dakota, as permanent irman and Tom W. Hayes, of New sey, secretary-treasurer of the ights of Labor, as chief secretary. e chief selections were ratified with ell, and Chairman Loucks on being esented received an enthusiastic elcome. He is a one-legged veteran nd supported himself on his crutch.

The committee on rules reported in favor of dropping all but the two highest candidates in balloting for president, after the first ballot. This didn't suit and was voted down after a hot debate. At 12 o'clock it was reported that the platform would not be ready for several hours and a recess was taken.

Afternoon Session.

It was 2:07 o'clock when Chairman Loucks called the convention to order, but it was after 3 p. m. before all the delegates and visitors had secured seats and the raps of the chairman had resulted in even a beginning of business.

Thomas V. Cator, of California, read a long preamble to the platform outlining the wrongs to be righted and the belief of the party. It was unanimously adopted by a rising vote. The following was then read as

The Platform.

We demand a national currency, safe, sound and feasible, issued by the general government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that without the use of banking corporations, a just equitable and efficient means of distribution, direct to the people at a tax not to exceed 2 per cent. per annum to be provided as set forth in the sub-treasury plank of the Farmers' Alliance or some better system, also by payments in discharge of its obligations for public improvements.

We demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1,

We demand that the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

We demand a graded income tax. We believe that the moneys of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people and hence we demand that all national and state revenue shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government economically and honestly administered.

We demand that the postal savings banks be established by the government for the safe deposit of the earnings of the people and to facilitate exchange.

Transportatian being a means of exexchange and a public necessity the government should own and operate the railroads in the interest of the people.

The telegraph and telephone, like the postal service being a necssity for the transmission of news, should be owned and operated by the government in the interest of the people.

land, including all the natural es of wealth, is the heritage of all eople and should not be monopolized peculative purposes, and alien owner- of land should be prohibited. All s now held by railroads and other cor- ations in excess of their actual needs all lands now owned by aliens should reclaimed by the government and held actual settlers only.

After submitting the foregoing the com- ittee on resolutions held another meet- g and unanimously agreed to report the llowing to the convention at the night ession:

Whereas, other questions have been presented for our consideration, we hereby submit the following, not a part of the platform of the People's party, but as resolutions expressive of the sentiment of this convention:

First—Resolved, that we demand a free ballot and a fair count in all elections and pledge ourselves to secure it to every legal voter without federal intervention through the adoption in the states of the Australian or secret ballot system.

Second—Resolved, that the revenue derived from the graded income should be applied to the reduction of the burden of taxation now resting upon the domestic industries of this country.

Third—Resolved, that we pledge our support to fair and liberal pensions to ex-union soldiers and sailors.

Fourth—Resolved, that we condemn the the fallacy of protection of American labor under the present system, which opens our ports to the pauper and criminal classes of the world and crowds out our wage earners; and we denounce the present ineffective laws against contract labor, and we demand the further restriction of undesirable immigration.

Fifth—Resolved, That we cordially sympathize with the efforts of organized workingmen to shorten the hours of labor, and demand a rigid enforcement of the existing eight hour law on government work, and ask that a penalty clause be added to the said law.

Sixth—Resolved, That we regard the maintenance of a large standing army of mercenaries, known as the Pinkerton system, as a menace to our liberties, and we demand its abolition; and we condemn the recent invasion of the territory of Wyoming by the higher assassins of plutocracy assisted by federal officials.

Seventh—Resolved, We commend to the favorable consideration of the people and the reform press the legislative system known as the initiative and referendum.

Eighth—Resolved, That we favor a constitutional provision limiting the office of president and vice president to one term and providing for the election of senators of the United States, by a direct vote of the people.

Ninth—Resolved, That we oppose any subsidy or national aid to any private corporation for any purpose.

Applause and cries of "Amen" from all parts of the house was the reception accorded the paragraph favoring government control of the telephone and tegraph lines. A regular Baptist camp meeting chorus greeted the land plank. The conclusion of the reading of the platform was warmly greeted. Its adoption was instantly moved, and it was put through by unanimous consent and the whole convention rising in advance of the chair and adopting the platform almost before he could move its adoption. At once on the adoption of the platform the convention broke over all restraint and went wild in a demonstration that had a likeness to descriptions of enthusiastic bastile demonstrations in France. The convention, audience and delegates, rose to their feet, and the first platform of the People's party was ushered into the world with a scene of enthusiasm that in intensity and earnestness, though not in absolute length, almost equaled the cyclonic ovation which greeted the mention of the name of James G. Blaine at Minneapolis. That scene lasted thirty-one minutes, and this scene between twenty and twenty-five minutes.

The Evening Session.

It was not until nearly 10 p. m. when the regular order of business, that of calling the roll of states for nomination of candidates for the presidency, was reached. When Alabama was called E. C. Manning, of that state, in a speech that was very imperfectly understood, owing to his distance from the platform, named General J. B. Weaver, of Iowa. General Fields of Virginia, Senator Van Wyck of Nebraska, and Senator Kyle of South Dakota, were also placed in nomination.

E. S. Fish, of Minnesota, deplored the fact that Ignatius Donnelly would not allow his name to be presented. A

It was not until 1:30 that the speeches were finished.

The roll call of states on the vote then began and resulted Weaver, 995; Kyle, 275; scattering, 2.

S. F. Norton moved the nomination be made unanimous. Schilling, of Wisconsin, seconded the motion.

The nomination was made unanimous at 1:55 a. m., and the delegates arose to their feet and gave three cheers.

A Texas delegate moved an adjournment until 8:30, but the chair ordered the call of roll for nominations for vice president at 2 a. m.

Fields of Virginia, and Ben Terrell of Texas, were placed in nomination, and at 2:15 a ballot was taken, resulting: Field 733, Terrell 554.

At 2:20 Field and Weaver were introduced and briefly returned thanks for the honor, and the convention adjourned sine die.

KANSAS REPUBLICANS.

A. W. Smith Nominated for Governor on the Fifth Ballot.

TOPEKA, Kas., July 2.—The Republican convention, which did not adjourn till nearly 2 a. m., was called to order a few minutes after 9 o'clock and at once proceeded to ballot for governor. Three ballots had been taken at the time of adjournment without a choice. On the fifth ballot A. W. Smith was nominated, receiving fourteen votes more than was necessary. The nomination was made unanimous. R. R. Moore was nominated for lieutenant governor on the third ballot and his nomination was also made unanimous.

CAMPBELL WILL DECLINE.

So Says H. C. Payne, the Wisconsin Republican Leader.

MILWAUKEE, July 4.—H. C. Payne, the Wisconsin Republican leader, and member of the national committee, sent to J. S. Clarkson the following telegram: "Campbell will decline. This is private. I am posting our Washington friends so as to get immediate action. I cannot be in Washington immediately."

The fact that this telegram had been sent leaked out accidentally and caused much talk in Republican circles.

To Cut Off Appeal.

MADISON, Wis., July 4.—The secretary of state has published notices of election. This was done for the purpose of cutting off an appeal to the supreme court on apportionment law, which was passed by the extra session of the legislature which has just closed.

For plain or fancy job work leave orders at the JOURNAL job rooms.

Mrs. E. W. Wile arrived last week to visit relatives and friends in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Marshall, of Red Lake Falls, attended the theatre on Monday evening.

If you want neat and stylish job work call and see what we can do for you. Any kinds—all kinds.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

Mrs. W. H. Topping, of Grand Forks, has been visiting old friends in this city during encampment week.

S. A. Halgren, of Cormorant, Becker Co., was one of the boys in blue who called at the JOURNAL office this week.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Have you observed that some of the world's noted flyers are in the city this week. Such is said to be the case.

John O. French was one of the members of Col. F. Choate Post of Detroit in attendance at the encampment this week.

D. L. Wellman, the Saskatchewan Fife wheat man, was one of the G. A. R. men in the city this week from Frazee City, Minn.

About thirty old vets. arrived from Fosston on Tuesday evening to participate in the festivities for the balance of the week.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work, from a fine handsome label to a full sheet colored poster in a first class manner.

The ladies of the Congregational church did a good business on Monday in their lunch room business, netting over $50.00 we are told.

R. L. Elder, formerly of Edna, was in attendance on the G. A. R. exercises in the city this week. R. L. is now a resident of Ullen in Norman county.

Nick Erschfield's wheat threshed this week grades No. 2 Northern. Some wheat that we have seen is so badly bleached and damp that it gets no grade at all.

Col. W. H. Topping was over from Grand Forks on Monday to celebrate with the boys. Col. Topping was the first commander of the Col. Cobham Post of this city.

If anybody failed to enjoy himself during encampment week the cause must have been inherent within himself, for certainly every facility was offered by a generous people.

Ex-Gov. A. Barto, of Sauk Centre, was in the city on July 4th enjoying the festivities with the boys. The governor was one of the boys in blue and is right at home on such occasions.

The opera house was gaily decorated this week in honor of the great event. Festoons of tinted colors hanging suspended from wall and ceiling, while everywhere an opportunity offered was the national colors in great profusion.

The JOURNAL regrets that Bro. Lamphere of the Moorhead News was unavoidably detained and did not show up with the boys upon this occasion. We may overlook it for once Bro, L., but don't let it occur again.

Among the prominet newspaper men who favored the JOURNAL office with a call this week were Dr. J. C. Curreyer, editor of the Minnesota Horseman, Mankato, Minn.; Thos. F. Stevens, Register, Warren, Minn.; C. T. Lanman, Times, McIntosh, Minn.; W. L. Palmer, Thirteen Towns, Fosston, and C. L. Hartwick of the News Bureau, Grand Forks, N. D.

The fire bell got in a sample of its thrilling work at the witching hour of two a. m. on Wednesday. The department responded with alacrity to find that Barnes & Slocum's smoke house was indulging in a bit of a go-as-you-please pyrotechnical display. The show was soon disheartened by a free use of river water on the side and the department adjourned for the night.

There has been no lack of entertainments this week and the range of choice has been wide and various, suited to every requirement, to every taste. The lovers of the turf found in the events of the week at the racing park some of the best flyers in the country, while at the ball park a game every day between noted clubs furnished fun galore. The gun club, not to be behind, had an event each day to entertain those whose tastes run that way, while running, jumping, leaping and all that interests others. All you had to do if you didn't see what you wanted was to ask for it and it would be produced.

New hay is beginning to appear in the market.

Comrade James Compton, of Fergus Falls was in attendance on the ceremonies this week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Palmer and children, of Angus, drove down to celebrate the glorious 4th.

And the boys had a grand good time and were loud in their acknowledgments of Queen City hospitality.

Although the police force was doubled for the week there has been very little use for it as very little disturbance was noticable.

No runaways nor accidents of any great importance to report during the encampment is a very pleasant feature of this encampment.

On dress parade the old boys are not as supple as they once were nor so precise, but they get there just the same with an avidity and eagerness that none but an old veteran can fully appreciate.

The little drum corps of L. H. Tenney Post of Moorhead was an attractive feature of the encampment. Every member of this corps is a son of veteran. This corps, like ours, was only organized recently, but they have made exceeding good use of their time.

Will Roome returned from Louisiana last week well satisfied with his experience in that country. We have not had the pleasure of interviewing Mr. R., but we are told that he is totally disgusted with life in the sunny south and is now content to abide in the Red River valley for the future.

Comrade G. N. Courtright and wife were up from Fertile to attend encampment and on Tuesday Mrs. Courtright received a telegram announcing the death of Mrs. George Dillon, a near neighbor of theirs. Mrs. Dillon was a daughter of comrade H. C. Burdick of Col. George post.

"Woman against Woman" was the play on the boards at the Grand opera house on Monday. Stripped of its many improbable and impossible situations, for which the playwright seems to be more responsible than the actor, it is a strong emotional drama with, however, a sufficient amount of comical situations to relieve the tedium and give it sparkle. The company is above the average and seems to have given good satisfaction.

Miss Carrie Hammond who has been employed during the spring and summer season as trimmer for Mrs. E. E. Bangs, returns to her home in Laporte, Ind., this (Thursday) evening. She will visit relatives and friends in Minneapolis and Decorah, Iowa, en route. The little lady has won many friends during her brief stay in our city who will unite in the wish for a safe journey to her home and a future of unalloyed happiness.

The parade on Wednesday morning was one of the finest of the week. The Juvenile Fire Department, consisting of little lads and lassies from the Fifth ward under the leadership of Jack McLaren, figured conspicuously, while the battery commanded by Capt. Roberts, of Detroit, came in for a large share of attention. The speech of Hon. Knute Nelson at the grand stand was an eloquent one and highly enjoyed by the old boys in blue as well as by all who heard it.

Among those who honored our office with a call during the week was our old time Glyndon friend C. G. Tracy. The writer knew Charlie first in Glyndon in '72 when he was no richer than we are now, while at present he is one of the wealthiest merchants in that nice little burg while we—well we have our fortune still to make. Calls like Charlie's are the oases on the desert of the newspaper man's life that go far to cheer one along the way and are very highly appreciated.

The play at the grand on Tuesday evening seemed better adapted to the company than the one of the previous night, there being many excellent comedians in the troop, and "The Danites" abounds in comical situations. The leading parts are well sustained by Mr. Fierce and Beatrice Thorne who are good anywhere, but the absence of a program prevents us from giving mention of other deserving characters in the play. We are pleased to notice that the company is drawing a full house as it amply deserves to do.

Bro. Osborne and son Ray of the Glyndon News, favored this office with a pleasant call on Tuesday to look over the new JOURNAL outfit, which Bro. O. was graciously pleased to pronounce "very good." Bro. O. is publishing one of those fearlessly independent papers that never fails to express its opinion upon all topics. The News has a peculiar tone of its own that all who know its genial proprietor never fails to recognize, and it is generally found upon the right side of every question. If Bro. O. is meeting that measure of success he deserves he will be rolling in wealth at no very distant day.

Herb Marshall has accepted a position at the Scandia-American bank.

E. K. Overland of Garden was enjoying the sights in the city on the 4th.

Phil Porger, a Crookston old-timer, celebrated with the boys in the city on the 4th.

W. D. Pinkerton and family are visiting relatives and friends in the city this week.

Miss Eda M. Spencer of St. Paul is in the city this week the guest of Mrs. Frank Barnum.

Miss Grace Smith of Wabasha is visiting in the city for the summer the guest of the Bivins'.

Ole Renne is in attendance at the great encampment this week, from Col. George Post, of Fertile.

Comrades Jacobson and Salverson of Wm. Ketcham post, Ada, were callers at this office on Tuesday.

N. H. Fulton of Hawley a former resident of Crookston, was enjoying the encampment with his old friends in the city.

Crookston did herself proud in her treatment of the old boys during the encampment and they will remember it.

J. C. Webb, Jr., of Stillwater, was over from Grand Forks taking in the 4th, the guest of the genial Frank Barnum of the Times.

W. G. Newton a former resident of Crookston, is visiting relatives and friends in the city and taking in the great doings this week.

Comparatively few drunks were observed upon our streets on the 4th but they seemed to make up in quality what they lacked in quantity.

It was estimated that from 15,000 to 20,000 people came to the city to enjoy the festivities of the occasion on July 4th. Certainly never before were our streets so crowded as on that day.

Among the many good boys who were in attendance at the annual encampment this week was comrade John Wright, of Ada. John does not seem to be one of the kind who ages easily.

J. C. Congdon of Brainerd was a caller at the JOURNAL office on Monday. J. C. owns one of the best farms near this city which he will doubtless one day utilize as a place whereon to build the home of his old age.

That Crookston knows well how to entertain and feed a multitude was amply demonstrated on Monday in the manner in which she fed and cared for the thousands of strangers within our gates. We heard many compliments given her.

W. O. Wilson had on exhibition at his place on July 4th a paper tent and paper soldiers, the work of his children, that looked so naturally that one was, at first glance inclined to the opinion that it was real—a part of the encampment. W. O. justly took great pride in showing it.

Tom Wilcox was one of the good boys of Fertile to enjoy camp life with the boys this week. Tom has been at the far west in quest of a better country, but finding it not he returned satisfied to cultivate Polk county soil yet awhile. He reports an average of 175 acres sown to wheat this spring.

The Grand Army boys who visited Crookston for the first time this week were loud in their praises of what they saw of Crookston's hospitality and of the location and the progress of our thriving city. Our people were indefatigable in their efforts to render their stay with us a pleasant one and the old vets seemed to appreciate their efforts.

The People's party legislative convention met at the court house on Thursday and put in nomination for the legislature B. M. Chesley and O. E. Olson, of Norman county and John D. Knudson of Polk county. E. E. Lommen was chairman of the committee and Geo. M. Swift, secretary. The chair appointed B. M. Chesley, Ole E. Olson, John D. Knudson, Ole Christianton and Martin Finseth as legislative committee.

C. B Kittredge was one of the Glyndonites who called on Tuesday morning to say howd'y and size us up. He was very much taken up with our new gasoline engine and intimates that he has ever had an idea that there was more or less gas used in the composition of the average newspaper of the day. C. B. is one of the old-timers in the Red river valley, coming in 1872, and the faith he had in the country in the start remains as firm and bright. It is such stuff as that which makes the desert bloom as the rose.

Tuesday goes on record as one of the hottest days of the season. It was a day when sweltering humanity sought eagerly for the grateful shade, though the cooling breezes helped materially to relieve the situation. The old vet was reminded strongly of those long hot days in the sunny south when on the long toilsome march or lying in the little dog-tent he vainly longed for a breath of fresh air to relieve the weary tedium. Gathered in little groups or reclining at ease in tents the old boys spent the afternoon recounting the old times and living over again the olden scenes.

J. C. Norby, editor of the Norman County Herald, gave this office a pleasant call on Thursday of last week. J. C. is a genial sort of a fellow, one whom it is a pleasure to meet.

Saturday was one of the busiest days Crookston ever saw. Everybody was decorating and fixing up for the grand event of this week—and such a transformation as Crookston never before saw.

E. M. Stanton went up to Thief River Falls on Sunday, orated Monday and returned Tuesday. He says the 4th was properly celebrated up there; and thinks the prospects of the young metropolis are bright.

The American express company in this city was supplanted on July 1st by the Great Northern express company, with the genial A. M. Silver as manager. A. M. has had the same position with the American and won many friends.

Will Heidrick returned on Thursday morning with his fair bride from their bridal tour. They remained to spend the 4th with his folks and then left for their future home in Winnipeg. Will is express agent on the N. P. railroad.

The Juvenile Fire Department, of the fifth ward, that took part in the parade under the able leadership of their trainer, Jack McLaren, deserves especial mention for their excellence of drill and deportment. The youngsters take to it as naturally as a duck to water.

Nels S. Johnson, of St. Hilaire, called to pay his respects to the JOURNAL on Tuesday morning. Nels is one of our many granger friends who, in trying to build up the country in which he lives, does not forget one of its important necessary adjuncts—the newspaper, so of course he is one of our valued subscribers.

For the hundreds of calls the JOURNAL had from the old boys in blue and others we return our sincere thanks, as well as for the many good words of cheer spoken on this occasion. The JOURNAL management is never happier than when serving our many friends acceptably, and if we may believe half the good words spoken we are doing that in a degree.

The committee on decorations awarded the first prize for the best decorated business house to Fontaine & Anglim; second to Gervais & Gervais; third to the Merchants' bank; and the fourth to the Times building. On residences, first to Frank Gravel; second to C. E. Sawyer; third to Mayor Anglim; fourth to E. M. Walsh. The report also made special mention of the figure of the Goddess of Liberty in the show window of Gervais & Gervais, and of the skill displayed by George Fontaine, who decorated for F. & A.

Among the many visitors to our city this week was genial Jerome Daniels, of Glyndon, and son, Jay, who was just more than enjoying himself, not only with the old vets, but also the old settlers, the boys of 72, one of whom he is which. He was domiciled with street commissioner Dan. McDonald, who did all in his power to entertain and interest. Jerome, of course, called in to look the JOURNAL office over, and was kind enough to remark that we were making a very excellent paper of it—Jerome always was a great flatterer. He informed us on the quiet that he had had a large sized time during this encampment.

In the light of events sometimes transpiring we are oftimes led to wonder what kind of consciences some semblances to humanity are composed of. On Monday one of these tobacco warehouses was sauntering along with no idea of the rights of others when suddenly his fly trap was sprung and—an elegant dress of a lady passer-by was utterly ruined by a stream of tobacco juice which the machine had ejected. Such things as this brings the blush of shame to the cheek of manhood to think that there are those of the sex with so little manliness in them. If there is such a thing as a human hog it is just such an animal as this one.

Will Arnold received an interesting letter from his brother, Capt. J. K. Arnold, this week which he kindly permitted us to read and quote from. The true friends of Capt. Arnold, and he has them in this neck of the woods, will be pleased to learn that he is doing well at present, has a good position at the Soldiers' Home in Milwaukee and writes very encouragingly of his prospects present and for the future. Sends his regards to all of his friends mentioning specially several of them, among whom were John McLean and John Hack now being residents of other places, but readers of the JOURNAL. Together with his many friends we wish the captain continued prosperity and long life.

Rev. M. Hoyt returned to his charge on Thursday.

Mrs. P. S. Ware came down from Thief River Falls Tuesday.

H. J. Bivans, publisher of the Wadena Tribune, was a caller at this office this week.

Dept. U. S. marshal Robert Morrison is in the city enjoying the festivities of the week.

Guy Aubol was down from Warren helping us enjoy the hilarities of the occasion this week.

J. E. Hattestad, of Fertile, called on the JOURNAL to get the paper sent him till after the campaign.

The orchestra at the Grand on Tuesday evening was extra fine. It was a Crookston institution.

Mart Bang was up from Ada to join in the festivities of the occasion. Mart brought the whole family.

Hon. B. M. Chesley and A. C. Holden, of Ada, were in to attend the convention on Thursday last.

Hon. Wm. Carlton was in the city last week from his home in Angus, and gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call.

Sheriff Jack Kivel came down last week after a man who had been detained by our chief, charged with larceny.

Miss Jennie Heath, sister of Mrs. Thomas Morris, arrived on Sunday morning for a two weeks' visit in our city.

During the absence of county attorney Holston at the Omaha convention Ed. George is acting county attorney.

Henry Schermer, who works for Locken & Holmboe, left for Silver Creek, Minn., Friday evening, where he will be married.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Hunter, of St. Paul, came up Monday to celebrate the 4th and visit Mrs. R. H. Roberts, a sister of Mrs. Hunter.

G. W. Garrett, manager of the Grand Forks telephone exchange, came over to celebrate the 4th and talk telephone with the business men.

The genial Pat Connery, of Edna, was enjoying himself to the fullest extent during the festivities of the occasion. Pat is a hummer, and no mistake.

Engineer Pat Cleary's family arrived from the west last week. Mrs. Cleary is somewhat improved in health, but not fully recovered, Mr. C. says.

Andrew Steenerson and county attorney Holston departed on Friday to attend the people's party national convention at Omaha. Expect to be gone about 10 days.

Judge of Probate C. M. Benson started for Eau Claire, Wis., on Thursday evening of last week to spend the 4th with his wife who is there visiting her relatives.

The pyrotechnical display from the court house yard on Monday evening was one of the finest of the kind ever seen in Polk county—in full keeping with the day and occasion.

Iver A. Krohn was up from Garden town celebrating our natal day. Iver is doing a good bit of summer-fallowing, believing that the better way to treat his land this year.

Mrs. Messick of Red Wing, a former resident of this city, is visiting in the family of M. M. Davis, of Euclid. Mrs. M. is a prominent member of the Women's Relief Corps, and was in attendance during encampment.

Judge Montague brought a little pressure to bear on a hackman who had charged $6.00 for the use of his hack for an hour. The judge let him off by his disgorging $3.00 and paying $2.00 costs. It would have been a good thing if a few more examples had been made of hackmen and others who charged exorbitant rates.

A Tragic Kindergarten Episode.

A certain kindergarten is blessed with the attendance of a very original youth named Richard. He is a very honest e boy and highly respected by his nts, but the other afternoon when ame home he acknowledged frankly is mother that a punishment had inflicted upon him at the kinder- en.

Why, what have you done?"

Well, you see," he answered, "Johnnd I got tired of being good, and we le up our minds that we would just our heads together and holler out very naughtiest word we could nk of, both together."

The mother was inexpressibly shocked. ohnny was another very nice and well ored boy. But she managed to ask:

"Well, what did you say?"

"We just screamed out 'Bedbug!' as loud as we could!"

Probably this tragic episode has never had its duplicate in the history of kindergartening.—Boston Transcript.

The Clover Seed Crop.

John M. Stahl says, in The Country Gentleman:

If the first crop of clover be cut early the second crop or seed crop will be heavier and better. I cannot understand the prejudice that many farmers have against the clover seed crop. I find it one of the most profitable crops I can grow. In nine years out of ten clover seed brings a good price in the spring. One is much more certain of getting a good price for it than he is for corn, wheat, oats, hay or farm animals. The demand appears always to be fully equal to the supply. I have always found the local demand fully equal to the local supply, giving a good market at home.

The cost of the clover seed crop is comparatively small. Thrashing it is not so very disagreeable when the work is rightly managed. It does not exhaust the land so much as other crops of equal value, but of course land from which much is taken must be well manured, whether the land is in grass or cultivated crops. Though it is not desired to cut a seed crop, if the crop for hay is cut early the aftermath for pasture or fertilizing will be heavier than if the cutting is delayed. The increased aftermath will compensate for any loss in the real value of the hay crop.

Silos and Silage.

Each season's experience, while adding to our practical knowledge of how to make the best silage, also adds to the general appreciation of its inestimable value to the dairyman. As a consequence each year a large additional number of silos are built. More were built last year than during any preceding year, and more will be built this year than last year. The most important lesson gathered from experience concerning silos is that when built of wood the wood needs to be well protected from the moisture of the silage by one or more thick coats of paint. Just what kind of paint is best has not been agreed upon. But it is manifest that as the silo has come to be one of the essentials of every well equipped stock farm, it is true economy to make it out of the best material and in the best manner known. No reasonable expense should be spared in making it.—Jersey Bulletin.

On the Country Road.

An incubator without a brooder is like a fiddle without a bow. One is no no good without the other. Therefore, when you think of purchasing an incubator, says The Prairie Farmer, always add a brooder to the outfit and figure up the cost as though the two were one machine.

The value of orchard grass is that it can be made to grow on land where timothy will hardly thrive and on steep hillsides where it is difficult to make any vegetation grow.

Salt is not so much of a fertilizer as it is a solvent of fertilizing material, thus rendering it avoidable to plant food.

Cabmen's Examinations.

Cabmen have to pass an examination in knowledge of London streets before they can obtain a license, and this is far more necessary than might be supposed, for 691 men in the year 1889 failed in the examination, and not a severe one at that, while 1,211 were passed.—London Tit-Bits.

A calf belonging to a Mr. Houchen, near Seymour, became strangely sick the other day, and in a short time began to whirl around and around, as a pup after its tail, and within two hours was dead. It whirled for two solid hours, never stopping to draw breath or grease the axle.—Cor. Indianapolis Journal.

Did Their Duty.

Robert Slaughter in Grand Forks Herald: It has been reported that the Grand Forks people were treated shabbily at Crookston. I can say truthfully that the horsemen were never treated better anywhere. They were shown every attention. On the day of the celebration it was impossible for them to look after anybody, on account of the big crowd, but taking into consideration everything, the Crookston people did their duty.

Otter Tail County—Wheat and oats looking thin and rusting some; timothy in bloom; corn doing well; all other crops are poor, wheat especially. Douglass county—Grass never looked better. Anoka county—No chinch bugs this year; corn looking well. Hennepin county—Haying has commenced and the crop will be heavy. What's the Matter With this Country?

A Kansas farmer, where the times are as hard as they are anywhere in the United States, writes as follows to the local paper at Garnet; "What's the matter with times, any way? A farmer loads up fifty bushels of wheat on a wagon and starts to Garnet, his son follows with a load of corn, while the hired man follows with a load of hay. He gets from 90 cents to $1 for his wheat, 60 cents for his corn, and $10 for his hay. He takes the checks he gets for his grain and hay to the bank and asks for and obtains gold coin. He puts it down his jeans, goes to George and Joe's and buys twenty pounds of granulated sugar for $1. He buys muslin for five cents a yard, calico the same. He goes to the hardware store and buys barbed wire for 3 and 3½ cents per pound, and other things in proportion, including tin cups. He goes to Wagstaff's and buys a suit of clothes, all wool, for $10, good enough for a president of a township alliance to wear. There has never been a time from the foundation of the government to the present when a bushel of wheat or corn would buy as much as it does to-day, and yet some people will get up at night and burn their shirt to make a light to see the way all things are going to pot."

The New Bank At Thief River.

Thief River Press—The Polk county bank opened its doors to the public last Saturday. The banking company is composed of Messrs. A. G. Gallasch, president; C. Hendrickson, vice-president; L. Ellington and J. W. Wheeler. As yet there has been no cashier elected and until that office is filled Mr. Gallasch and Mr. Wheeler will be in charge. In addition to the transaction of general banking the institution will handle exchange on all foreign countries, make farm loans, sell steamship tickets on all first class lines to and from Europe at lowest rates, and pay special attention to making collections. They open with very flattering prospects and while deserving a profit themselves will prove a valuable addition to our business enterprise.

About Voting Booths.

The county commissioners at their June meeting instructed the county auditor to write the different town clerks in the county and enquire if they wanted to purchase voting booths for their towns, and to also tell them at what price the booths could be bought singly or in quantities. The board had a proposition from a steel booth manufacturing company, but as the towns have to furnish the booths the county board could not order them until the townships had signified whether they wanted them or not. Some of the towns will build wooded ones in places where they can be permanent. Through some misunderstanding of the suggestions which the board had given him, the auditor sent a letter to each town board asking that two members be sent to Crookston on Friday, July 8, to see about the purchase of booths and to receive instructions regarding the Australian system of voting. This meeting entailed an expense on the towns sufficient to buy all the booths required, and as the business could have been settled by mail, a controversy arose between the county board and the auditor as to who was to blame for the unnecessary expense entailed on the towns. Mr. Webster claimed he had authority from the board to do as he did, and that his records would prove it. But on looking over his books he failed to produce any evidence to sustain his position, and of course had to bear the brunt of the mistake. It was said there was some job in Mr. Webster's actions, but there is nothing to prove this assertion. It was simply a misunderstanding of the suggestions of the county commissioners.

Most of the towns were represented, but few orders for booths were given, most of those present believing they could supply their booths cheaper at home. The price of the steel booths—if taken in lots of fifty—is $8.00 apiece at destination, and $9.00 for a single booth at the factory. These booths are indestructible, and where a temporary booth has to be put up these would probably be the cheapest in the end, as they can be folded up and put away, and will last forever. In places where permanent booths can be erected wooden ones would be the cheapest. Two booths have to be provided at each polling place.

A Rank Fake.

The St. Paul Globe of the 12th inst. publishes a highly sensational article about a great strike in Crookston, wherein 150 men at the Walker saw-mill went out on a strike, and in trying to incite the laborers on the "Cedion" block to join them their leader was killed by the police. The truth of the matter is that there is no "Cedion" block in Crookston; neither did the men go there to incite the laborers; neither did the police kill all or any of them and fill the jail with the rest, but they did run in ONE of them, whereupon the men, after talking it over a while, returned peaceably to the mill. The strikers have nearly all gone back to work on the old schedule rate, and everything is now serene. The mill did not lose one hour's work sawing by the strike. The "special correspondent" who sent that telegram should be investigated by Judge Benson and sent to St. Peter.

Stealing Horses, Cattle, etc.

The authorities of Pembina county, N. D., are trying to bring to justice a gang of thieves who have been operating in that county. The leader of the gang is one Charles Rose, of Cavalier, Pembina county. He passed among his neighbors as a spiritualist and all around crank. His followers also claim to be spiritualists and no attention was paid to them by the neighbors, and meetings were frequently held at the home of one or another of the gang. Instead of being spiritualistic meetings, however, it has since been learned that they were regular meetings of the gang, where their plans were laid and schemes concocted to rob and ruin their neighbors. Horses, cattle, wheat, plows, harrows, machinery, etc., were stolen and either run out of the county or taken to some distant part and sold. Besides these depredations, several incendiary fires are laid at the doors of this gang.

THE COLORS OF WATER.

A Simple Object Lesson That Proved Interesting to a Child.

"Is it not true, grandpa, that water has no color?"

"Yes, dear child, it is blue, but so little so that you cannot see it."

"Can you see that it is blue?"

"No, but still it is blue. Look at this."

I took a little ultramarine on the end of the brush and mixed it with water.

"Does it look blue now?"

"No; I see nothing."

"Nor I. But you saw how I put a little blue color in it with the brush."

"Yes, but there was not enough of it. Put more in."

I silently took the glass and set it on a piece of white paper in the bright sunshine. "Now look from above down into it."

"It is blue," said the little one, clapping her hands, "but only a very little."

"Look at it from the other side, where the sun is shining into it. Is it not a little bit red, like the bell flowers which you picked yesterday?"

"That is wonderful," said the little one. "It is blue from above, a little bit red in the sun, and when we look at it from this side of the room we see nothing!"

"Think about it a little. The glass is as broad as my finger is long. But it is at least three times as high as my finger. When you look at it from the side, you see only a finger's length of water; but when you look down into it, you see through three fingers' length of water—three times as much. You see it blue from the side, and three times as blue from above, don't you?"

"Is that really true?" said the little one, as she measured with her finger. She nodded that she was satisfied.

"Now imagine that the water is as deep as the height of the church steeple, and deeper—that it reaches from here up into Salvan and down to Vernayaz. Then you would see the water from above it all blue."

"Is the lake, then, really so deep?"

"Yes, and deeper."

I will not continue the conversation any longer. It went on with various simple experiments, beginning with differently colored stones, which I let drop into the water, and then placed on the white, then with setting the glass with its weakly bluish contents on differently colored papers, and ended with my trying to make the children perceive how the colors changed when they were seen through the whole depth of the glass. I will not say that the little ones were brought to a full comprehension of the matter, but they stuck fast to the assertion that water is blue, of an infinitely weak blue, and that the blue color cannot be seen till one looks into a certain depth of it.—Carl Vogt in Popular Science Monthly.

The Blood Circulates Rapidly.

Medical workers have made many curious experiments, but none more wonderful than that by which they ascertained the exact time required for the blood to make one entire trip through the system, which all students of physiology know means a complete circulation through the lungs, veins, arteries and general capillary arrangements. Professors Dalton, Hering, Poissenille, Matteucci and Blake have been the chief investigators in this line, the first named having become more eminent in this particular branch of research from having the experience of the others to fortify himself with. All the old school anatomists believed that a considerable time elapsed, say from three to nine minutes, from the time when the blood left the right side of the heart, traversed the whole system and then again returned to the starting point; Dalton has shown that the time is much shorter than was formerly generally supposed.

He says: "Dozens of carefully tabulated tests of this somewhat extraordinary subject shows that the blood of man makes a complete circulation once every fifteen to twenty-five seconds, according to the physical conditions of the subject experimented upon."—St. Louis Republic.

Two Epitaphs.

Remarkable are two epitaphs, the first of which is said to be upon a tombstone in the city of Sacramento: "Here is laid Daniel Borrow, who was born in Sorrow, and Borrowed little from Nature except his name and his love to mankind and hatred to redskins; who was nevertheless a gentleman and a dead shot; who, through a long life, never killed his man except in self defense or by accident, and who, when he at last went under, beneath the bullets of his cowardly enemies in the saloon of Jeff Morris, did so in the sure and certain hope of a glorious and everlasting Morrow."

The other, which belongs to a Nevada burying place, is a noteworthy achievement in this line. "Sacred to the Memory of Hank Monk—the Whitest, Biggest-hearted, and Best-known Stage-driver of the West; who was kind to All and Thought Ill of None. He Lived in a Strange Era, and was a Hero, and the Wheels of his Coach are now Ringing on Golden Streets."—Chambers' Journal.

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

What is the nature of the obligation one assumes, or does he assume any legal obligation, in signing his name to a subscription for stock in a corporation not yet formed? Is it a proposal, on his part, which he may withdraw at pleasure? Is it a one-sided agreement, or an agreement without consideration, or a conditional promise which may or may not be binding upon the signer according as he shall subsequently choose? It may be fairly stated that many names placed upon stock subscription papers are so placed without any definite comprehension of the nature of the transaction, and of its legal effect. This is apparent to anyone who has been the promoter of corporation enterprises and has had in charge the soliciting of subscriptions thereto. A few words in the direction suggested cannot fail to be of interest and profit to the public, inasmuch as corporate enterprises have become so numerous that there is scarcely an individual, however humble his circumstances, but, at some time or another, has been solicited, or been tempted, to become a subscriber to the capital stock of a corporation. What, then, is a subscription to stock? It may be stated to be a promise, by the subscriber, to take and pay for the shares for which he subscribes, upon a consideration sufficient and valid to support it. The nature of this consideration we shall discuss later on. More fully, the promise is one to take and pay for the shares on the terms of the subscription paper, and of the act under which the company is organized. It is usual to state in the subscription paper what act it is intended to use in organizing, and if that act makes the stockholders individually liable for the debts, they are thus liable, even although they have not done anything beyond the signing of the subscription paper. In other words, a subscription to the stock means more than assent to the mere proposal to to form a corporation for certain purposes. It means the same as if all the provisions of the statute under which it is proposed to organize were a part of the agreement signed. The agreement of the subscriber is to take the number of shares set opposite his name, and to pay for them according to the provisions of the act. The subscription may be made on condition, as for instance, that the amount subscribed shall reach a certain sum, and it has been held that, in the case of the condition mentioned, it must be intended to mean fair subscriptions, such as may probably be collected. As to the form of subscription, all that is required is that it shall indicate the intention of the subscribers to become stockholders, and the number of shares respectively taken by them. The several subscribers may sign separate instruments, they being copies of each other, and they will be regarded as one and the same instrument, and where a statute requires that subscription books shall be opened, it has been held that one or several subscription papers constitute a book within the meaning of the statute. The signer of a subscription paper before the organization of the corporation is complete cannot withdraw his subscription without the consent of the other subscribers, and, though he has erased his name, the corporation can collect his subscription. This has not been declared to be the law without exceptions, but it has been held universally that where the incorporating of the company was completed before the subscriber attempted to withdraw his subscription, he had lost the right to do so. When one has signed articles of association, he has entered into a contract which is not open to revocation. The other subscribers have an interest in the execution and performance by each subscriber of his agreement, and after the incorporation has begun a legal existence it has acquired a vast interest in each subscriber's agreement. This subject will be continued in a further paper.

In the Business of Revolution.

The Englishman imagines that revolution and treason are serious affairs and must be conducted with set teeth and grave face. Not so the men of the Latin races. To them revolutions are like race meetings, with a certain amount of danger added. An Englishman feels disgraced at the idea of recurrent revolution. Not so a Frenchman or a Spaniard.—London Spectator.

Why He Desired a Cannon.

It is related that an Indian chief once approached General Crook and wanted to borrow a cannon. "Do you expect me to loan you a cannon with which to kill my soldiers?" the old veteran inquired. "No," the chief replied; "kill soldiers with a club; want cannon to kill cowboys."—Cor. Topeka Capital.

A BATTLE FOUGHT.

RESULT OF AN ATTEMPT TO LAND PINKERTONS AT HOMESTEAD.

Driven Back to Their Boats by the Strikers, Who Hold Them Under Fire for Hours—Pinkertons Finally Surrender and Are Disarmed and Brought Ashore. The Barges Burned After Strikers Secure the Arms and Ammunition—List of the Dead and Wounded.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., July 7.—About 2:30 p. m. word was received at Homestead from the scouts stationed at Lock No. 1, on Monongahela river bank, that two boat loads of strange men had arrived there in charge of the steamer Little Bill, and were on their way to Homestead. The information had no sooner been received than the large steam whistle at the electric light plant was blown, and its mournful, far-reaching voice rose and fell on the morning air, waking the weary sleepers within a radius of many miles, and telling them that the Pinkertons were coming. Within twenty minutes after the blast of the large whistle 1,000 half clothed, but wideawake people were on the streets hurrying toward the river, jostling each other in their eagerness to get the first glimpse of the Pinkerton fleet. For fully an hour it seemed as though the people had been hauled from their beds for no purpose, and many of the tired ones returned to their homes. At 4 o'clock the streets of Homestead were almost deserted, when three horsemen, their steeds bathed in foam, road into Homestead and separated into different directions, shouting wildly: "To the river! To the river! The Pinkertons are coming!" The same moment the whistle for the second time since the sun had set sent out its dismal warning. This time the alarm was a genuine one, and as the 10,000 people scurried through the streets toward the river a shrill whistle from the bend below the town announced the coming of the little boat Edna, and her peculiarly plaintive cry carried with it an awful significance. Nearer and nearer came the little boat. Then it was seen that she was followed closely by a long, low-lying floating mass, which was propelled by a steamer. Men, women and children on shore were not long in learning the charcter of the strange craft and the story f "two model barges full of Pinkerons" was soon raised. Then there was mad rush toward the mill fence. Rushing, screaming and falling over ach other, the crowd reached the twen-y foot fence which extended down into he water, and the advance guard began tearing down the boards. They were for getting in the mill, for it was seen the Pinkertons intended landing inside the works. Every man was armed with a club, and fully eight of every ten carried revolvers. The millmen now took their position on top of the bank, while skilled marksmen were placed at every sheltered point, and with their long-range rifles proceeded to shoot down every Pinkerton man they could see.

Came Flying up the River

Not a Word Answered the Pinkertons,

but as the boat touched the shore and a gang plank was thrown out every Pinkerton covered as many men as possible with his Winchester. Rage had now transformed the usually pacific Homestead men into demons. They knew no fear, but jumped forward to wrest the death dealing rifles from the hands of their hated enemies. Never until the judgment morn will it be definitely known who fired the first shot which started the slaughter that has made so many homes of mourning. The first gun, however, was fired from the Pinkerton barge, and is thought to have been discharged by the captain of the gang of men, who was afterward killed. The last moment before the slaughter the crowd was surging downward against six of the leading mill workers, who stood with their backs to the Pinkertons, fairly under the muzzles of the rifles, trying to keep the mill men back from what seemed certain death. Clear as a bell, far above the roar of the angry crowd, came the voice of Hugh O'Donnell, as hatless and coatless he tried to check the angry men. "In God's name," he cried, "my good fellows keep back; don't press down and force them to do murder."

It Was Too Late.

The appeal was drowned by the sharp report of a Winchester from a man in the boat. The first ball had hardly left the smoking barrel on its mission of death ere it was followed by a sheet of flame from a score of rifles in the Pinkertons' hands. William Foy, who stood at the front window with his foot on the gang plank, staggered and fell, his life's blood gushing out. For a moment the crowd was struck dumb by the sight. Only the groans of the several wounded were heard. The echoes had hardly reached the neighboring hill, the crowd repelled, out of the semi-darkness of the morning flashed a wall of flame. The leader of the Pinkertons clapped his hand to his breast and fell overboard, sinking beneath the waters, while several other Pinkertons aggered back and were carried inside e boat by their comrades. At the first ush of the Pinkertons' rifles, many of e crowd took to their heels, but close the water's edge stood about 200 of the angry men firing their revolvers straight at the Pinkertons. Soon the latter, unable to withstand such fire, retreated into their cabin, and fired from cover as quickly as possible. When the men on shore had emptied their revolvers they retreated up the bank, greeting every shot from their enemies with defiant cheers.

For hours the crowd of workmen behind the barricade of structural iron within the walls watched the barges with guns cocked waiting for a head to appear. Down in the boats sweltering, and with hearts filled with fear, lay the 270 Pinkerton guards. The sun was beating down on the low roofs of the barges, and the air within them must have been stifling, for an opening was not to be thought of, as it would only attract a storm of bullets from the enemy outside. The suffering of the wounded in the boats must have been awful, not to speak of the others, and as the sun grew hotter sounds of an ax at work within the boat told the crowd that the Pinkerton guards were taking desperate chances to prevent suffocation. Soon a hole was cut through, and a moment later it was made twice as large from the bullets from the shore. The axman was wounded and no further attempts were made to secure ventilation. All sorts of plans were tried to fire the boats. A hand fire engine owned by the steel company was gotten out of its shed and connected with the big oil tank. The oil was pumped down into the river and burning waste thrown after it. This did not do any good, so Fourth of July fireworks were drawn upon. Rockets, Roman candles and the like were used, but without effect. The oil was of the lubricating kind and not as inflamable as other grades. Seeing their efforts were in vain, the strikers discussed the situation. Hugh O'Donnell, cool headed and seized a small flag, mounted a pile of iron and soon had the attention of the 2,000 maddened men who were shouting for blood. He began to calmly discuss the situation and to caution the men to move slowly. He said a white flag should be carried to the bank, and he was going to explain his plan further when a howl arose from a thousand throats.

"Show the white flag? Never!" was the cry.

"What will we do then?" asked O'Donnell.

"We will hold them in the boats until the sheriff comes, and we have warrants sworn out for every man for murder. The sheriff will then have to take them into custody," said one man, and shouts of approval rent the air. Seeing that this was the desire of the men, O'Donnell stepped down and went to work to keep them to that, and prevent further conflict if possible. While the meeting was in progress in the mill, another was being held by the beleagured ones in the boat. The result was showed by a white handkerchief being cautiously shoved out of an opening, and cheers greeted it. "They surrender!" "Victory!" "We have them now!" and like cries rung out. Then Hugh O'Donnell, accompanied by two or three of the old advisory committee, ran down the steep bank

To Receive the Message of Peace.

The spokesmen of the Pinkertons announced that they would surrender on condition that they be protected from the violence of the mob. After a short parley this was agreed to. As soon as the committee had arranged the preliminaries a hundred or more from the shore climbed upon the boat and, with a United Press reporter, went into the frail craft, and there found one dead and eleven wounded Pinkertons. Asked where they came from, one big fellow, who looked like a tough, said Boston and Chicago had furnished the most of them, but there were some from other places. Not more than a couple of Pittsburg men were in the gang, he said. Some of the men he said had cried for fear, and but few of them expected to get away with whole skins. The steel workers did not let them talk long, but ordered them to hurry out. The first one to leave had his Winchester with him. "Disarm!" cried the mob, and the rifles were then taken away from all and became the property of the man who took the gun. Down the gang plank, one by one, they came, and that they might be distinguished from the men on the bank so that none could get away, they were forced to walk with uncovered heads.

Running the Gauntlet.

And such a gauntlet as they had to run. For a distance of 600 yards or more one was formed, and through this the Pinkerton men walked, ran, or crawled as best they could. The police force of the steel workers tried to save them, but it was no use. They were rounded up like frightened sheep in a corner of the town and then driven to the opera house. There they were locked in and glad to be off the streets, for it seemed that every man, woman and child felt it a duty to add to their misery, and every one of the heads owned by the Pinkerton guards was bleeding. When the last of the Pinkertons have been left the large mob shouted, "Burn the boats!" The suggestion was a taking one, and they only waited long enough to unload several boxes of Winchester rifles and ammunition, and then satisfied they had all the arms, the torch was applied to the Iron Mountain and Monongahela simultaneously. Aided by oil and fed by the dry wood inside, it was not long before the flames were leaping high above the river bank and the mob was driven back by the intense heat. One of the first things the victors did after the surrender was to secure a roll book. It contained 266 names, divided into squads of twenty each, commanded by a lieutenant. This book showed that some of the men had been on guard at Walston, near Punxsutawney, at Cleveland and at other points where labor troubles were. Such notes as, "Strike ended; transferred to Walston; sent to Cleveland," etc., were in the book.

THE GOVERNOR'S ORDERS.

Pennsylvania's National Guard to Proceed to Homestead at Once.

HARRISBURG, Pa., July 11.—Contrary to expectations, Governor Pattison has ordered General Snowden, commander of the Pennsylvania state militia, to proceed at one to Homestead to support Sheriff McCleary in maintaining peace at the Carnegie mills. The governor's order was as follows:

To General R. S. Snowden:

Put the division under arms and move at once with all munitions to the support of the sheriff of Allegheny county, at Homestead. Maintain the peace and protect all persons in their rights under the constitution and laws of the state.

ROBERT E. PATTISON.

The calling out of troops at this time by the governor was caused by the following telegram received from Sheriff McCleary:

PITTSBURG, July 10.

To Governor Pattison:

The situation at Homestead has not improved. While all is quiet there the strikers are in control and openly express to me and to the public their determination that the works shall not be operated unless by themselves. After making all efforts in my power I have failed to secure a posse respectable enough in numbers to accomplish anything, and I am satisfied that no posse raised by the civil authorities can do anything to change the condition of affairs and that any attempt by an inadequate force to restore the rights of law will only result in further armed resistance and consequent loss of life. Only a large military force will enable me to control matters. I believe if such a force is sent the disorderly element would be overawed and order would be restored. I therefore call upon you to furnish me such assistance.

WILLIAM H. MCCLEARY, Sheriff.

On receipt of the governor's order General Snowden notified the commanders of the different brigades to move their men at the earliest possible moment. All the ammunition has been moved from the state arsenal and sent to the scene of action. Special trains have been ordered to transport troops from this vicinity and all the extra passenger engineers and firemen have been ordered to report for duty and be ready to take out trains at a moment's notice. Much excitement prevails at the ordering out of the entire national guard of Pennsylvania. The first special left at 5 o'clock a. m.

The National Guard of Pennsylvania includes 8,500 men under the command of Major General Snowden, whose headquarters are in Philadelphia. The guard is divided into three brigades. The First is under the command of Brigadier General Dechort, and consists of 2,500 men. The Second brigade includes 216 commissioned officers and 2,265 men. The commander is Brigadier General John A. Wiley. The headquarters are at Franklin. This brigade is the largest of the state, and is nearer Homestead than any of the others. The Third brigade includes 187 commissioned officers and 2,435 enlisted men, a total of 2,622. The commander is Brigadier General J. P. H. Gobin. The headquarters are at Lebanon.

WITHOUT OPPOSITION.

Militia Will Be Received by Workmen with a Blast of Trumpets.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., July 11.—The white wings of peace are hovering over the city of Homestead, and there is not an unpleasant indication to mar the serenity of the iron region. The militia is to be received with open arms by the mill workers, and a special police, 100 strong, has been selected from the ranks of the strikers themselves to see that no indignity is offered the uniformed representatives of the state by any of the injudicious or hot-headed workmen.

The efficacy of this police was demonstrated within a half hour after the adjournment of the mass meeting by the prompt arrest and escort to the lock-up of an intemperate striker who questioned the wisdom of receiving the militia as friends and brothers, and in killing the fatted calf in their honor. The power of organization was never better exemplified than in the graceful unanimity with which the iron workers accepted the suggestions of their leaders, and decided that the troops should be received as friends and not as foes, and that in contrast with the reception to the hated Pinkertons the militia should be welcomed by the triumphant blast of trumpets and the music of bands.

EROS COMES TO STAY.

Once a fowler, young and artless,
To the quiet greenwood came:
Full of skill was he and heartless
In pursuit of feathered game;
And betimes he chanced to see
Eros perching in a tree.

"What strange bird is that, I wonder?"
Thought the youth, and spread his snare;
Eros, chuckling at the blunder,
Gayly scampered here and there.
Do his best, the simple clod
Could not snare the agile god.

Blubbering, to his aged master
Went the fowler in dismay,
And confided his dis[illegible]
With that curious [illegible] day;
"Master, hast thou ever heard
Of so ill disposed a bird?"

"Heard of him? Aha, most truly!"
Quoth the master with a smile;
"And thou, too, shall know him duly.
Thou art young, but bide awhile;
And old Eros will not fly
From thy presence by and by.

"For when thou art somewhat older
That same Eros thou didst see,
More familiar grown and bolder,
Shall become acquaint with thee;
And when Eros comes thy way,
Mark my word he comes to stay."

—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

DENOUNCED, BUT N T AS A SHAM.

New York Press:—The Democratic national platform, be it remembered, "denounced" Republican reciprocity as a "sham." The English denounce it, too, but not as a sham; rather as a stern reality, which is taking away their foreign trade and giving it to us. Brazil's importation of British goods has fallen off $26,000,000, and it is admitted that British influence is at work in Brazil, trying to break up our reciprocity treaty with that country, under which our exports of cotton cloths to Brazil for eleven months of the fiscal year increased from 5,825,344 yards to 8,766,093 yards, and of iron and steel manufactures from $419,354 to $439,368.

Chicago and St. Louis.

Two prominent cities of the West are those whose names head this paragraph. Chicago, the chief marvel of city growth in America, fifty years ago only a fort on the frontier—an Indian trading post in a swamp—now known all over the world as the place where is to be held the World's Fair of 1893, whence more than a million workers send out their products to be used of all nations. St. Louis, founded in the historic "early days" when the lilies of France claimed dominion over the Mississippi Valley—now sitting a commercial queen, the centre of a vast river commerce, and sentinel at the gateway of the great and growing Southwest, a city of wealth, intelligence and solid worth, much talked of as a future location of the National Capital. These are worth a pilgrimage—they draw thousands of visitors, and the Burlington Route has its own line into both of them, so buy your tickets by that line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Diamonds at the Fair.

The exhibit of minerals and precious stones at the World's fair in Chicago will be unusually complete and interesting. The diamond department, under direction of a company from South Africa, will be more closely studied than anything else, for here in a mass of "blue stuff" will be hidden $250,000 worth of diamonds, some of which will every day be washed out and put on the polishing wheel in the presence of the public. The old ways of diamond mining, like the old ways of gold washing, are gone, never to return, and the industry is now reduced to the same matter of fact business as manufacture. The entire process, from shoveling the clay to the work of dredging, washing in rotary machines, sorting pebbles and cutting and polishing, will be seen daily.

The De Beers and Kimberly mines will supply most of the material. It is about a quarter of a century since old Farmer De Beers sat under a tree watching his little girl roll a pebble on his lawn. A trader named O'Reilly happened to pass and the glitter of the plaything attracted his notice. Examination proved it to be a fine diamond. Prospectors came swarming in as soon as the news had got about, and four years later the farmer was glad to sell his farm for $30,000 to get rid of the mob. Up to 1876 $9,000,000 worth of gems had been taken out of his farm, but he was probably satisfied, for he belonged to an unexcitable race.—Exchange.

A Gypsy Burial.

An interesting gypsy burial has just taken place at the Catholic cemetery in Weissensee, near Berlin. The son of the gypsy chief was carried to the grave, accompanied by members of the race from far and wide. A band of music opened the procession, followed by gypsies playing the fiddle or clashing cymbals. The splendid metal coffin was carried in a first class hearse, on each side of which the cousins and uncles of the deceased rode on horseback, their bridles and saddles being covered with crape. Close behind the coffin rode the six oldest members of the clan, beating tambourines while they muttered prayers.

Then came a troop of gypsy men, women and children in carriages, on horseback or on foot, clad in their picturesque costumes. The procession was closed by the parents of the deceased, accompanied by four "mourning women," who raised a fearful howling. The sight attracted thousands of spectators. The burial was accomplished with the usual Catholic rites, but afterward the gypsies offered up a dog as a "sacrifice to the moon" in an open field near by.—London News.

Paying Rent with a Rose.

The ground on which is erected Zion's new Lutheran church of Manheim, Pa., was donated to the congregation 120 years ago for the consideration of an annual payment of one red rose by Baron Henry William Seigel, who founded Manheim, and was the first glass and iron manufacturer of any note in the United States. He demanded the rose twice, and was paid. The baron died poor and filled an unknown grave, and the payment was not legally demanded until recently, when, by arrangement, Mr. J. C. Seigel, a great-grandson of the baron, came from Harrisonburg, Va., to receive it. Services throughout the day had a memorial tinge. The Rev. Mr. Menges preached an eloquent sermon from the text, "I am the rose of Sharon." The afternoon was devoted solely to exercises incident to the payment of the rose and interest, the whole town taking part.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Smoke Consuming Scheme.

A correspondent suggests a method of abating the smoke nuisance in close manufacturing localities by having a smoke duct running through a town connected in a suitable manner with the different furnaces. In carrying out such a plan it is suggested that the duct might be conveyed outside of the city to a condensing station, an exhaust machine being employed to force the draught. At the condensing station the soot laden air would be made to pass through water conveniently proximate, in this way depositing the solid matter, while the air passes away comparatively pure; the soot which remains might easily be collected, caked and used as fuel, etc. The dimensions of the duct for such a purpose would have to vary, as in the case of water and other mains, according to the work to be performed.—Indian Engineering.

The Hypnotic Social.

The latest kink in the society way is the "hypnotic social," which has been going about for the past three weeks. A company of friends is invited and an amateur hypnotist is brought in, who proceeds to divert the select audience by experiments with various persons of the company. There are three or four of these amateurs who are picking up a few dollars through these little exhibitions. One of them is said to be developing in such a marvelous way that his friends are endeavoring to persuade him that he could make a fortune as a full fledged professional.—Indianapolis Journal.

"High Card Bob" to Join the Church.

Bob Brewington, formerly of Kirksville, Mo., and known to his associates as "High Card Bob," who recently won $2,500 in Arizona, announces that he has given it back and will reform. He declares that twenty-five dollars honestly earned will go farther than $100 won over the card table, and that the gambler's life has lost all its charms for him. Finally he has promised to join the church.—Cor. St. Louis Republic.

Protection to our woolen industries has increased the South's production of woolen goods from $4,601,585 in 1880 to $7,285,364 in 1890. And yet the free trade Congressmen from the South support legislation that tends to shut up the woolen mills of that region. Who are the real enemies of the commercial prosperity of the South?—New York Press.

The delegates to the state convention were instructed to vote for Knute Nelson for governor, and the delegates to the congressional convention to vote for H. C. Kendall of Duluth for Congressman.

IT IS estimated that the wheat yield of Kansas this year will exceed 200,000,000 bushels. When one state can furnish three bushels of wheat for every inhabitant of the union, and the average consumption is five bushels per head per year, it will only require about 150,00 , 00 bushels more than the Kansas crop to supply this country. This will leave quite a margin for export.

CAN it be possible that the following from the Polk County Review is true?

The Farmers' Alliance lecturer, P. A. Stromme, has a job of work lying in this office—tickets to his lecture against fraud and corruption, dishonesty (?) of republicans and democrats—that we would like to sell at a discount. This honest lecturer is a legal, lawful representative of the party of reform (?) and lecturing by the authority of the state organization of North Dakota. Bah, be honest yourselves before you attempt to reform your neighbors.

Under the laws of North Dakota and in pursuance to a resolution passed unanimously at the recent special session of the legislature of that state, the penitentiary board leased to a harness maker named Smith, of Casselton, the convict labor of that state at the rate of 40 cents per day per convict. A manufactory building is to be erected in the penitentiary yard at Bismarck, and the lease contemplates a period of five years and the furnishing of not less than twenty convicts.

A REPUBLICAN county convention for Marshall county will be held at Stephen, July 19th, at 11 o'clock a. m. to elect eight delegates to the state convention to be held at St. Paul, July 28th, six delegates to the congressional convention to be held at Moorhead, Sept. 1st, and delegates to the judicial and legislative conventions, and to name candidates for auditor, treasurer, register of deeds, judge of probate, sheriff, county attorney, superintendent of schools, coroner, court commissioner, surveyor and commissioners for the second and fourth commissioner districts.

THE Grant county republican convention passed the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, The delegates of the republican county convention of Grant county, believing that the interests of the party would be best subserved by the nomination of the Hon. Knute Nelson as the republican candidate for governor, and affirming our confidence in and esteem for him as a citizen, soldier and statesman. Be it

Resolved, That the delegates elected to the state convention of July 28th, be and are hereby instructed to vote as a unit first, last and all the time for Hon. Knute Nelson as the republican candidate for governor.

The following are the delegates elected to the state convention: Ole O. Canestorp, K. N. Melby, E. J. Scofield, John G. Peterson, H. P. Hansen, S. Auslund, A. S. Giffice.

GENERAL James H. Baker, of Garden City, has been nominated for governor by the Minnesota State Alliance, the remnant of the party does not believe in the sub-treasury scheme of the People's party. The convention was small, having less than one-third of 286 delegates present, but it was vigorous and its resolutions were long enough to make up many other deficiencies. They covered all points including the Homestead tragedy, but did not mention the sub-treasury, a resolution denouncing it having been defeated for policy's sake. The resolution about the Homestead affair holds Carnegie responsible for blood, calls attention to the fact that something is wrong with the conditions of capital and labor, and resolves that, "in the event of a strike or lockout, the state or national government should take posession of the property involved so as to prevent bloodshed, leaving civil authorities to settle trouble satisfactorily to all parties concerned."

THERE has been 89,878 acres of school lands sold in North Dakota since that state was admitted to the Union and attained the right to dispose of these lands. The average price realized was $19.92 per acre. When unimproved land can be sold for $19.92 per acre in one of the youngest states in the Union, where there are thousands of acres of free government land still to be had, it does not look as though this country was in such dire extremity as the croakers would have us believe. Most of these school lands were purchased by farmers who had land adjoining. There is no better evidence of the prosperity of the farmers than to see them acquiring more land at good figures.

Remarkable Growth of Grass.

We have heard of pumpkin vines growing so fast that they wore the pumpkins out dragging them over the ground, but here is a case where the grass grew so much between trains as to almost blockade the next train. The Thirteen Towns is authority for the following:

The train on Tuesday did not arrive until six o'clock in the evening, being about seven hours behind time, the delay being caused chiefly from the unloading of material for a new well at Benoit, and the speed was somewhat impeded by the tall grass that had grown since the previous time the company had occasion to use this line.

Two years ago the people of Marshall county rose in their might to turn "the gang" out of office, and elected a new set of county officials who were supposed to be the ideals of honesty and purity. But now the people find that these officials are plotting and planning and scheming to retain their positions—just like any one else would—and the farmers are indignant with the servants of their own choosing; and the battle-cry now is: "Turn the rascals out. The people are finding out that a change of parties does not change human nature, and that the greed for gain and power predominates to a large extent in human nature, and that a change of political belief cannot make a man less ambitious.

Of all the speakers who were present during encampment it remained for Doc Fish, through the People's party managers, to mar the harmony of the occasion by ringing in a red-hot, rampant political speech upon the last day, but we are pleased to say that though Doc had been advertised far and near only about 200 gathered to hear him and that number had melted away three-fourths before he had finished. Doc was a soldier himself and knew better than to insult old soldiers upon the occasion of their annual encampment when things of a political nature are always avoided—moreover he could have given the old boys a grand talk had he been so minded. Whether it was the stupid ignorance of the managers or what that caused the break, we know not, but the fact remains that it was a very injudicious thing to do and made all the old boys extremely hot in the collar.

Crookston Citizens Deserve Credit.

Wadena Tribune:—The G. A. R. encampment held at Crookston this week was attended by a large number of the "boys in blue" and all enjoyed themselves. Crookston is a city of about 6,000 inhabitants and did all in their power to make it pleasant. The base ball games were good and some fine playing was done on both sides. There were some of the best horses in the country entered in the races and all of them were for blood. The bicycle race was won by E. C. Carruth, one-half mile in one minute and thirty seconds. At the business meeting Wednesday afternoon of the G. A. R. they decided to join with the Eastern division and have the next encampment at Eagle Bend. Taking the encampment all in all it was a very enjoyable time, and the citizens of Crookston deserve great credit for the way they took care of the multitude.

On Wednesday of last week Mrs. W. R. Bierly, wife of the editor of the Grand Forks News, gave birth to triplets—three daughters. During the day one of the infants died. The remaining ones are reported as doing nicely, as well as the mother.

Princeton Union:—Clay, Goodhue, Mille Lacs, Grant, Crow Wing and Lac qui Parle counties have elected solid Nelson delegations to the Republican state convention. In Crow Wing, C. F. Kindred's old home, the delegates were instructed for Nelson. It is about time a McGill, Ives or Heatwole county was heard from. Better make it unanimous for Nelson.

THE ridiculous attempt of the Democratic press to make political capital out of the recent trouble at the Homestead iron and steel works will not avail them anything. They advance arguments to prove their assertions, and their object is so apparent that no one will be hoodwinked by it. This nation never was in a more prosperous condition than it is today, and there has been fewer strikes and labor troubles for the last twelve months than in any year for the last quarter of a century—in proportion to the number of people employed. Such occurrences as that in the little Pennsylvania town are not due to the policy of any party, but to competition in business, and to human avarice. If we had free trade the employes of Carnegie & Co. would be reduced to the level of the European laborer. The European manufacturer accumulates wealth as rapidly as the American, and if the American manufacturer had no protection and had to reduce the price of his product, he would reduce the wages of his workmen. The Republican party nor no other party can prevent this. Every sane person knows that the price of labor is fixed by the inevitable law of supply and demand, and as long as men can be found who will work for a doll r a day, the employer will not pay a dollar and a half. Labor of any kind is a commodity which is bought and sold the same as any article of goods. Take any line of business and note how competition has reduced the prices in the past twenty-five years, and as long as this government allows the importation of thousands of European laborers annually to this country, so long will we be afflicted with labor troubles, riots and bloodsheds, because the foreigner places his services on the market at any price offered him, and the American laborer cannot and will not compete with him. If the American mechanic does not get all the benefits which protection is intended to give him, but the manufacturer reaps the profits instead, it is not the fault of the protective tariff. The law cannot fix the price of wages and compel manufacturers to pay that price. Wages are regulated by the supply of labor, and unfortunately for labor there is too much of that product in the land, and this enables the employer to reduce the wages of his employes and further increase his riches.

THE PEOPLE'S PARTY.

Minneapolis Tribune:—The convention at Omaha had some well-meaning men in it; but it was dominated by as selfish a lot of demagogues as ever lived. They libel the land we love by saying in effect that it is the most tyrannical and illy governed nation on earth. They stir up discontent by proclaiming that it is law, or lack of law, that prevents every man from being a millionaire.

To their notion, if a person is a failure, it is the fault of our political system and not his own lack of industry, economy or prudence.

Who expects to get a government without a flaw? The experience of thousands of years shows us that this hope is a dream; but here in America we have approached nearer the ideal than ever before and with a fair hope of further advancement. In no other nation under heaven are such opportunities offered. The very men denounced by the People's party are examples of what the friendless boys of this land, without advantages of birth or influence to help them, can accomplish under a free government. They began life in an even race and have won what any poor boy may hope to win in turn if he enters the contest with the same courage, ability and determination.

But falsehood, as well as hypocrisy, mark the declarations of the People's party.

Who believes that the misery of the people of the United States finds no parallel in the civilized world?

Who believes that any political party proposes to sacrifice the "homes" of the masses and their "wives and children" in order to secure "a corruption fund" from the millionaires?

Who believes that a "hireling standing army is maintained to shoot down" protesting labor?

"Oh, liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" For this is a crime! As much so as the incendiary harangues that led to the anarchist riots and the massacre of policemen in Chicago. When men arise and solemnly proclaim to the people that they are shamefully oppressed, that their rights are trampled under foot, that their wives and children are being starved and outraged by a corrupt oligarchy which runs the government for its own benefit, they commit a crime against liberty for which they will one day answer.

There are plenty of abuses in this land which should be corrected. Some of them are specified in the Omaha address; but with all its faults this is still the ideal republic and it will continue to be such unless blindness or wickedness shall finally succeed in proving to the world that such freedom as we enjoy destroys itself by its own folly.

EDITOR DANA, whose sun shines for all, gives these as the essentials of journalism: "Good health, good temper, upright principles, the best education he can possibly get, and the most varied knowledge, provided it is accurate." The first essentials of a literary outfit are the Bible, Shakespeare and the constitution of the United States. He also decides in favor of a college education, and political and religious convictions. He gives these as the judgments of 50 years of journalistic experience.

THE FARMERS' alliance met in St. Paul last week and put Jim Baker in the field as a candidate for governor, conditionally—the conditions being that no satisfactory arrangment could be made with the People's party on the 13th. The object they have in view is to knock Donnelly out and take up a new man. If the People's party will not consent to this, then the alliance will go ahead and complete a State ticket. The evident animus of the whole business is to down Donnelly, and to a man up a tree it looks as though they had not the necessary means at hand and could not do that without Donnelly's consent.

GUARD WELL YOUR HEALTH.

Minneapolis Tribune:—When a visitation of Asiatic cholera in the Northwest is almost as improbable as an epidemic of sunstroke in January, it is an interesting fact, nevertheless, that the meteorological conditions of the past three months have been those by which "cholera years," so called, have been almost invariably marked. Nearly every summer that has witnessed the march of cholera beyond its oriental breeding places into Europe and America has been a "wet" summer in the countries invaded. Alternations of rain, with an atmosphere sultry and chilly by turns, are productive of cholera morbus and other afflictions of the bowels. Medical reports state that wherever true cholera prevails kindred complaints of a less serious character often assume epidemic form.

As stated above, while the fact that Asiatic cholera has made its appearance in Moscow and even in Paris, affords no sufficient ground for grave apprehension in the Northwest, nevertheless, the atmospheric conditions of the spring and early summer have been favorable to the prevalence of cholera's mischievous cousins. It is not surprising, therefore, that cholera morbus, cholera infantum and similar derangements of the digestive organs are unusually prevalent this summer and will become more so if the cold, rainy spring is to be followed by a "heated term" of any considerable duration and severity.

Extreme caution as to drink and diet is the best safeguard. If city water is used, boil it before drinking it, and beware of vegetables and fruits that are wilted, soured or decayed. The less meat the better, and the same may be said of alcoholic and malt beverages.

Only by keeping the system in the best possible condition to resist disease can one hope to escape the prevailing ailment.

THE HOMESTEAD TRAGEDY.

The awful tragedy at Homestead, Pa., in which a dozen workmen and as many detectives were killed, and scores of others injured, is only another act in the struggle between capital and labor which has been going on for years, and for which there seems no relief. It is the old story, a reduction of wages, workmen refuse to accept reduction, Pinkerton detectives called on to protect the works, a bloody battle ensues, and much bloodshed results. Andrew Carnegie, the iron maker, at whose immense plant at Homestead the conflict occurred, should be held responsible for the unwarranted shedding of blood at his works. There are some 3,800 men employed in his mills, and out of that number only about 265 were affected by the reduction of wages, and it is claimed by Carnegie's people that the improved machinery which has been put in will more than make up for the reduction of wages by increasing the output of steel of each worker. Be that as it may, the Carnegie managers were not justified in bringing an armed body of the hated Pinkerton men to Homestead when they knew full well it would precipitate a conflict w the workmen and result in loss life. If the Carnegie company w ed to reduce the wages of their ployes, it was their privilege to so, and it is also their privilege shut down their mills for an inde nite period, but when they empl armed men from without the sta to fight the workmen, they overste the bounds of prudence. The state laws should be and are sufficien strong to protect the interests of every citizen of the state.

But no responsible person will dare to uphold the stand the workmen have taken in usurping possession of the Carnegie works and declaring that no non-union man shall ever be put to work there.

It is the rankest kind of anarchy for one man or a body of men to take possession of another's property by force, and there can only be one interpretation to the action of the democratic executive of the great state of Pennsylvania in refusing to send troops to the scene of action, upon the repeated and urgent calls of the sheriff of the county, who was powerless to quell the riot. The mechanics of Pennsylvania, knowing that protection is intended to give them higher wages, are mostly republicans. Gov. Pattison in refusing to send troops to protect the Carnegie property, made a strong bid for the votes of the Pennsylvania mechanics. It is a shame and an outrage that a state executive should—for political purposes—violate the fundamental principles of the federal and state constitution by refusing to protect the lives and property of every citizen of the state.

It is wrong that the laws of Pennsylvania allow the importation of armed men to fight strikers, and workmen at Homested canno blamed for resisting this inva but the reckless killing of the tectives and their brutal treat after surrender cannot be condo

There is no great loss wit some small gain, and it may be this case. Congress has appoi a committee to investigate all circumstances which led up to trouble at Homestead and ma report, and it is quite probable th will be some legislation enacted o this question.

Warren Register:—While at Crookston last week, we had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Hon. Knute Nelson, our next governor, Marcus Johnson, collector of Internal Revenue for Minn., and Eugene Hay, U. S. Dist. Atty. for this state. Johnson is something of a dude in style. Hay is a keen, sharp looking young man, and Nelson looks like a plain, honest old farmer. He looks you square in the eyes when he talks to you, with a smile on his face, and no stuck up airs or frills about him. He is one of the plain people and don't pretend to be anybody else, and that is one reason why we like him.

Soapsuds Are Valuable.

Few persons know how very useful soapsuds prove when employed as manure. Applied to the roots of vines, fruit trees, roses, etc., they impart a vigor and rapidity of growth which is perfectly surprising. No one who is so lucky as to have a garden should waste this valuable form of manure. It is an excellent plan to have a large tub, and put the soapsuds and dirty water into it till required upon the garden.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Tiny Timepiece.

M. Morquet, a friar of the Florentine order in Paris, has constructed a perfect watch only a quarter of an inch in diameter. Besides the two hands seen on all watches it has a third which marks the seconds, besides a microscopic dial which indicates the days, weeks, months and years. It also contains an alarm, and on its front lid is an ingeniously cut figure of St. Francis. On the back cover, by aid of a powerful glass, you can distinctly read two verses of the "Te De um."—Philadelphia Press.

Tickets now on sale at Tom Morris'

AS THE time for the Republican state convention approaches the probabilities for the nomination of Hon. Knute Nelson for governor increase. Almost every county convention so far held has pronounced in his favor, and we should not be a bit suprrised to see him nominated by acclamation.

A Safe Investment

May be shortly defined as one guaranteed to bring you satisfactory results. Among investments which come up to the standard are these:

A ticket over "The Burlington" from Minneapolis and St. Paul to Chicago and points east.

A business lot or a good home in any of the many hundred thriving cities and towns located on the Burlington lines in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

A ticket over "The Burlington" from the northwest to St. Louis and points south.

A cheap farm selected from the fertile lands of Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Oregon or Washington, taking "The Burlington" as the best route to get there.

An application to your local agent for your ticket via "The Burlington."

A sheet of paper, envelope and a two cent stamp, expended in writing to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., for further information on the above points.

Short Line to Spokane.

About August 1st, regular daily passenger service will be inaugurated between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Spokane, Wash., on the Great Northern extension. For the present mixed trains run Sundays and Wednesdays each way, 512 miles, between Havre, Mont., and Spokane. This new route will be the short line from the East to Spokane and eastern Washington, and is the only line to the Flathead Valley. It also opens up the famous Kootenai country. The road-way is in most perfect condition, and has lowest grades of any transcontinental line. See Agent Fegan for further information. Do not forget to write to your eastern friends about the half fare excursions, on the Great Northern, Aug. 30 and Sept. 27th.

Is This Consistency?

Grand Forks Herald:—Walter Muir last year paid off a mortgage of $6,000 from the proceeds of a single crop—the mortgage representing—not money lost by farming—or "robbery"—but borrowed capital—capital that never was his until the mortgage was paid—and then went to Omaha—along with Hodgson—and voted for a platform declaring that he lives "in the midst of a nation brought to the verge of material ruin."

The Cobweb as a Styptic.

When Bottom was "translated" and introduced to the attendants of Titania he endeavored to ingratiate himself with Good Master Cobweb by saying, "When I cut my finger, I will make bold with you." To arrest bleeding the application of a cobweb to the wound has long been a rural custom. Experience has shown that the gossamer of which the web is composed forms a very useful styptic, but a very fatal objection to its use arises from the fact that as an application to an open wound it can never be guaranteed as surgically clean, forming as it does a net for insects and at the same time for the germs of many an infectious disease.

Evidence of this was produced before the Liverpool coroner recently touching the death of Martha Roberts, who, following the timehonored custom, had applied a cobweb to her wounded hand to stop the bleeding. Blood poisoning followed upon its application, and this terminated, unhappily, in a fatal issue. It is not a solitary case. The principles of ascepticism have not yet become part of the intellectual equipment of the people, neither have its lessons succeeded in overcoming prejudice.—London Lancet.

Ex-President White's Collection.

It is not generally known, we think, that Andrew D. White, formerly president of Cornell university, has a remarkable collection of posters, including a number of the original incendiary placards and bills put up in the streets of Paris during the frightful period of the French revolution.—Chicago News.

The Principal Meal.

The principal meal of all people of all ages has been undoubtedly dinner, and the lover of old time customs will find it both interesting and entertaining to notice the various changes which have taken place in the etiquette of the dinner table.—Chicago Herald.

Everybody Uses Tobacco in India.

It is not, as among the English, that only some men smoke tobacco, but with rare exceptions in India all natives, men and women, indulge in this weed in some form or other.—Chambers' Journal.

Probably the estimate of the earth's population for the year 1891, made by a learned German statistician, is the most nearly accurate of any yet made—1,480,000,000.

The bank capital of Boston at the beginning of this century, including a branch bank of the United States, was about $3,500,000.

BEFORE HE THOUGHT.

The Poor Fellow Was Really Hungry and Spoke His Mind Too Frankly.

Tom De Witt, Jack Ford and Ed Stillman had been living on cigars and hope for two days and were nearly starved to death.

They had decided to honor some of their Vassar friends with a visit, at the time of the commencement, when the college discipline is somewhat relaxed: but a short stay in the place had convinced them that the fare of the Poughkeepsie boarding house was inadequate to satisfy Murray Hill appetites.

So when, after a morning drive, the girls announced that they intended to effectually silence the current feeble sneer at the cooking abilities of fair collegians by giving the party a lunch prepared by themselves, there was joy in the hearts of the men. At the word "lunch" Tom looked at Ed and Ed looked at Tom, and Jack looked straight into the face of the prettiest girl and said most felicitously, "Oh, thank you!"

It was to be served in one of the rooms at 2 o'clock; "in the meantime they would stroll about the grounds and get up an appetite."

At last the lunch came. It was a "pink" one. The table was artistically and tastefully decorated. Big pink bows and bunches of roses covered the cloth, and elaborately painted dinner cards directed the guests to their seats.

As course succeeded course the men began to wonder where the substantials were coming in, and to realize that a third disappointment had fallen to their lot.

The little tubs of deviled salmon, the impalpable croquettes with tender asparagus tips, the tiny dabs of shrimp salad in the center of cool, green lettuce leaves, the salted almonds, the olives, the meringues glace and the strawberry sherbet were all very dainty and delicate, but not particularly satisfying to earthly mortals whose thoughts were running on thick, juicy English chops and big pewter mugs the size of an infant's bathtub.

And when as a finishing touch cute little packages of tutti frutti, cunningly tied up in pink ribbons, were passed around on a silver plate, the men felt unequal to further conversational effort.

A few hours after the feast Tom De Witt remarked that it was time for them to be starting, as they expected to catch the 7:50 train for New York.

"Oh, you'd better stay over until the 10:10," remonstrated a sweet sophomore; "you will just spoil your evening. What will you do when you get back to the city?"

Here was the great opportunity of Jack's life, and unconsciously he rose to it.

"Oh," he said earnestly, "we'll go straight to a hotel and get something to eat, for we haven't had a square meal since we have been in this town!"

For a moment three girls stared blankly at each other, and then the young men gathered their hats and canes together and, saying hurried "good nights," sped, with horizontal coat tails, in the direction of the depot.—Harry Romaine in Homemaker.

How the Cobra Gives Warning.

The most dangerous reptiles of India and Africa are the cobras. No snakes, not even rattlesnakes, are more dreaded, and with reason. As the rattlesnake warns the ear by its significant "rattle," so the cobras warn the eye by the mode in which they expand the upper part of the body when irritated. This expansion is produced by a sudden movement of the ribs of that region of the body. Usually they incline backward, but the animal, when irritated, makes them stand out at right angles to the body, and so, of course, forces outward the skin which covers them. Thus the neck, or part just behind the head, becomes greatly expanded and flattened, as it also does, though in a less degree, in the Australian blacksnake. This expansion is called a hood, and so the animals are called hooded snakes. In some of them there is on the back of the hood a dark mark, something like a pair of spectacles, and they have therefore been called spectacle snakes.—Quarterly Review.

How Hawthorne Wrote.

We never think of local color in connection with Hawthorne. Apparently he didn't need to put it on. Perhaps he would not have understood about it. He might have thought that the counterpart of the literary term (local color) applied socially would refer to the women who paint, the term has such an artificial sound. One has an idea of a colored photograph; the local color is not a part of the substance, but is imposed. Hawthorne was not conscious of any necessity of giving local color to his creations. He wrote of that into which he was born, and his creations, even when they were in foreign settings, glowed with that internal personality which is never counterfeited by veneering.—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's.

Definition of a Journalist.

"A man of literature compelled by circumstances to be also a man of business." That is the definition of a journalist, given by Mr. Sala. It is a good enough definition in its way, though it cannot be considered as invariably accurate. There are a good many soi disant journalists who are certainly not "men of literature," and a good many more, whose claim to the title of journalist is unquestioned, who are certainly not "men of business."—London Globe.

Excuse for Bad Roads.

Bicyclist (in disgust)—Why do you have such abominable roads in this section?

Farmer—Wall, you see, we're afraid if we made 'em any better you bicycle fellers will be usin 'em.—Good News.

The Grand Trunk railway of Uruguay, from Montevideo, has been completed, and opens out a vast tract of fertile land, hitherto comparatively worthless, the area of which is only a little less than Belgium.

The sublimest poem of antiquity is impersonal, yet written in the Hebrew tongue. The book of Job, the life drama of the Man of Uz, towers with no peak near it; its authorship lost, but its fable associated in mind with the post-Noachian age, the time when God discoursed with men and the stars hung low in the empyrean. It is both epic and dramatic, yet embodies the whole wisdom of the patriarchal race. Who composed it? Who carved the Sphinx or set the angles of the Pyramids? The shadow of his name was taken lest he should fall by pride, like Eblis. The narrative prelude to Job has the direct epic of simplicity—a Cyclopean porch to the temple, but within are heaven, the angels, the plumed lord of evil before the throne of a judicial god. The personages of the dialogue beyond are firmly distinguished: Eliphaz, Bildad, Zophar, Elihu—to whom the inspiration of the Almighty gave understanding—and the smitten protagonist himself, majestic in ashes and desolation.

Each outvies the other in grandeur of language, imagination, worship. Can there be a height above these lofty utterances? Yes; only in this poem has God answered out of the whirlwind, his voice made audible, as if an added range of hearing for a space enabled us to comprehend the reverberations of a superhuman tone. I speak not now of the motive, the inspiration of the symphonic masterpiece; it is still a mortal creation, though maintaining an impersonality so absolute as to confirm our sense of mystery and awe.—Edmund Clarence Stedman in Century.

The Modern French Girl.

There are no French grisettes nowadays. The sunny, trim little maid who has done such admirable service in play and romance has disappeared. The race has given way to another—one more worldly wise, more mercenary.

The grisette had illusions. She believed the student she loved would be a great man some day. So she worked for him, earned two or three dollars a week making artificial flowers, passementerie or the like.

But the young person who has taken the place of the grisette is of an altogether different class—more modern, more practical, less given to illusions and romance and with tolerably well defined notions as to the value of money.

Her ideas of dress are always expressed in the very latest fashion. She has perfect taste in the combination of colors and the arrangement of drapery.

If the conversation takes a personal turn she will let you know, with the most charming amiability, that she is the daughter of a colonel—generally a colonel in retirement—and that she has been only a short time out of such and such a convent, where she was educated.

She is almost always pretty, of agreeable manners and rather intelligent, though she firmly believes that a man with a hunchback is a sure sign of good luck.—Irish Times.

Haydon, Northcote and Opie.

Haydon was then eighteen "a slim, handsome lad," with a bright country color, black curly hair and all the enthusiasm of youth and health beaming from his "fierce, azure eyes." In a dirty painting room, under a high window, "with the light shining full on his bald head," he found Northcote, "a diminutive, wizened figure, in an old blue striped dressing gown, his spectacles pushed up on his forehead." He peered maliciously at the eager youth from his little shining eyes over the open letter, and said in his broad Devonshire: "Zo you mayne to bee a peinter, doo-ee? What zort of peinter?" "Historical painter, sir." "Heestoricaul peinter! Why, yee'll starve with a bundle of straw under yeer head!"

After much more discouragement from Northcote, Haydon went his way to Opie's clean gallery in Berners street. A "coarse looking intellectual man" received him and said, "You are studying anatomy—master it; were I your age, I would do the same." "I have just come from Mr. Northcote, and he says I am wrong, sir." "Never mind what he says. He doesn't know it himself, and would be glad to keep you as ignorant." "I could have hugged Opie!" comments Haydon.—Temple Bar.

Turtles That Grow Old.

The Galapagos tortoises are vegetable feeders, browsing chiefly upon a succulent cactus. It is said that they are entirely deaf, so that even the report of a gun does not startle or alarm them. At intervals they make pilgrimages to the hilltops, where water is to be found, traveling by night only. Thus in the course of centuries they have worn regular roads from the shore up the mountain sides, by following which the Spaniards first discovered the watering places.

They have very long and snakelike necks and heads, and their feet surprisingly resemble those of an elephant. Their clumsy method of locomotion also suggests a likeness to the great pachyderm. Undoubtedly they live to a very great age, and their aspect is most venerable.—Boston Transcript.

Sandy's Answer.

"Sandy," said Mrs. Simpson to her eldest olive branch the other day when he returned from school, "I forbid ye to play or rin about wi' that Bobby Wilson ony mare. Mind that, na, an if I ever hear o' you playin wi' him again I'll gi ye a guid lickin." "What way have I no' to play wi' Bobby, ma?" queried the youngster, with some surprise. "Becus he's a bad, wicked laddie," replied his mother. "Weel, ma," returned Sandy, after a moment's thought, "I dinna think I'm that awfu' guid mysel' that ye need to be sae feart."—Scottish American.

Two Things That Cannot Be Done.

To hold a school up to the highest standard of excellence, and this by unceasing vigilance, is one thing. To manage it so as to make the most money and to gain the most friends, is another. The teacher who tries to do both will probably not succeed in the first.—Anna C. Brackett in Harper's.

Faith in Witchcraft.

Belief in witchcraft is still found among the people in many countries. The wife of a rich farmer in Styria, Austria, had been paralyzed for years, and the medical men gave her up as hopeless. The farmer lately applied to a soothsayer, who looked into the matter and pronounced the patient to be bewitched. She pointed out another farmer who had also been sick for years as the wizard, and prescribed that an old pair of pants of the man and a few drops of his blood must be placed over a dull fire and slowly burned. The patient must be held over this smoldering fire and thoroughly fumigated, after which she would recover. The pants were obtained and the old sick man one evening, when stepping into the doorway of his hut to get a breath of fresh air, was attacked and thrown down on his face to make his nose and mouth bleed.

The blood was carefully scraped up from the ground and the fumigation made, but of course without the promised effect of curing the woman. The old man was terribly shaken and has died since, whether as a result of the outrage committed against him is not reported. At Velilla, Spain, a farmer was sick. His son went to the only woman in the village that enjoyed the reputation of being a witch and demanded of her to restore his father to health. When a few days later his father had not improved he went and shot both the socalled witch and her husband dead.—Chicago Herald.

Divine Service by Telephone.

The mayor of Nottingham, accompanied by several members of the corporation and other leading men of the town, recently attended divine service in a novel fashion. The meeting house was the local exchange of the National Telephone company, but the service in which they participated was conducted at Christ church, Birmingham, fifty-one miles away, the communication being of course by telephone.

They sat on each side of the long table on which thirty receivers were placed, while at the church end were eight transmitters—two in the belfry, two in the choir, two in the reading desk, and two in the pulpit, switched on and off as exigencies required—an arrangement which has been in operation for some weeks for the edification of Birmingham subscribers. The Nottingham congregation were able to hear the bells very distinctly, and the responses and other musical portions of the service, while the preacher, having a clear voice and deliberate utterance, was very audible, and his sermon was listened to with close attention.—London Tit-Bits.

Ancient Tombs.

While legal proceedings as to the ownership of the famous Red Rock caverns, below Menton, in which has been recently found a still further group of neolithic skeletons of a giant man, are still pending, an almost equally interesting discovery has been made in a deep railway cutting at Andresy, in Seine-et-Oise, near Paris, where the workmen ran upon a huge Merovingian cemetery of the Sixth century. Already there have been uncovered nearly 600 tombs, extending over an area of 2½ miels, yielding a hitherto unheard of mass of carved sarcophagi, knives, spears, vases, ornaments and pottery of unique shapes and styles of decoration.

It is recalled now that the tiny hamlet of Andresy, in the generations succeeding the introduction of Christianity by Genevieve and Clovis, was an important missionary center. The expected scientific examination of these multitudinous remains will throw a flood of light on the origins of the church among all ranks.—Paris Letter.

Electric Locomotives for Steam Roads.

There are signs that one of the most startling revolutions of the century is approaching. Steps are being taken in the northwest toward the laying of an experimental track on which many points bearing on the substitution of electric locomotives for steam locomotives on trunk lines will be determined, and electrical engineers throughout the country are on the qui vive for the next developments. The three eighty ton electric locomotives to be used in the Belt line tunnel, Baltimore, will push a freight train of 1,200 tons, including locomotive, through the tunnel, up an eight-tenths of 1 per cent. grade, for a distance of 6,000 feet, at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, or a 500 ton passenger train, including locomotive, at the rate of thirty miles an hour.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Coins of the Mogul Emperors.

Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole has finished his "Catalogue of the Coins of the Mogul Emperors of Hindoostan in the British Museum," from the invasion of Baber to the establishment of a British currency by the East India company, in 1535. It contains descriptions of over 1,400 coins, chiefly gold and silver, 500 of which are represented in the autotype illustrations. This completes this author's description of the entire collection of Mohammedan coins in the museum.

The house in which Handel was born at Halle, on the 23d of January, 1635, is to be sold, and seems likely to be bought by a brewer, who already uses the grounds as a garden. The great composer's admirers desire, however, to have the house converted into a Handel museum, as has been done with the birthplaces of Goethe, Beethoven and other famous men, and are collecting funds for the purpose.—London Standard.

Nine-tenths of the stuff used as bay rum in New York, and other places as well, is not bay rum at all, but a mixture of the essential oil of bay with common rum or alcohol.

Mr. Goodfellow writes that "toast is more easily digested than ordinary bread insomuch as it contains a greater percentage of hydrocarbon."

When the United States practice ship Constellation sailed on the cadets' summer voyage Monday afternoon it had aboard a number of homing pigeons, to be used as means of communication between the ship and points ashore. The birds will be liberated at intervals, and are expected to bring official messages from the practice vessel to the naval academy, where a loft or cote has recently been established.

If the experiment should prove successful the government will probably find it profitable to the navy to encourage the homing pigeon service with the small appropriation needed to carry out the plans of the projectors of the enterprise. At present the facilities for training birds at the naval academy are limited, no government appropriation being available. At Fortress Monroe, the first stopping place of the ship, it is possible several trained birds from Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York will be taken aboard and later dispatched with information from the cruising grounds. The headquarters at Washington will also be posted of the whereabouts of the vessel through winged messengers from that city. A loft of birds to accompany the ship will no doubt be sufficiently trained toward the close of the voyage to be useful in conveying messages ashore. — Annapolis Cor. Baltimore Sun.

No "Reversing" in Fashionable Dancing.

I am about to give society here and the leaders of the german at watering places this summer a bit of fashionable intelligence which I know will be startling in the extreme. The fiat has gone out in the best London and Continental society that the "reverse" in the valse shall no longer be permitted. This reform seems to have been originated by the Prince of Wales, and of course it was immediately taken up by the smaller fashionables in London. The ill natured say his royal highness never did dance well in his golden youth, and that since he has come to a liberal rotundity of belt, or, in other words, grown fat, his dancing is simply execrable. He always had great difficulty in "doing the reverse" in the waltz, and now that he cannot do it all he puts the ban of his disapproval on it. Hereafter there is to be no "reversing" at the state balls or at any dances which are honored by the royal presence. The fact is, the "reverse" was hardly ever seen on the other side of the water at any time, and now having the positive disapproval of "the first gentleman of England" it will disappear for good.—Lounger in Washington Herald.

Church Pillars in a Scrap.

A good thing has just leaked out concerning a church fair held in Utica not very long ago. When the booths were being put in position two men had a disagreement as to what position in the hall a certain booth should occupy. It was a small matter of course, but each disputant was sure he was right. There was a war of words, and one invited the other outside to settle the difficulty. Those who witnessed the settlement said that it was unique and amusing. Which party set the ball rolling will never be known. There was a swish of fists in the air, two angry grunts, a sprinkling of blood from two damaged nasal appendages, a whirl of arms and legs, and the booth builders rolled over one another in the mud. Two sorry looking pillars of the church they were when separated and sent home to recuperate. The booth went up, but whether its position was mutually satisfactory has not been learned.—Utica Observer.

Mr. Epstein Held Four Aces.

Burt Seiger, hailing from St. Louis, was yesterday afternoon bunkoed out of $160 on a poker hand, and James Cary, Charles Kline and Isaac Epstein were arrested on the charge of operating a confidence game. The four men were on an incoming Missouri Pacific train and were indulging in a quiet game of euchre for points. During the progress of the game Epstein remarked that he held a good poker hand. At this Seiger said he also held a good poker hand, and proposed that the game be turned from euchre to poker, which was accordingly done and the cigars bet. From cigars for the crowd the stakes grew to a box, and from a box of cigars to five dollars. Continuing at this rate, the neat bet of $160—all Seiger had—was made and the turn called. Seiger held four kings and Mr. Epstein four aces.—Kansas City Journal.

A Pretty Big Fourteen-year-old.

The youngest soldier in the British army, Private Defries, aged fourteen years and six months, is a fine child for his age. He is close upon 5 feet 5 inches in height, with a chest measurement of 33 inches, and weighs 126 pounds. It is no wonder, therefore, that the military authorities should have enlisted him without a demur when he told them that he was over eighteen. His father now seeks to have him discharged on account of his tender years; but the war office, not unreasonably, holds that the onus lies upon him to prove that his son is the lusus naturæ he would make him out. In other words, the condition of his discharge is the production of a certificate of age—and very right.—London Globe.

Good Dentistry by a Cow.

An Oak Hill (Litchfield) man had an aching tooth out in a novel manner the other day. He was removing a poke from a cow, when the animal threw up her head, striking the bow pin which he held in his hand against one of the lower front teeth, knocking it out. It happened to be the one that had been aching.—Winthrop (Conn.) Banner.

The mischievous rodents known as jack rabbits have caused great damage to the orchards in the state of Washington, and measures for the extermination of the pests are under consideration.

Creede, Colo., is not yet nine months old, but it has a population of 8,000 souls two morning papers, one evening and four weekly publications.

A Hero of the Future.

History records the unselfish deeds and the bravery of our soldiers in time of danger, and future history will record the bravery of our workmen who earn their daily bread amid great danger and imminent peril. An inquest was held last week by Mr. Brighouse, county coroner at Parr, near St. Helens, on a man named Richard Gill, aged fifty years. About a year and a half ago he was working in the shaft of a coal mine with three other men, blasting rock. The deceased, after the shots were ready, told the other men to get into the hopper.

He then lighted the fuse connected with the shots and then got into the hopper. He fancied he had given the wrong signal and jumped out of the hopper to cut off the fuse. He managed to cut off one, but the others were too far burned. The other men begged him to give the signal to ascend and get into the hopper, but he said: "No, I will stay where I am. It is better for one man to die than for all." Just then the hopper began to ascend and the other men were drawn to the top, and soon after Gill pulled the signal wire and they went down to him and found him badly injured about the head. He had a compound fracture of the skull, and remained five months in the hospital, but never got over his injury.—London Lancet.

Spaniards as Shoplifters.

Spaniards are now said to be most predominant among the criminals arrested for stealing in large shops or pocket picking on race courses or at great public gatherings. Several Iberians have been caught purse snatching at the Gingerbread fair, and there have just appeared before the police court two men and two women from over the Pyrenees who practiced shoplifting on a large scale. The Spaniards, who had been suspected of pocket picking in the Jardin d'Acclimatation, were dogged by a detective, who saw them enter the Grands Magasins du Louvre. They drove to the place in a hired victoria, the jehu of which was one of the men. After having remained for awhile in the shop they saw that they were being watched, so they left the place, entered their vehicle and were conveyed to the Printemps.

Thither the detective followed them, and although he had no ocular proof that the Spaniards stole anything he arrested the lot, the driver of the victoria being seized by a policeman who had received instructions to observe his movements. Under the cushions of the vehicle were found three large pieces of silk which had been stolen from the Louvre shops and were valued at a little over forty pounds.—London Telegraph.

English Reporters Must Be Educated.

There are to be no ignoramuses in the English journalism of the future. A special committee of the institute of the profession has prepared a report in which it is recommended that candidates for admission to membership must pass an examination in the English language, English literature, English constitution and political history, political and physical geography. They must also have a "sufficient knowledge" of Latin, either French and German, and "some acquaintance" with universal history.

But perpaps the most important recommendation of all is that every candidate shall be examined in "The Principles of the Law of Newspaper Libel." This is certainly a poser, and any journalist who succeeds in showing that he has mastered the law of libel will be well worthy of all the honors which his colleagues can bestow.—Pall Mall Budget.

Mr. Weslosky's Aristocratic Hen.

At the farm of Mr. Maurice Weslosky, of Albany, a Plymouth Rock hen had been set on sixteen eggs—thirteen of which were Plymouth Rock eggs and the other three eggs of a common breed of chickens. The motherly old hen hatched out the whole sixteen, but when they were all able to run about according to her clucking she seemed to eye the three little aliens suspiciously. That Biddy disapproved the mixture of the breed was at once evinced by the scornful manner assumed, and soon she showed it in an emphatic way by falling viciously on the three strangers and putting a sudden and violent end to their young lives.—Cor. Atlanta Constitution.

A Newspaper in an Earthquake.

Probably no issue of a newspaper was ever put in type under more trying circumstances than this issue. The type was badly pied, and as it was put in position it was necessary to wedge it securely to keep each shock from undoing the work of days. The compositors stood bravely at their posts, even in moments of the greatest danger, when the brick walls threatened to collapse and bury them in the ruins. We were compelled to move our office after Thursday's shock, and much more damage was done, but we, after all, were delayed but three or four hours with our edition.—Dixon (Cal.) Tribune.

Too Heavy to Go Down.

A corespondent sends the following tough story from Lancaster, which we don't believe: "Several days ago Walter C. Hardy noticed that a lot of tenpenny nails he had in a shed were disappearing, and he yesterday discovered that about three pounds of the nails had been carried to an elevated place by one of his pigeons and used in building a nest."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Seventeen and fifteen years were the respective ages of a young couple who eloped and got married at Edgefield, S. C., one day last week.

FARM AND GARDEN

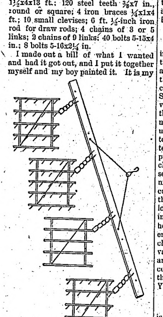
A LIGHT SMOOTHING HARROW.

A Progressive Agriculturist Tells in The Ohio Farmer How to Make It.

The harrow I had made to suit me for a special purpose (harrowing corn—corn for ensilage being our main fodder crop), and it does so much better work and so much faster than any ready made drag I ever saw that I would not like to be without it. It is just as good for killing weeds in potatoes as in corn. The field should be harrowed as soon as two or three days after planting, and surely twice a week until the corn is four to six inches high. Use one horse until the corn is up nicely and then use two horses, always driving between the rows so as not to trample on corn or row.

The woodwork of this harrow is all of good, seasoned white oak painted three coats with Venetian red dry mixed in raw oil. The teeth can be made of old sulky hayrake teeth three-eighths of an inch, or get ⅜-inch square steel and cut in 6-inch lengths and have sharpened, making teeth about seven inches long, and drive down even with top of beams. I will give a bill of the material needed for such a drag: Twenty beams 2x2x4 ft., planed on all sides; 8 crossrails 2x2x3 ft., planed on all sides; 1 doubletree 1½x4x13 ft.; 120 steel teeth ⅜x7 in., round or square; 4 iron braces ¼x1x4 ft.; 10 small clevises; 6 ft. ½-inch iron rod for draw rods; 4 chains of 3 or 5 links; 2 chains of 9 links; 40 bolts 5-15x4 in.; 8 bolts 5-16x2¼ in.

I made out a bill of what I wanted and had it got out, and I put it together myself and my boy painted it. It is my own invention and no patent, so any one can use it. The teeth are set a little slanting back and sidewise also. The sections are hung to doubletree just as far apart as rows are. If rows are close and the sections bother about jumping on each other, lengthen chains about eight or ten inches on Nos. 1 and 3 (see figure).



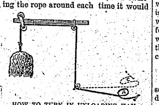
HOMEMADE SMOOTHING HARROW.

This drag is very nice for covering flaxseed or oats when sown by hand broadcast. There are extra holes in doubletree for use on wide rows. Draft rods fasten to doubletree by clevises, not shown in the cut. The clevises can be made of ⅜-inch iron rod with ends simply bent around and not welded, and ⅜-inch bolts for pins, making a very cheap clevis.

Managing Hay Ropes.

An Illinois farmer says that new hay ropes ought to be tied to the hind axle of a wagon and a rail or other heavy object tied to the other end and dragged a mile or two. When placed in the pulleys, the rope should be untwisted a few turns if it offers to kink. Sometimes the driver of the hoisting horse causes trouble by turning one way all the time, crossing and twisting the rope as shown at A in the illustration herewith.

In unloading twenty tons of hay in a day, seven forkfuls to a load, and twisting the rope around each time it would receive 140 twists. If the horse is turned gee at the outer end of the rope he should be turned haw at the inner, as at C.



HOW TO TURN IN UNLOADING HAY.

A Nebraska correspondent of The Prairie Farmer, from which the foregoing is a reprint, writes: "My way of taking the kink out of a rope is to wrap it around a tree or stump three or four times and hitch a good span of horses to it. Have a man pull on the back end of the rope enough so that the team will need to draw hard in pulling it over the tree. When the man holding the other end is drawn up to the stump have him and the team change ends and repeat three or four times. This kind of warming will take the kink out of any rope."

Turning Under Clover.

Never turn under the first crop of clover. Make hay of the first cutting and turn under the next growth, or aftermath, in September, and sow in wheat, oats, rye or barley for pasture. Then turn under the stubble of the small grain and plant in corn, cotton, tobacco or anything else. March or April is too near clover harvest, which will bring a good return in clover hay, while the clover is too young and undeveloped to give best results as a renovator. By all means turn under the aftermath in the fall, says Southern Cultivator.

Fat People on a Hot Day.

On one of the recent hot, soggy afternoons, when every man hated his neighbor and tried to keep at a distance from him, a perspiring, heavily clothed fat man waddled into an elevated train at the city hall station and pre-empted one of the cross seats. He breathed like a porpoise and mopped his face with a large handkerchief.

Just before the train started a woman, heavy almost beyond description with adipose tissue, entered the same car. The car creaked beneath her tread. The passengers were many, and those who adjoined empty seats watched her progress with a nervous glance. But with as great a degree of blindness of choice as is sometimes said to prevail in marriage, she plunged to the center of the car and pressed herself down into the space beside the fat man.

The fat man looked at her a moment, but she seemed oblivious of his regard. Then he braced himself for a move and got out of his seat. Then the fat woman became aware of his presence.

"Don't move—plenty of room," said she.

"Madam," said he, and his voice was high and clear, "it's a hot day. I am fat. You are fat. We've got no business to be any where near each other. So you'll excuse me." And he moved away with an imitation of dignity, while the passengers laughed at his forcible English.

But the fat woman, nettled at first, thought better of it, and as she spread herself over the entire seat murmured to a crowded neighbor, "There's some advantage in being fat after all."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Clouds of Locusts.

The locusts are reappearing in Algeria in greater numbers than ever, in spite of the efforts that were made by the French administration last year to annihilate the pests. It is now believed that they come clear across the desert from the Soudan. The period of incubation varies from twenty to thirty days, and the locusts require only about two months to attain their complete development. This fact gives a realizing sense to the prodigious numbers in which the terrible insect may multiply during its progress across the Sahara. Great clouds of the locusts have already been seen on the northern edge of the Sahara making their way north. The news comes from Tonggurt and Ghardaia in the Sahara that early this year the locusts suddenly invaded those places in such enormous numbers that for four hours they fairly darkened the heavens. About a month before similar clouds of locusts were reported in the valley of the Niger river in the Soudan, and it is believed that in the four succeeding weeks they had journeyed to the northern part of the Sahara.—New York Sun.

Italy's New Prime Minister.

Signor Giovanni Giolitti, the new Italian premier, is said to be the youngest head of a ministry that Italy has had since Cavour. He is barely fifty years of age, and has only been in parliament ten years. In the caricatures of him in The Don Chisciotte he used to be represented, owing to his being one of the tallest of the deputies, by what might be called a hop pole clad in a long overcoat and very high silk hat. When he was twenty-two he took his degree of doctor of law, and in 1876, when Signor Depretis was in power, he had become director of customs. Signor Crispi made him minister of the treasury in March, 1889, and in November, 1890, minister of finance. A month later Signor Giolitti resigned, owing to a difference with the minister of public works, whose expenditure he wished to cut down. He then helped to bring about the fall of the Crispi cabinet. Signor Giolitti is the leader of the Piedmontese group of the left center.—London News.

Sheep from Persia.

Thirteen sheep and three lambs are on their way consigned to the agricultural department at Washington—a fact that presents considerable interest for the agriculturally minded. They were shipped from Persia, and an attempt is to be made to introduce their breeding into this country.

These sheep are said to be noted for the beauty and richness of their skins, which are the purest astrakhan. As a warm climate is necessary for their existence, at least for the present, they will probably be sent to southern California or to some other warm climate, where their value and adaptability to this country can be determined.—Worcester Spy.

Fruits Attract Them.

Hosts of unemployed men and others seeking temporarily to better their condition are flocking to the Delaware peninsula now to pick small fruits for the markets of Philadelphia and New York. The fruit growers erect rude sheds in the open fields, and here the berry pickers eat and sleep while the season lasts. The earnings of berry pickers are considerably above the average pay of farm hands. Later in the season come the "peach plucks," a race of tramps from all parts of the northern Atlantic slope, feared by the native farmers and hated as competitors by the negro farm laborers.

Said It, and Then He Died.

Bert C. Hunter, a prominent mining man of Neihardt, Mon., died recently from a sixty grain dose of morphine, taken with suicidal intent. Physicians worked over him for seventeen hours without success. Toward the last, while being jolted on a board, slapped in the face and shaken to keep him awake, he looked up ruefully and muttered, "Oh, what a difference in the morning."—Cor. There were only about forty delegates present at the opening, but others came in later and swelled the number to about a hundred.

J. H. Baker was nominated for governor and the rest of the ticket was left to be decided upon by a committee. A platform in line with the one adopted by the People's party at Omaha was adopted as were also resolutions holding Carnegie responsible for the recent bloody affray at Homestead. W. W. Erwin was chosen chairman of the new state central committee.

Once Wealthy.

A third of a century ago Bob Gridley of this place was probably the best known and one of the richest gamblers in the United States. He conducted a place for years before John Morrissey came to the front. Bob was characterized as an "honest gambler," a scarce article in the world of chance today, and it was a common saying that "Bob Gridley's word is good for $50,000." As the years thinned his locks and bent his form his luck changed and false friends assisted in depleting his exchequer. Step by step he descended the financial ladder, and his continued misfortune soured him to the pessimistic extent that he believed everybody was against him. Reverses drove him out of gambling and the speculating fraternity soon looked upon him as a "has been."

With the small remnant of his fortune he established trout ponds and sought to obtain an honest livelihood. His wife died and his family became scattered. Two or three years ago he disposed of his ponds at a loss and established new ones a short distance north of the town. Adversity continued on his trail. The second investment cost him $11,000 and his last penny. In a few days a mortgage foreclosure will wipe even this out and leave him comparatively penniless, friendless and abandoned at the tottering age of eighty years. The present generation has forgotten old Bob Gridley. He smokes his pipe in his rural chimney corner, and, while a stray tear occasionally trickles down his wrinkled face, he wonders how soon he will be compelled to seek the refuge of the Saratoga county poorhouse.—Saratoga Cor. Chicago Times.

Warnings for Writers.

The Society of Authors in England has issued the following warnings, which are timely:

Never sign any agreement of which the alleged cost of production forms an integral part until you have proved the figures.

Never enter into any correspondence with publishers (especially with those who advertise for manuscripts) who are not recommended by experienced friends.

Never, on any account whatever, bind yourself down for future work to any one.

Never accept any proposal of royalty until you have ascertained exactly what the agreement gives to the author and what to the publisher.

Never accept without advice any pecuniary risk or responsibility whatever.

Never, when a manuscript has been refused by respectable houses, pay others, whatever promises they may put forward, for the production of the work.

Never, without advice, sign a receipt which gives away copyright.

Never forget that publishing is a business like any other business, totally unconnected with philanthropy, charity or pure love of literature. You have to do with business men.

Mr. Matsuo's Big Kite.

Jumatsu Matsuo, a native of Nagasaki, Japan, now residing on Rochelle avenue, Wissahickon, has built an enormous kite, shaped like an owl, which he intends flying from the hillside on Manayunk avenue. The kite is made of split bamboo frames, covered with rice paper, and requires a tail forty yards long to steady the aerial monster. He has two miles of string an eighth of an inch thick to hold the kite. After the kite has reached the height required he will send up on the string several mechanical objects to within a yard of the kite, which will again return to the ground. If the owl proves a success he intends on the Fourth of July to have one made like a ship, without tail or string, using gas balloons attached to each mast, and when at a certain height the ship will leave the balloons and float gracefully in space.—Philadelphia Record.

"Tesla's Glow" in England.

Tesla's experiments with high frequency currents before the Royal institution have laid such hold on the imagination of the English, who, as Tesla says in a recent letter to a friend in New York, "are the most enthusiastic people in the world in scientific matters," that crowds flock daily to the Crystal Palace to see the high pressure demonstrations given at the electrical exhibition. Many people find it hard to believe, without actually seeing it, that a tube carried in the hand, without any wire connection whatever, will fill a room with beautiful light and high pressure discharges with their dazzling and exquisite effects of color and light, and the illumination of wireless vacuum tubes promises to be indispensable at any afternoon party.—Exchange.

Evangelists in Jail.

The Rich brothers, who are known throughout Maine as the crazy evangelists of Piscataquis county, have been landed in Bangor jail. On May 29 they broke up a religious meeting at Sangerville because the exposition of the Gospel on that occasion was not according to their ideas; and a day or two later at a funeral, when the officiating clergyman remarked that the deceased was a good woman and was then in heaven, one of the brothers jumped up and declared that she had gone in an entirely different direction. That was the last straw, and the evangelists will suffer sixty days of martyrdom in a place where more attention is paid to the making of brooms than to theology.—New York Sun.

Floods Help Fishermen.

The recent high water at Marion, O., and vicinity has afforded the fish in the bigger streams a good opportunity to ascend the smaller, and they are found in abundance, and with little effort can be caught with hook or hand. Catfish of all sizes are found almost as numerous as the English sparrow and are caught with ease; also carp weighing five and six pounds are found in the Whetstone river in that county. Along the smaller streams and in ditches basketfuls of various kinds are reported to have been caught.

MORE LABOR RIOTS.

CŒUR D'ALENE MINERS FOLLOW HOMESTEAD WORKMEN.

Battle Between Union and Non-Union Men with Fatal Results—A Number on Both Sides Killed and Injured and a Mill Destroyed.

WALLACE, Ida., July 11.—The strug- between the union miners in Cœur lene and the mine owners, which patched up about two months ago, broken out again in the town of , and resulted in a savage fight be- en union and non-union men at the sco and Gem mines, in which six n were killed, seven wounded, sev- y non-union men taken prisoners and Frisco mill blown up. The fight ted several hours. The governor has dered out the militia. The names of only three of the killed have been learned so far, all being union men. They are Gus Carlson, Harry Cummings and George Pettibone. The other men killed were guards at the mine.

After the mill was blown up the non-union men hung out a flag of truce and hostilities then ceased and the seventy men surrendered. The men are now under guard at the miners' union headquarters at Gem. The union men have resolved to drive every non-union man out of the district. The women and children have been removed to places of safety. Both the Gem and Frisco miners were guarded by men behind barricades armed with Winchesters, and as the canon is narrow where the miners are located the men behind the barricades could sweep the two railroad tracks and country road with their bullets. The Gem mine barricade is within 300 feet of the center of the town of Gem.

How the Trouble Started.

At 5 a. m. a miner from Gem started for Burke and when opposite the Frisco mine was fired upon. He ran back several hundred yards to Gem, where the shot had been heard, and soon the miners in the town gathered with arms. They marched in a body toward the Frisco mill, located directly in front of the mine. When scarcely within rifle range a volley from the Frisco mill greeted the miners and lead whistled all about them. They scattered and a regular battle ensued. One miner and one non-union man were killed and six wounded during the engagement. The miners in the meantime went around the hills up the canon above the mines, loaded a car with 750 pounds of giant powder and sent the car down the track toward the Frisco mine. Directly in front of the mill an explosion occurred, shattering the mill to splinters, making it a complete wreck and causing a loss of $200,000. It is reported that twenty men were killed by the explosion. The non-union men then showed the white flag and surrendered. They were marched down to the Miners' Union hall and guarded, no indignities being offered them after their surrender. While the fight was going on at Frisco the Gem guards suddenly began firing volley after volley into the town, riddling the buildings. John Ward, a citizen, was shot through the arm, and Gus Carlson, a union miner, was shot and fell. At Gem several hundred men were huddled in the streets with rifles and revolvers. At noon the Gem mine forces surrendered to the union men.

History of the Strike.

The Frisco and Gem were the only two union mines in the east end of Cœur d'Alene. The strike in Cœur d'Alene began about nine months ago. The fight was between the Mine Owners' association, organized to resist the Miners' union demand. Twelve mines, including all the leading ones, are included in the former organization and money has been freely contributed to carry on the fight. The former rates of wages were $3.50 per day to miners and shovelers and the strike of the miners grew ont of a reduction in the shovelers' wages to $3 per day. About two months ago matters were straightened out and work went on as usual, but since the Carnegie troubles began the old question of wages has been revived by the men and resulted in today's bloodshed.

THE ST. JOHNS FIRE.

Property to the Amount of $25,000,000 Destroyed.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., July 11.—The fire which started Friday afternoon raged all night and threatened to destroy the whole city. It is known positively that one man and six children have perished, but it is thought when the terrible excitement that now prevails subsides it will be found that the loss of life is much greater. Fully 600 buildings were burned. Many of these were dwelling houses and their occupants have been compelled to seek refuge in the fields. Fifteen thousand people are homeless. Many of these unfortunate people have lost everything they had in the world, and imperative calls will be made upon charity in their behalf. Fire broke out in Monk street, on which are situated the residences of the most wealthy inhabitants of the town. The eet is more than a mile in length, and y building on it was a three-story k. Since the fire in 1846 the author- refused to permit wooden buildings e erected on the street. This street practically destroyed. The follow- streets were wiped out: Military d, Duckworth street, Prescott street, een's road, Cochrane street, Gower reet, King's road, Cathedral hill, Long's ill. The fire stopped on Water street vest. From Cochrane street west of Bowering's, once thickly studded with dwellings, there is now nothing but a forest of chimneys.

Loss Will Aggregate $25,000,000.

It is now estimated that the great fire now raging here has created a loss of property aggregating $25,000,000 and has rendered 10,000 persons homeless.

CONFIDENT OF VICTORY.

Gladstone Already Discussing Legislation Plans of the New Parliament.

LONDON, July 11.—The few Conservative papers published on Sunday take a lugubrious view of the results of the elections thus far. They express no confidence of a Tory majority, but attempt to console themselves by the reflections that the Liberal majority will be small, and composed of discordant and unruly elements. The impression is sought to be conveyed that after a brief and stormy season of control the Liberals will fail to carry their pet measure of home rule in the form insisted upon by Mr. Gladstone, and that a fresh appeal to the country will be taken. By that time, the Tories hope, the hearts of the masses will be so filled with disgust at the subordination of the English issues to the demands of Ireland that the Conservatives will be restored to power by an overwhelming majority. It is learned that Mr. Gladstone is in frequent communication by wire with the leaders of his party, and is already discussing plans for legislation in the new parliament.

CYRUS W. FIELD.

The Long Anticipated Death of the Distinguished American Occurs.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A telephone message from Dobbs Ferry states that Cyrus W. Field died at 9:30 a. m.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The speaker laid before the house the senate silver free coinage bill, and stated that under the rules it would be referred to the committee on coinage, weights and measures. Mr. Tracy, of New York, wanted it referred to the committee on banking and currency. Several calls of the house were successively ordered, but no quorum voted and the house adjourned.

In the senate Mr. Berry, of Arkansas, spoke on Mr. Hale's resolutions ascribing national prosperity to the protective tariff. A discussion over the conference report on the subject of an appropriation for entertaining G. A. R. veterans at the next encampment showed a majority in its favor and the clause, and another conference was ordered.

Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The last great appropriation bill not yet sent to the conference—the sundry civil bill—was reported in the senate. Mr. Aldrich, on behalf of the Republican majority, introduced a resolution to adjourn July 20, but plainly intimated an apprehension that the session would be protracted considerably beyond that time. Among the bills passed by the senate during the day was one increasing the pension rolls for loss of limbs $700 000 per anum and appropriating $20,000 for an investigation of the slums of big cities by the commissioner of labor. The senate also passed a house bill to punish the carrying of concealed weapons in the District of Columbia.

The house agreed to the conference report on the river and harbor bill and then filibustered for four hours over the reference of the silver bill. The conference report on the diplomatic appropriation bill was then taken up and considered until adjournment.

Thursday.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—The senate debated the reference of the resolution to investigate the Homestead labor troubles, several political speeches resulting. The matter was finally referred to the contingent expenses committee. The Hatch anti-option bill was reported without recommendation.

In the house a truce was made on the silver bill, and Mr. Bland's motion to refer to the committee on coinage, weights and measures, was carried without opposition. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was disagreed to, 104 to 140. Mr. Williams' resolution to investigate the Homestead labor troubles was adopted.

Friday.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The fillibustering of the Republicans against suspension day was not very vigorous and was not pushed. The tin plate bill, the lead ore bill and the bill to limit the amount of wearing apparel which travelers may bring into this country free of duty were passed under suspension. A bill was passed amending the land forfeiture bill of 1890. A local government bill for Utah was also passed.

At the instance of Mr. Hill, of New York, the senate passed a bill changing the date of the dedication of the World's Columbian exposition buildings at Chicago from Oct. 12 to Oct. 21, 1892, so as not to interfere with the Columbian celebration authorized by the legislature of New York for the former date. The balance of the day was devoted to the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, without making any great progress.

Saturday.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The senate disposed of the sundry civil bill down to the last clauses, which contained the provisions to aid the World's Columbian exposition. A very animated discussion on a Sunday closing amendment, and upon the proposed issue of the souvenir half dollars, was in full progress when the senate adjourned. Mr. Sherman opposed the scheme, and Mr. Morgan charged that he did so because he feared that it would tend to popularize silver.

The house devoted the day to the consideration of conference reports, those on the postoffice and invalid pension appropriation and the Arizona funding bills, being agreed to. The reports on the naval and the legislative appropriation bills were disagreed to and new conferences were ordered. The committee on rules decided to report a resolution setting aside next Wednesday and Thursday for the consideration of the silver bill. At 3:15 p. m. the house adjourned until Monday.

Monday.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The attendance in the house was larger than usual, and until the silver bill is disposed of the members will probably take a renewed interest in the proceedings. The following measures were passed: For the construction of a bridge across the Missouri at or near Omaha, appropriating $250,000 for the publication of the Eleventh census. Mr. Herbert, Mr. Lawson and Mr. Dolliver were appointed conferees in the naval appropriation bill. The conference report on the military academy appropriation bill was agreed to.

Senator Washburn occupied two hours and a half of the senate's time in a speech in favor of the Hatch anti-option bill. At the close of Mr. Washburn's speech the sundry civil bill was again taken up. The pending question was Mr. Quay's amendment to close the World's fair on Sunday. Without reaching a vote the senate at 5:45 adjourned for the day.

The Grand Forks Daily News indulged in a red-hot roast of the city of Crookston at the alleged neglect of Grand Forks citizens encampment week. Hundreds of Grand Forks citizens speak in terms of the highest praise of the way they were used, and only Bierly kicks—but Bierly must kick at something or he would strangle—even his own party don't know enough to do things right, according to his ideas.

The teachers' training school commenced a four weeks' session at the high school building on Monday morning with an attendance of 70 teachers from Polk county, and 8 or 10 from Norman, Marshall and Kittson counties. Prof. Rocheleau, of Moorhead, O. T. Denney, of St. Paul, and Miss Emily Harris, of Faribault, are the instructors. The JOURNAL is pleased to see so large an attendance from Polk county.

Crookston Daily Times:—William A. Hammond, Junior of the JOURNAL printing house, is not to be seen at his desk these days, but is confined to his room at the Commercial hotel, with his face covered with bandages and one eye shut—the result of—no, not a scrap in which he figured as fighting editor—but on the contrary he got twisted up in some poison ivy in the woods on Sunday last, and now regrets the walk he took.

"Uncle's Darling," presented by the Hettie Bernard Chase Company at the Grand on Tuesday evening, was highly enjoyed by a fairly large audience. The play is a sea-faring tale, very unique in its way, abounding in novel, comical and striking situations, without a chestnut lying about to be sprung at an unexpected moment. The orchestra was exceptionally good, and there was not a minute during the entertainment that was not thoroughly enjoyable.

The Thief River Falls Press paid our esteemed townsman E. M. Stanton the following compliment on his Fourth of July oration at that place: "Hon. E. M. Stanton of Crookston delivered the oration of the day and was listened to with attention which marked it as a masterpiece of literary production. No bombast nor senseless poetry, but a constant flow of pleasing language fraught with a brilliancy of thought and literary training. Mr. Stanton's address was supplemented with some well chosen remarks by Ira C. Richardson of this city, who like his predecessor gave his hearers food for thought and and stirred the soul to a spirit of love and patriotism."

Last Friday a stranger named Pete Barry was brought before Justice Spendley, charged with stealing a $5.00 bill on July 4th from Louis Rivard, who keeps a saloon on the corner of Second street and Broadway. He admitted the theft, but said that he was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing. The state asked for a jury trial, which was granted, and after listening to the evidence and deliberating for a short time brought in a verdict of guilty, and defendant was sentenced to pay a fine which, including costs, amounted to $28.50.

After the encampment last week Peter Hoffman went down to Pembina, N. D., to see his brother whom he says he has not met before in over 25 years. On his return to this city he was presented by the members of his little drum corps with a picture of the corps and an elegant pipe, and by Asa Thomas with a G. A. R. hat. The old veteran was visibly affected by these testimonials of esteem and expressed his thanks in a few brief words. He urges the corps to preserve their organization and to continue their practice and promised to return later and give them further instructions.

On Monday morning 65 of the men employed at the Walker saw-mill went out on a strike for an increase of 25 cents a day. They came over to the brewery in a body, then paraded the street to the site of Barrette & Dufresne's new block, where they attempted to incite the laborers on the excavation to go on a strike with them. The chief of police was summoned, who took one of their number in, and the balance congregated in the street on Broadway in front of the Methodist church and argued the matter a while, finally returning to the mill. The mill kept running right along just the same.

Comrade Aleck Burnam had quite an experience one day last week. While driving out to his home he was accosted by a stranger who asked him for a ride. Later on the stranger pulled a revolver and asked comrade Burnam to contribute to a relief fund for the stranger's benefit. Burnam did not like the idea, so he grabbed a wrench and hit the fellow such a blow that he tumbled from the buggy and Burnam drove on home. The fellow evidently mistook his man when he tackled an old vet, a man who has looked into the mouths of cannon on the battlefield, but he found out his mistake.

The JOURNAL force is somewhat demoralized this week. Our Mr. Hammond took a stroll in the park on Sunday with Doc. Just, and rolled about in the poison ivy until he had thoroughly inoculated his system and got a countenance on him fearful and wonderful to behold; our job man went off to Maple Lake to enjoy a brief outing and a felon on his left hand; slug 2, on the cases, went to see his best girl on Monday—and he never came back; our little devil, Louis, was taken with cholera infantum or printer's colic, or somedings like dot, and the old man himself returned from St. Paul on Sunday morning in a fit of the dumps, and has been sort o' lost all this week—so taken as a whole the events of the past week have had a tendency to paralyze the whole institution to an uncomfortable degree, but we are glad to report progress and the prospect that the whole force will be restored to its normal condition within a day or so.

THE WORD "GOSSOON."

Carroll Johnson Explains the Meaning of the Title of His Irish Play.

Carroll Johnson, the Irish singing comedian, who appears here soon in E. E. Kidder's beautiful comedy-drama and scenic masterpiece, "The Gossoon," while playing the role of Clancy O'Connell, a young Kerry Squire, gives the definition of the title of the play.

"Sure, a gossoon is a boy widout much of a head on his shoulders."

A correspondent called on Mr. Johnson in his dressing room a few nights ago, and was cordially received by the charming comedian.

"The meaning o' the word 'gossoon,' is it?" said Mr. Johnson with a delicious touch of the brogue. "well, it's an Irish word, and means a simple, true-heart sort of a being between a boy and a man. A youth, as it were.

"I think," continued the comedian, "that it is the French garcon with a pair of Irish corduroy breeches on him."

Mr. Johnson showed his knowledge of Irish history by telling the correspondent that when Napoleon I. was in power, influenced by the Irish patriot, Wolf Tone, he sent a French expedition to Ireland under the command of General Hoche. The natural supposition is that the Irish peasantry took from these Frenchmen their word garcon—a boy—and corrupted it into "gossoon."

Carroll Johnson is a magnetic young Irishman with laughing eyes, pearly teeth and black hair. He is one of the most unctuous of story tellers, and is always welcomed in social circles because he never fails to have a twinkle in his eye, a wrinkle at the corners of his mouth and a bon mot at the tip of his tongue. He certainly is one of the handsomest and most popular comedians on the stage.

TOWN TALK.

Will Peterson: No, I am not going to be married pretty quick, but am just hunting a room for me an' Henry while the folks are at the lake.

Felix Fournet: I expect the brickwork on the new block will be about completed this week. I shall use the second and third stories for flats.

Geo. J. McManus: Well, my boy, come up and see me in my new office in the Reckitt block and I will show you a good line of business in life insurance.

A lady: I wonder if these saloon keepers who have the scrubbing of their saloon floors scraped out over the sidewalks, couldn't just as well mop their slops out the back doors.

J. H. Thomas: You may inform JOURNAL readers that I am now prepared to do all work in the line of dentistry with neatness and dispatch, and can extract teeth without pain and without the use of anesthetics.

Adolph Bydal: "I should ever so much like to support Hon. Knute Nelson for governor next fall and I believe that if the People's party nominate Donnelly, Nelson will be elected all right enough—and the People's party will nominate Donnelly without a shadow of doubt.

MINNESOTA HAIL ASSOCIATION

Reckitt Block, Crookston, Minn.

Attraction for the Grand.

A. Y. Pearson's two greatest melo-dramatic successes, "Midnight Alarm" and "Police Patrol" have lately been secured by Mr. L. J. Columbus for early production at the Grand.

These are two of the greatest melodramas on the road and abound in exciting incidents, amusing situations and magnificent scenic effect.

The great railroad scene in the "Midnight Alarm," where the night express is seen about to dash through an open draw-bridge and is saved by the heroic actions of two noble women is said to far surpass anything of the kind ever witnessed.

Another feature of the play is the introduction of a real steam fire engine drawn by two magnificent horses which at one time belonged to the New York city fire service. They are first seen in the stable, the alarm of fire is given, the horses dash to their places, the harness is thrown on in an instant, and at the signal they dash off at full speed to the fire and thus they represent on the stage what they have done many times in reality.

Still another feature is the "living clock" which has its place and helps to unravel the plot of the play.

The "Patrol" equals in every respect the "Midnight Alarm." It deals with the police service of New York and shows all the workings of that organization. It is what may be termed a melo-drama, while in reality it is a simple but connected story of police life, illustrating, with delightful scenic pictures, the various localities of a great city. Its mounting is of the most liberal kind, the artist's brush having been freely used. Then the introduction of a magnificent team of horses and patrol wagon add to the realism. The characters are all well drawn and natural. They are those we meet every day, and their varied experiences form a play which reads like an interesting novel, gladly taken up but reluctantly laid aside.

It embodies both the elements of comedy and pathos. The company engaged in the illustration of "The Patrol" embraces names that have for years been recognized factors in the theatrical world. And so the world moves on, and these things take us from ourselves and transport us to other realms that are most pleasing.

Mr. Columbus is to be congratulated in securing two such splendid attractions as are soon to appear at his theatre.

August George, county auditor of Norman county for many years past, came up on Wednesday morning for a chat with old-time friends. As soon as Will Arnold spied him he procured a hack and inveigled city attorney Martin O'Brien and our senior editor and took August for a drive around our city, visiting the race-course among other interesting points. This is Mr. George's first visit to our city in some time, and he noticed many great improvements. Says we have the finest race-course in the Northwest.

THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

A Goodly Number of Teachers in Attendance at the Teachers' Training School.

Most of Them are from Polk County—Very Few From Norman and Marshall.

A List of Those Present and a Review of the Work Done Thus Far.

The Training School.

Although there are not as many teachers in attendance at the training school as was expected, a very successful school is being conducted. The attendance from Norman and Marshall counties is very light, but it is thought that as many of the schools close this week, there will be an increase in the attendance at the school next week. Three rooms in the school building are being used by the teachers. One room is in charge of Prof. W. F. Rocheleau, of Moorhead, Miss Emily Harris, of Faribault, has another, and O. T. Dennie, of St. Paul, is in charge of the third. The following teachers have been registered thus far with County Superintendent Carruth:

The class in physiology, under the direction of Prof. Rocheleau, has studied the human skeleton, the muscular system, foods and the digestive organs. In civil government an analysis of the constitution of the United States through the power of congress has been made. The work in pedagogy has been confined to the study of Page's theory and practice of working. The subject of qualification of the teacher, personal habits, responsibility and right views of education have been considered. On Monday Mr. Rocheleau supplemented the work with a lecture on "Attention."

In Mr. Dennie's department the classes in Geography have thus far given most of the time to Mathematical Geography. The classes have considered the relation of the earth to the solar system. They have studied its form, size, motions, the cause of day and night and the change of seasons, with the resulting zones and their boundaries. The class in elementary Arithmetic has discussed the fundamental principles and processes, and considered the best means of teaching these to beginners, as well as more advanced pupils. In Reading the drill so far has been principally on expression, particular attention being given to inflection and emphasis.

A brief summary of the work done in Miss Harris' department is as follows:

Advanced grammar: 1. Brief outline of the history of the English language. 2. Brief study of orthography, including letters, their use and main classifications. 3. A study of the sentence leading up to analysis.

History: A summation of the conditions existing at the close of the war, events leading to the formation of the constitution, the constitution, the administrations of Washington and Adams.

Elementary grammar: A study of the sentence; analysis began.

Advanced arithmetic: The operations in fractions; addition and subtraction of fractions.

Algebra: Factoring; highest common factor; lowest common multiple; fractions begun.

Crookston is Growing.

The most pleasing feature of the improvements made in Crookston this summer is their permanency. While we have had seasons when more business blocks have been built, this season all such structures are of solid brick—built to stay. Had the season given promise of the usual yield, there would have been at least as many more brick blocks erected, and should the crop prove one of average yield, next year will see more building in Crookston than ever before. There has been a notable activity in residence buildings, and these, too, have been of a permanent and ornamental nature, and yet with all the new buildings erected the supply is not adequate to the demand. Had twice the number of residences been built they could readily have found occupants.

How John Made the Rifle.

Bill Marin tells one on John Kyle which he calls on Geo. M. Swift to verify. Bill says that John was sort o' standing about the gate cogitating about whether to go in or not when the gate keeper catching his eye said: "Do you want to go in, John?" "Well, I don't know if I do or not," said John. "See that individual peeking through the slats down there?" said the gate keeper. "Yes," said John. "Well, if you will go down and ask that individual to mount that horse and ride in I will let you in scott free." No sooner said than done and John marched in amid the plaudits of the bystanders, but Bill Marin can tell the story and get more fun out of it. Ask him or Swift.

A Card of Thanks.

I wish, in behalf of myself and family, to return my sincere thanks to the Crookston firemen and the many citizens who so willingly lent their services at the fire which partially destroyed my house Friday, and also regret and sympathize with Mr. Geo. Vine in the accident that befell him while assisting in saving furniture from the burning building.

W. B. Dawley.

Maple Bay.

Mrs. Lucy Farrel, wife of Mr. John Farrel, died at their residence on July 15, of la grippe. Mrs. Farrel was 63 years of age and had a husband and many children and grandchildren to mourn her loss. She was much beloved by all who knew her. A large procession followed her to the grave. The reverend Mr. A. G. Washington preached a very affecting sermon. Mr. Farrel has the heartfelt sympathy of all for the loss of one so dearly beloved.

Mr. and Mrs. Farrel have been residents of Polk county for ten years. The remains were interred in Maple Bay cemetery.

La grippe is doing some severe work in this neighborhood. It has carried off one of Grove Park's oldest pioneers in the person of Mr. Robert Finnessy. He helped to build the first house in Grove Park. He was a highly respected citizen and had many friends, but no relatives to take care of him, but was well cared for by Mr. and Mrs. John Buhn, of Mentor. He passed away on the 13th of July, after an illness of a few weeks and was interred in Maple Bay cemetery. The funeral service was held at the residence of Mr. Buhn, where a goodly number of friends were assembled.

WARRANTS ARE OUT

CHARGES AGAINST STRIKERS MADE BY SECRETARY LOVEJOY.

Hugh O'Donnell and a Number of Other Leaders Charged With Murder—Burgess McLuckie, One of the Accused Men, Placed Behind the Bars.

PITTSBURG, July 18.—John McLuckie, burgess or chief municipal officer of Homestead, is a prisoner in one of the cells of the county jail. Telegrams are being sent to a dozen points between here and New York seeking the aid of the police authorities for the arrest of Hugh O'Donnell, the leader of the strikers, and warrants are in the hands of officers of the law for seven other prominent participants in the troubles at Homestead and who are but the vanguard of a small army of strikers that it is proposed to bring before the bar of the law. The intention of the Carnegie company to institute criminal proceedings against the Homestead leaders in the event of the county authorities failing to take cognizance of the recent riot, was carried into effect much quicker than had been anticipated. The preliminary stages of the proceedings were conducted with considerable secrecy. It was shortly before noon when Secretary Lovejoy, of the Carnegie company, sauntered leisurely into the office of Alderman McMasters, at Diamond and Grant streets. He was unaccompanied and by a curious coincidence nobody but the alderman was in the office at the time, the constables attached to the place being behind the closed doors of the anteroom. Mr. Lovejoy stated that he desired to lay informations against certain men, and the alderman proceeded to draw up the papers. The information set forth that on the 6th of July the men did feloniously and riotously with force of arms and with deadly weapons, murder T. J. Connors, a Pinkerton watchman, and Silas Wayne, a worker in the mills. Secretary Lovejoy named as the men accused, Hugh O'Donnell, John McLuckie, Sylvester Critchlow, Anthony Flaherty, Samuel Burkett, James Flannigan and Hugh Ross. When the papers had been completed Secretary Lovejoy listened to the reading of the oath, kissed the Bible, appended his signature to the information, buttoned his sack coat, shook hands with the justice and sauntered out of the office as leisurely and to all outward appearance as free from care and anxiety as he had entered a half hour before. No time was lost by Justice McMasters in making out the warrants and shortly before 2 o'clock they were entrusted to Constables Joseph Neber, J. Morriss and Mike J. Price who at once left for Homestead.

Charging the Crime of Murder

Looking for the Men.

On their arrival they made known their business to General Snowdon, who referred them to Colonel Green, in command of the provost guard. The latter detailed two companies of soldiers to accompany the constables and the latter visited the houses of all the men wanted but without result. Not one of them was at home and most of the residences were locked in darkness. When the officers returned to this city toward dusk they were surprised to find that Burgess McLuckie had gotten out of town while they were searching for him and had already surrendered himself to the alderman. He was in the office in company with Attorney Brennan, of the Amalgamated association, and friends. The warrant was formally served upon him and to the magistrate he said that he had already sent word to the other men who were wanted to come into town in the morning and surrender. To those around him he said that O'Donnell and he were not leaders but among the strikers and as for himself he did not know if he was any longer a member of the association.

After Carnegie, Frick and Potter.

"I might as well come out with it," he said, "and say that information will be laid against Frick, Carnegie and Potter. Whether we will bring any one else into it I cannot say at present. I tell you we will make this man Frick come down on his knees so hard that the sound will be heard in the farthest corner of civilization."

"Yes," put in one of those present, "and once the warrants are issued we will have Carnegie extradited in short order."

Alderman McMasters waited in his office until 8 o'clock and then none of the men putting in an appearance, he committed the burgess to the county jail without bail pending a preliminary examination on Friday. In custody of Constable Price and accompanied by Jere Dougherty, an official of the Amalgamated association and several mill men he walked to the county jail. On the outside he shook hands with his friends and then passed through the iron gate. After being searched by Chief Warden McAlees, who found in his pockets nothing more dangerous than the key to the Homestead lock up, he was taken to a cell on the first tier and locked up. Half an hour later he was fast asleep. Application for McLuckie's release on bail will be made in the morning.

Another Victim of the Riot.

PITTSBURG, July 18.—George W. Rutter, 46 years old, who was one of the Homestead strikers shot during the riot, died at the homeopathic hospital Sunday from his wounds.

Another Pinkerton Dead.

PITTSBURG, July 18.—Edward Spear, a resident of Chicago, one of the Pinkerton detectives, died about midnight. He had been shot in the right leg during the battle on the barges at Homestead on Wednesday, the 6th inst.

STILL LOOKS SERIOUS.

Condition of Affairs in the Cœur d'Alene Mining District Very Alarming.

WALLACE, Ida., July 18.—The condition of affairs in the Cœur d'Alene district is alarming. There is a conviction that there is on foot a scheme of an aggressive character on the part of the miners' union, though as to what this move may be opinion is divided. Large numbers of miners' union men are coming into the Cœur d'Alene region from Montana, by way of Thompson Falls. At Gem Captain Bubb, who has entire charge of the gulch, including Burke and Gem, says that from 200 to 300 men were on the hills near Gem. Scouts reported seeing many here and there and occasionally some would show themselves at points round about. It was feared that an attack was contemplated and the indications were that a move was likely on their part to just below the town of Gem. Reinforcements were ordered to Gem from Wallace and they were sent up on a special train. Guards at the Granite mill were doubled and the sentry force also. Pickets were sent still further up on the hills and all points were carefully watched. A full force of men were put at work clearing the Frisco mill of debris and restoring it to working condition as fast as possible. It is probable that many of the union men now under arrest will be turned out on parole. With all the prisoners taken by the authorities, not over five guns of the entire number used in the attack at Frisco, Gem and Wardner have been secured. They have been either hid somewhere or put into the hands of others.

The strikers in the mountains have sent down word that they intend to carry on a guerilla warfare. This warfare would be terrible, as the troops are drawn up on the strikers' side of the mountain. This move has been expected for some time. Prompt action on the part of the troops in cutting off the supplies of the strikers, thus forcing them to come down out of the mountains, will be certain fight.

Strikers Blow Up Bridges.

WALLACE, Ida., July 15.—Two railroad bridges near Mullen were blown up during the night and with them several telegraph poles. The strikers also cut down a number of poles, thus shutting off communication by that route for a time. The Gem and Granite mines are all right. The rumor that the Granite mine had been blown up probably started from the report of the explosion when the bridges were destroyed.

THE PEORIA DISASTER.

Fourteen Persons Drowned by the Sinking of the Frankie Folsom.

PEORIA, Ills., July 14.—The horrors of the disaster on the Illinois river by the sinking of the Frankie Folsom increase as the facts become known. Added to the sorrow over the loss is a fever of indignation over the alleged action of the captain of the steamer Longfellow, who, although only a short distance from the Folsom when it began to sink, is positively declared to have declined to go to the ill-fated steamer's assistance. So far as known the list of passengers who were lost is as follows:

JOHN AHRENDS, Pekin.
MRS. KATE BEEBE, Duluth, Minn.
MRS. HENRY DUISDIEKER, Pekin.
MRS. FRED FISHER, Pekin.
MISS CORA FISHER, Pekin.
MISS MARY FLATH, Pekin.
MISS HEPLER, Pekin.
GRANT HEPLER, Eureka, Ills.
REV. J. H. MCMIEN, Pekin.
MISS RENKOLE, Pekin.
MISS LOTTIE SHADE, Shelbyville, Ills.
MRS. W. G. WILES, Pekin.
Unknown man and woman, Pekin.

It is feared that others not yet rescued may have embarked on the boat. The captain says not, but the accident happened so shortly after starting that he would hardly know.

The father of Willie Wynn, a resident of this city, was haunting the morgue during the day. His son hired a boat and with three or four companions went out on the river to be gone a couple of hours. Neither the boat nor its occupants have been heard from since. The body of Mrs. Beebe is still in the wreck. She is the wife of a telegraph operator at Duluth and was on a visit to her parents.

A DEVASTATED ISLE.

Twelve Thousand People Reported Killed by a Volcanic Eruption.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., July 17.—Rumors have reached here from Timer that there has been a volcanic eruption on the island of Sanger, one of the Phillippine group, and that most of the inhabitants have been killed. A native from the Talantz islands, who was at San Angelim four weeks ago, brought a remarkable story about several other natives who had just returned from a voyage. They had intended to land on the island, but were prevented by the sight of mountains belching forth smoke and fire. They reported that the whole island was on fire. The whole population, estimated at about 12,000, seemed to have been swept into the sea or burned, as not a living soul was to be seen. Streams of lava were still flowing toward the shore, showing that the activity of the volcano had not abated. The steamship Catterburn brought a similar story into port with her. Near Sanger, her captain says, she passed through miles of debris dissimilar from anything he had before seen at sea—posts and sides of huts, mingled with such utensils as the natives of the Phillippines use in cooking. Many unrecognizable objects, resembling charred human trunks, were also seen. Articles of head dress in the wreckage were identified by a sailor who had lived in the Phillippines as belonging to the natives. The ship was passing through the wreckage from 10 a. m. to 10:30 p. m.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—In the senate a general silver discussion sprang up over a document submitted by Mr. Palmer, of Illinois, giving the replies of the director of the mint to his questions in regard to silver coinage. Mr. Morgan thought the document one sided and he and Mr. Sherman had a debate on the subject. Mr. Allison finally called up the sundry civil bill.

In the house the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, including the $90,000 appropriation for the G. A. R. encampment, was agreed to. The joint resolution for the election of senators by direct vote of the people was then taken up and discussed.

Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, July 13.—The senate spent the day in the consideration of the world's fair clause of the sundry civil bill. As agreed to finally in committee the clause appropriates $5,000,000 in souvenir half dollars provided there has been or shall be made by the proper authorities for the closing of the fair on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, and further guarantee any further sum necessary to complete the exposition will be provided by the corporation. The sum of $100,000 is appropriated to meet the expense of recoinage; the sale of intoxicating liquors on the exposition grounds shall be prohibited, except for medicinal, mechanical and scientific purposes. An additional sum of $500,000 is appropriated for medals and awards.

The entire day in the house, after the morning hour was taken up in discussing the resolution of the committee on rules to make the senate free coinage bill a special order for today and tomorrow. When a vote was taken the resolution was defeated by a vote of 136 to 154. The usual motions to reconsider, table, etc., were all made and voted down. This places the bill at the foot of the calendar and disposes of it for the present session.

Thursday.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The senate devoted most of the session to the sundry civil appropriation bill and passed it before adjournment. The vote of Wednesday in committee of the whole on Mr. Peffer's amendment to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within the grounds of the Columbian exposition in Chicago was reversed in the senate, the vote upon its adoption being yeas, 21; nays, 29. Mr. Vest's substitute for Mr. Quay's Sunday closing amendment was laid on the table —34 to 17. The fortifications bill was then taken up and made the unfinished business.

In the house a motion by Mr. McKaig, of Maryland, to print 10,000 copies of the force bill led to a number of political speeches. The motion was carried. The house went into committee of the whole on the lighthouse bill.

Friday.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—In the senate the house amendments to the naval appropriation bill were concurred in and the bill was passed. The conference report on the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was passed. The conference report on the army appropriation bill was adopted and the bill passed. The bill contains a proviso in regard to the payments to the Union and Central Pacific roads, "that this provision shall not withhold payment from leased lines operated, but not owned by these companies." The senate adopted a resolution calling for a list of all persons employed by the geological survey.

The house passed a resolution extending the temporary appropriations of the government until July 30. Mr. Holman reported the sundry civil bill and moved to non-concur in all the senate amendments to the bill except those relating to the world's fair, which should be considered in committee of the whole. Objection was raised, and the house went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Saturday.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The house considered the world's fair amendment to the sundry civil bill. Several speeches were made, but no vote reached.

The senate considered the general deficiency bill without action.

Monday.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The senate went into committee of the whole on the general deficiency appropriation bill after an ineffectual attempt to transact some minor business. After agreeing to several amendments the bill was passed. On motion of Mr. Washburn, of Minnesota, the anti-option bill was taken up and thus becomes the unfinished business of the senate. At five minutes to 5 the senate went into executive session and almost immediately adjourned, leaving the bill as unfinished business.

This was suspension day in the house, but no great party measure was brought forward. The McGarrahan bill, which has been pending for the last quarter of a century, was at last passed by the house as it came from the senate and so goes to the president for his signature. The bill refers the claim to the court of private land claims.

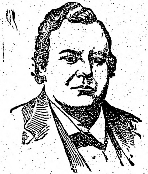
A STATE TICKET.

THE MINNESOTA PEOPLE'S PARTY CONVENTION AT ST. PAUL

Nominates Ignatius Donnelly for Governor by Acclamation—Balance of the Ticket—The Platform Adopted—Halverson and Buck Refuse to Run.

ST. PAUL, July 14.—Ignatius Donnelly is exultant. The first state convention of the People's party, which was held in Market hall, this city, has nominated him for governor. The convention from the beginning was entirely under his control.

Before 10 a. m. Market hall was well filled with delegates to the convention. It was a very lively gathering, and as the delegations, escorted by the sergeant-at-arms, were assigned to their respective positions on the floor, inspiring music from a band sent the enthusiasm a degree higher than the temperature.



IGNATIUS DONNELLY.

Hon. Thomas J. Meighen, chairman of the central committe, called the convention to order. Mr. Meighen is not a speechmaker. He evidently knows it and did not inflict the convention with any oratory. After a song by the Alliance trio Mr. Meighen announced that A. D. Stewart had been selected for temporary chairman; P. M. Ringdal, of Crookston, temporary secretary; C. Seeburger, of St. Cloud, and Robert Eckford, of St. Paul, assistant secretaries; C. H. Johnson, of Pipestone, reading clerk; A. C. Welch, of McLeod, sergeant-at-arms; J. H. Lackey, of Todd, and S. P. Rasmussen, of St. Paul, assistant sergeants-at arms; Louis Hanson, transportation secretary.

The committee on permanent organization and rules and order was announced as follows:

P. H. Rahilly, Wabasha, chairman; W. Holly, Pope; G. Fleish, Rice; A. S. dwards, Hennepin; T. L. Gilbert, Redwood; I. J. Moore, Yellow Medicine; Tom ucus, Hennepin; M. Towe, Brown; P. engal, Polk.

In response to repeated calls Robert Schilling, of Milwaukee, secretary of the National People's party, addressed the convention.

While the committees on resolutions and credentials were being made up there were loud cries for Donnelly and the sage made a characteristic fifteen minutes speech, after which the convention recessed till 2 p. m.

Afternoon Session.

At the afternoon session Mr. Rahilly moved that a committee be appointed to confer with the Alliance and see what they want. Mr. Welch said the motion would be voted down. A score of suggestions were made more or less hostile to the waiting delegation, Mr. Paige, of Olmstead, being the only one to speak in the interest of harmony. He read a letter from Mr. Erwin stating the objects of the Alliance men in seeking to be heard, and moved that the petitioners be admitted.

A committee was appointed to escort the Alliance men into the hall and Mr. Erwin mounted the platform as spokesman of the delegation. He explained the position of the Alliance and asked the People's party to join them on a state ticket. During the conclusion of Mr. Erwin's speech the uproar in the hall was such that it was impossible to hear the speaker. When Mr. Erwin finished Doc Fish jumped up and made a violent attack on the Alliance party. This practically ended the hearing, and the Alliance men quietly stole out of the hall. The convention then adjourned until 7 p. m.

Platform and Resolutions.

ST. PAUL, July 14.—When the People's party convention was called to order in the evening the chair called for the report of the committee on resolutions. Chairman Doc Fish responded and made a few preliminary remarks, saying a year ago the committee had 124 resolutions, and as this was altogether too much, this committee had started a reform, dividing the thing into the platform and three separate resolutions, making all brief. The resolutions were then read as follows:

Resolved, That the People's Party of Minnesota affirms and emphasizes the principles and demands of our national platform, and declares its faith in the ability and integrity of our candidates for president and vice president. We pledge to the citizens of Minnesota the fidelity of the nominees of this convention to the principles of reform, embracing an immediate and radical change in the state control of corporations and transportation facilities, with direct reference to the grain traffic and state taxation.

Resolved, That the constitution should be so amended that the people shall have the right to have all laws referred back to themselves for approval or disapproval.

Whereas, It appears from sworn testimony that gigantic frauds are perpetrated upon the grain growers of Minnesota under our present system of grain inspecting and warehousing, therefore,

Resolved, That we demand that the transportation companies shall provide suitable shipping and warehousing facilities at every station on their lines, also that the state shall erect terminal elevators at Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth for public storage of grain.

Resolved, That we extend our sympathies to the oppressed workmen at Homestead and all over the United States in their fight against the oppressions of monopolistic employers, and we urge them to join with us in an attempt to overthrow at the polls our common enemy, the monopolistic millionaires who are now through their control of the government and the industries of the country, rapidly and surely reducing the people to a condition of political and industrial slavery.

Whereas, We believe there is corruption caused by the forming of political rings by office holders; therefore, be it

Resolved, That no man holding a salaried office shall have a right to become a delegate to a convention or serve as a committeeman.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the this convention that the board of managers of the twine plant at Stillwater and the governor be requested to sell the present year's product of twine at 9 cents per pound.

A Minority Report.

After the reading of the platform and resolutions, Roe, of Washington appeared with a minority report.

"The first of these two planks," he said, "is this:"

We believe the saloon an element of monopoly and that the People's party should use all endeavor for the destruction of this evil of society.

He said it should not be passed over for it was filling our prisons and beggaring our homes. The other plank was:

We believe all the people, without regard to sex, should have equal voice in making the laws on which depend the happiness and prosperity of our homes.

After considerable talking the minority report was tabled. But Mr. Donnelly came forward and said he feared evil results would follow this vote. "You have left this prohibition plank out of the platform, and people will say we have taken a back track." He then offered this resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we believe it should be the duty of the legislature to submit to the vote of the people any amendments to the constitution that are demanded by a reasonable number of the voters of the state.

DONELLY NOMINATED.

The Sage Gets First Place on the Ticket Without a Struggle.

A delegate then moved that the convention proceed to the nomination of candidates. Frank Carpenter, of Dakota county, at once took the platform and presented Ignatius Donnelly for governor. A dozen counties seconded the nomination amid great enthusiasm and Mr. Rahilly moved the nomination of Mr. Donnelly be made unanimons. This went through by a rising vote and the candidate was escorted to the platform and made a short speech.

The hat was passed for supscription, and a little over $2,000 was raised as a campain fund.

Then the call of districts for presidential electors and state committeemen was begun, and resulted as follows:

First District—Elector, W. H. Norton; committee, T. G. Meighan, H. G. Nelson, James Munroe.

Second District—Elector, F. M. Currier; committee, J. J. Mooney, A. D. Ferris, John McGuire.

Third District—Elector, C.P. Carpenter, committee, Gilbert Fish, C. S. Perkins, P. S. Sheppard.

Fourth District—Elector, Dr. E. Fish, committee, S. Rasmusson, A. Richmond, O. A. Lindberg.

Fifth District—Elector, Dr. E. F. Clark, committee, John Grunberg, E. F. Clark, C. T. Greve.

Sixth District—Elector, C. F. Bohall, Todd county; committee, C. F. Bohall, James F. Plant, M. Wissenberg.

Seventh District—Elector, to be filled; committee, Louis Hanson, E. E. Lommen, Joseph Cantleberry.

This list does away with the idea that there is any intention of the People's party of Minnesota to fuse on the presidential electors with the Democrats, as without exception the electors named are believed to be strong People's party men.

At 11 o'clock the convention adjourned till 9 o'clock a. m. to nominate the rest of the state ticket.

COMPLETED THE TICKET.

Kittel Halverson for Lieutenant Governor.

ST. PAUL, July 15.—The People's party convention was again in working order at 9 a. m., but before nominations were continued several speeches were made. When they got down to business Kittel Halvorsen was nominated for lieutenant governor, and H. B. Martin, of Hennepin, for secretary of state. P. M. Ringdal, of Polk county, was named for treasurer. For attorney general John L. McDonald, of St. Paul, was put up. Daniel Buck, of Mankato; Thomas Canty, of Minneapolis, and W. F. Davidson, of Rock county, were named for supreme court judges. Both Mr. Halverson and Mr. Buck have positively declined to accept the nominations.

A SEPARATE TICKET.

The Minnesota Alliance Party Puts a Full Ticket in the Field.

After the exciting and not altogether pleasant experiences of the afternoon the Alliance state central committee assembled at the Merchants hotel to decide on a definite course of action. The results of the afternoon visit to the People's party convention were discussed and it was unanimously agreed that they were far from satisfactory. The committee was agreed that all attempts to harmonize with the People's Party had proved worse than useless, so they proceeded to organize for an independent campaign, and appointed the following congressional committees:

First District—G. W. Sprague, S. H. Harrison, P. A. Peterson, A. G. Johnson.

Second District—John Diamond, E. T. Champlin, A. T. Foster, A. Warm.

Third District—Mathias Nachler.

Fourth District—F. L. McGhee, W. W. Erwin, Ott Johnson, A. L. Gardner, Thomas Ward.

Fifth District—J. B. Dukes, A. H. Nelson, Carrington Phelps.

Sixth District—E. Hatwood.

Seventh District—R. J. Hall, J. B. Hompe, Nels Anderson, F. Hoskins, D. W. Hickson.

CARTER CHAIRMAN.

RESIGNATION OF W. J. CAMPBELL ACCEPTED.

And Land Commissioner Thomas H. Carter Chosen to Succeed Him—The Appointment of a Secretary Left to the Discretion of the Chairman.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Thomas H. Carter, of Montana has been elected chairman of the Republican national committee. There were many well known Republicans congregated at the Fifth Avenue hotel as early as 9 o'clock a. m. to attend the meeting of the executive committee of the Republican national committee, which was called for 11 a. m. Among the more prominent of those present were Henry C. Payne, of Wisconsin, James S. Clarkson, of Iowa, William A. Sutherland, of New York, R. C. Kerenes, of Missouri, Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, secretary of the committee, and Senator Frank Hiscock.

Chairman Campbell, of the national committee did not attend, but Mr. Payne had his resignation, which was tendered at the meeting. The resignation was accepted, after which the committee and some of its advisors went to the Hoffman House and ordered lunch. When lunch was ordered nothing was settled. Before discussion of coffee and cigars had been completed the Gordian knot had been cut. Thomas H. Carter had been prevailed upon to take the chairmanship himself. This decision being reached the conferees returned to the Fifth Avenue hotel and went into the committee room to place the official stamp on the recess arrangement. The news spread rapidly. At 3:30, when the committee reassembled, after Chairman Sutherland had called the meeting to order, Mr. Clarkson arose and made the nomination of Mr. Carter. The nomination was warmly seconded by Mr. Payne and unanimously carried. On motion of Mr. Clarkson, J. F. Burke, of Pittsburg, was appointed secretary pro tem. It was also agreed that the appointment of the permanent secretary be left to the discretion of the chairman.

FIRST OF NEXT WEEK.

The Fifty-Second Congress Likely to Adjourn the 25th of July.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The committee on ways and means considered and ordered favorably reported a resolution providing for the adjournment of the first session of this congress on Monday next, July 25. The vote on the resolution was unanimous.

The resolution will be soon called up, and in the present temper in the house there is little doubt that it will pass. The senate is equally anxious to bring the session to a close, so that nothing short of an emergency is likely to cause any extension by the senate of the date fixed in the resolution.

Raum Is All Right.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Representative Lind, of Minnesota, has submitted the views of the minority of the special pension office investigation committee which had in charge the investigation of the pension bureau under the management of Commissioner Raum. The report finds nothing for which the commissioner can be criticised unless it be that he appointed his son clerk of the bureau.

ALICE MITCHELL'S CASE.

The Trial of the Memphis Girl Murderess Begun—Insanity the Defense.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—The trial of Alice Mitchell on her plea of present insanity was begun in the criminal court during the morning in the presence of a large number of people. The defense holds that when Alice Mitchell, 18 years old, manifested an aversion for men and loved a maiden 17 years old with the devotion and intensity of a man, and prepared to marry her and planned to elope, she was crazy. The state will contend that Miss Mitchell did have a great regard for young men and will show that she not only flirted with the other sex but that she carried on a vigorous correspondence with men, some of them unknown. The work of selecting a jury occupied two hours and a half. It is composed of the leading business men of Memphis. The only question asked them was whether or not they had an opinion as to Miss Mitchell's present insanity. The girl's father was the first witness on the stand and he told of his wife's temporary insanity when her first child was born and also of her mental aberration when Alice was born. Mr. Mitchell wept bitterly in detailing the story, but his daughter smiled as if she thought the matter was a huge joke.

OBJECTED TO THE YOUNG MAN.

A South Dakota Father and His Daughter's Lover Duel to Death.

DEADWOOD, July 18.—Wood ranch, eight miles from this city, was the scene of a double murder during the day. A young man named Goody has been keeping company with the daughter of L. Wood, against the father's wishes. Goody went to the ranch and became involved in a quarrel with Wood. Suddenly Wood drew a revolver and shot Goody in the head and abdomen. As he fell Goody drew his revolver and shot Wood in the head. Wood lived two hours and Goody one hour. The girl saw the fight and it is feared the sight will cause her death.

Investigation Closed.

PITTSBURG, July 15.—The house committee's inquiry into the trouble at Homestead is completed. Superintendent Frick was again on the stand during the day. He testified that the tariff law had nothing whatever to do with the strike, as the reduction of wages was an absolute necessity. The committee will probably report against the employment of Pinkerton men.

Republican Congressional Convention.

The Republican convention for the Seventh Congressional District, Minn., will be held in the opera house in the city of Moorhead on Thursday, Sept. 1st, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for Congress for said district and to transact such other business as may properly come before the convention.

All persons who believe in the principles of the Republican party, and who desire its success in the coming campaign, are invited to co-operate in the good cause. The basis of representation agreed upon by the committee is three delegates at large for each county and one for each 200 votes cast for S. G. Comstock in 1890 and one delegate for major fraction thereof. The various counties are entitled to the following number of delegates:

Becker	8	Otter Tail	11
Big Stone	6	Polk	7
Clay	7	Pope	6
Douglas	7	Stevens	6
Grant	5	Swift	6
Kandiyohi	9	Traverse	5
Kittson	5	Wilkin	5
Marshall	6
Norman	5	Total	104

The foregoing call was agreed upon at a meeting of the Congressional Committee held in Moorhead June 21st, 1892.

H. W. DONALDSON, Chairman.
FRANK M. EDDY, Secretary.

THE following figures are furnished by Receiver Aaker of the local land office: The number of acres of surveyed government land which are still unoccupied are divided as follows: Kittson 533,222; Marshall 52,408; Polk 7,340; Norman 1,160; Clay 1,240; Becker 31,812; Otter Tail 940; Beltrami 42,793. The unsurveyed land is as follows: Kittson 348,600; Marshall 57,600; Polk 1,280; Beltrami 16,200. Only 8,620 acres of vacant government land in Polk county.

IN answer to the question, "What Made Nelson Popular?" the Caledonia Argus in a lengthy editorial argues that it was the following tariff utterance in the Fiftieth congress: "Worthier, better and juster it seems to my mind would it be to give our people—the toiling masses—cheaper food, cheaper fuel, cheaper clothing, cheaper shelter—cheaper because released from the heavy and unnecessary bondage of high taxes. I will put free sugar, free coal, free salt and free lumber against free whisky and free tobacco under all circumstances, and so will the great mass of the American people."

Little Falls Transcript:—Congressman Halvorson, when asked why he declined the People's party nomination for lieutenant-governor, replied: "I have several reasons; the principal one, however, is that my term as congressman does not expire until March 4 next and I would not care to resign to take any other office. I did not care to state any other objections relative to the refusal of the nomination made at St. Paul. I refused for the same reason that I refused to make the race for congress for a second time. I am going out of office at the close of my term here, but I am not going out of politics."

FUSION FOR SAKE OF OFFICE.

It has come to the knowledge of the JOURNAL that a few Democrats in Polk county are striving to bring about a fusion of the two old parties for the purpose of downing the People's party in Polk county—or rather for the purpose of obtaining the offices, but as near as we can come at it no Republican has as yet been found willing to lend himself to the scheme and the JOURNAL desires to set its face as a flint against the scheme. If there is anything in the principles of the Republican party that party cannot afford to compromise itself by entering into any agreement for the simple sake of office, and if it is true to its ancient traditions it will not do so. The principles of the Republican party as first laid down and as exemplified by the lives of such men as our martyred Lincoln are good enough to live for, aye, good enough to die for if needs be, but to surrender those those principles for the sake of office we cannot believe that the grand old party has so far degenerated as to be capable of seriously entertaining such an idea for a moment. Politics with us is a matter of principle and our actions are guided from a desire to subserve the best interests of the country in which we live, and we are fully impressed with the idea that the sound old Republican principles, when properly carried out, are better for the true interests of our country than any other measure yet devised. When it degenerates into a simple scramble for office—should that time ever come—we are not in it.

DONNELLY'S NOMINATION.

Commenting upon the nomination of Donnelly, the St. Paul Dispatch says: "The nomination of Mr. Donnelly by the People's party as its candidate for governor is undoubtedly an honest expression of the preferences of the members of that organization. It will result in the polling of the full strength of the third party on election day, at least for the head of the ticket.

"It will not do for the adherents of either of the other two parties to underestimate the strength of Mr. Donnelly. He has done consistent and persistent battle in this state for years for the principles represented by the new party, and a great many men who doubted his honesty and wisdom at the ouset have been brought to the entertainment of respect and consideration for him and his purposes, if not for all the opinions to which has given his adherents. This has been brought about by the nature of the hostility to which Mr. Donnelly has been subjected. Not the fullest recognition of his great intellectual attainments would have produced such a condition of feeling for itself. His honesty of purpose may not be made more plain by that opposition, but it is certainly made less open to question in the minds of many who do not affect to sound the depths of political philosophy.

"The nomination will be followed by those of the Republican and Democratic parties. How the latter organization will act in the present juncture will be a matter of curious interest to many persons. Since the nomination of Dr. Ames was forced upon the leadership of that party six years ago, a more exasperating problem has not presented itself to the party of Thomas Jefferson in this state. When the Democratic nominee takes the field, he will doubtless receive as ardent support from that leadership as the doctor did then, although he may not, of course, poll so many votes.

"With the Republican party the nomination of Mr. Donnelly ought also to be a matter of grave concern. That gentleman and his party have evidently been supported in great measure by the voters of the nationality upon which the leading candidate for the republican nomination mainly relies for his success in as well as out of the convention. The policy of the farmers in eliminating from their platform all issues which have not a direct bearing on the state campaign affairs is at least shrewd. The democratic brethren are somewhat excited because that platform does not denounce the tariff. But such excitement will be of no avail. The people's party is intent on getting the largest number of votes possible, and its candidates do not propose to voluntarily drive any votes away. Monopoly is the war cry of the people's party, and when the votes are counted on election day, it will be fully evident just how far the people of this state regard their politics and their industries as being controlled by monopolistic influences."

THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

The democratic ticket now reads: For president, Grover Cleveland; for vice-president, Adlai Stevenson. When the verdict of the American people is given on November 7th it will be something like this:

CLEVELAND
GROVER
ADLAI
CLEVELAND
STEVENSON

Long Prairie Argus:—The Wright County Times still adheres to the old story that the election of Knute Nelson as governor means the defeat of Senator Davis and that Nelson's nomination is urged on account of his nationality. This may be the honest conviction of the editor of the Times, but the truth is that Nelson's strength lies in the fact that he is in touch with the people, both fearless and honest, with no lofty political ambition to gratify. The call of the people for such a leader this fall is all that has brought him out from his chosen retirement. The indications now point to his nomination, when subsequent events will prove that these fears of the Times are groundless. The worst fear which stares the friends of Davis in the face is that the present legislature is in the hands of the enemy. It will require such a popular candidate as Mr. Nelson to secure a legislation which will make any Republican's election to the senate possible.

American Miller:—A local paper published at Ashby, Minn., regrets the probability of the mill in that community being moved elsewhere. Incidentally it gives a reason why the mill will seek another location. It is the same old story of the grocers preferring to sell outside flour to the home article. The paper states that the miller is well liked and the farmers satisfied, but the competition of the merchants is too much. When the mill has gone and the farmers fall into the habit of going elsewhere the town can thank its merchants for the loss of trade. But this experience will go on repeating itself indefinitely everywhere. Most people in agricultural towns do not appreciate the business drawing qualities of the local mill until it is burned, moved away or bankrupted by the boycott of the town grocers.

Little Falls Transcript:—County after county is instructing delegates for Knute Nelson for governor, and there seems no doubt of his nomination. A strong candidate is needed to head the Republican state ticket this year, and none question Nelson's strength with the people. His nomination will result in an old time Republican victory in Minnesota, and for once the candidate for governor will poll the heaviest vote on the ticket. It is a peculiar fact about Minnesota campaigns that the opposition is always able to reduce the majority of the governor to a lower figure than that of any other candidate—this year it will be different.

THE REPORT of the committee appointed by congress to investigate the cause of the trouble at Homestead shows that the 256 men who were affected by the reduction of wages were sub contractors and bosses in the mills, and as the Carnegies had put in improved machinery they very naturally wanted the benefit of the increased production. The few men who were affected were making from $5.00 to $15.00 per day, and under the leadership of these few men the whole mass of the workmen declared a strike and started a riot which ended in bloodshed.

Minneapolis Tribune:—The Homestead investigation committee has completed its work. The outcome is, that the wages paid to "rollers" at the Homestead works are found to be from $235 to $247 per month; to "heaters" $130, and to heater's helpers $75. It is also discovered that the price of steel billets on which the workmen are employed has fallen during the past three years nearly 40 per cent. Such are the tariff taxes and starvation wages which, to the democratic mind, caused bloodshed at Homestead.

Live Stock in the West.

West of Missouri and exclusive of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas and Missouri, the number of cattle is 16,248,667 and their value is estimated at $218,987,569; the number of horses and mules 4,586,080, value $244,775,058; number of sheep and hogs 23,383,782, value $84,594,980; making the aggregate value of horses and live stock $548,357,602. The total product of horses and mules of all the other states is 9,854,080 and their value is estimated at $719,836,082.—Edward Rosewater's Omaha Address.

Scars Are Deemed Marks of Beauty.

In New Holland the women cut themselves with shells, and, keeping the wounds open a long time, form deep scars in the flesh, which they deem highly ornamental. Another singular mutilation is made among them, when in infancy they take off the little finger of the left hand at the second joint.—Yankee Blade.

THE FREE PASS FIEND.

He Makes the Life of a Theatrical Manager Weary.

"This," said a theatrical manager, "is a very pretty town; it ought to have a hall built around it, that might reflect in the sky so that the surrounding countries could see and admire. Between whiles, when you are not being stood up and sandbagged for your money, they stand you up for passes. Upon my honor I was introduced to a man on Monday and on Tuesday he buttonholed me on Fifth avenue and said he would like to come down and see us. 'So you shall, my boy,' said I, 'the box office is open from 9 to 9 and your dollars are always welcome.'

"Another time I was a sort of enforced escort to a young lady who was belated and had missed her friends. I knew her slightly, and, as a gentleman should, offered to see her home. There isn't a blessed relative she has that I haven't passed into this house, and only the other day the young woman met me and said her sister was going to be married, and wouldn't I give her a box, so her brother-in-law-to-be could give a farewell stag party. I dined at a first class restaurant last week, where they serve second class meals, and the clerk, as he struck me for two dollars, remarked, 'You might just as well use the other side of that check to make me out a pass.'

"I chucked an infant under the chin the other day and said it was the living image of its mother. I got a letter from its father the next day asking for two seats at the matinee, 'and please,' he added, 'keep the third chair vacant if you can. Baby is going along, as it is nurse's day out, and the little fellow may want to have his mother's knee.' Another day in a crowded street car I exchanged my seat for a strap, to which a young lady was holding on. What do you think, she came into my office only this morning and wanted to know if I wouldn't be so 'perlite' as to give her a seat in the theater also. She thought I was so much of a gentleman she didn't mind in the least asking me.

"My pastor begs for passes. My landlady demands them and pays off her milk bill with them. When I treat a man he looks as if he expected a pass at the bottom of the glass. The street car conductor thinks one ought to go with every fare I pay him. Young women present me with roses, wearing a 'won't-you-pass-me-through-the-door' sort of expression, and their brothers walk along the avenue with me and call me 'my boy' and want to know what night 'me and sis' can find a couple of seats. Then they take some other fellow's sister. But for the cock of the cake walk give me a fellow on Fifth avenue whom I asked Monday to send me down some things C. O. D.

"'We don't trust theatrical people at all, my dear sir. We find it doesn't pay.' I wanted the things straightaway and with difficulty made up the sum out of the change in my pocket. The next night the gentleman was at the theater door just as I came forward.

"'I suppose it's all right?' he said.

"'What's all right?' said I.

"'Oh, you know me. You did business with me yesterday. Isn't it all right?'

"I didn't wait to say a word, but I rushed home and for five minutes yelled blue devils up the chimney of my fireplace, after which I went back to the theater and for two hours couldn't break the line of people waiting for passes."

Then the manager, sighing wearily and wiping his perspiring brow, wrote on the margin of a newspaper, "Pass Mr. Jones and party to box." When he finished he whispered; "My best girl's mother's divorced husband, who at the present time is standing in again with the old lady. If things continue blooming there will be a double wedding."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Women Being Recognized in London.

Women are fast obtaining substantial recognition in the governing of London. There are women members of the board of education and various other important bodies, and if women choose there may now be women dock commissioners. In a bill before parliament dealing with the election of dock commissioners, Mr. Courtney, chairman of the committee, took a novel and, as the newspapers describe it, "praiseworthy" step by striking out the words "male persons," so that the franchise might be conferred on women. The promoters of the bill said if ladies might vote they might also become commissioners. "And why not," asked Mr. Courtney, "if they are good business women?"—London Letter.

A Fast Growing Vine.

The Kudzu vine is probably the most rapid growing plant in the world. It belongs to the bean family. The leaves look something like a Lima bean, and was once called Dolichos japonicus. It will grow easily sixty feet in three months. It was introduced into America by the Japanese during the Centennial exhibition. It is said that in its own country it has flowers like bunches of wistaria. For some reason American summers do not seem long enough for it. It rarely blooms.—Meehan's Monthly.

Cruel New York Society.

Whoever should write an analysis of affairs in New York today and should leave out the strain of social ambition would miss the most serious thing in the life of the metropolis. We are apt to think the hardest thing a man can do is to come to New York, establish a foothold and eventually make a fortune, as so many thousands of country boys have done. But my observation is that if you will go to those same men after they have put the city under their feet, they will tell you that what they have accomplished was nothing as compared with what they have yet to do—and that is to get into society. I do not mean McAllister's Four Hundred when I say "society;" I mean polite society of any sort. I mean the entree into any one of a hundred far more desirable circles than McAllister's band of self instituted aristocrats.

The day was when a man had the entree of any such circle if he was a respectable man of any profession or if he was rich. That is the case in the smaller cities today. Any doctor, lawyer, judge or rich man, whose reputation is clean, can instantly gain admission to the nicest circles in the small cities. But he cannot do so in New York. The only sure passport to such circles that I know of in New York society is to be born in such a circle. The next best thing is to boast a commission in the army or navy. The city is old and rich and suspicious of all newcomers. That makes its society the most rigid and cruel in America.—Julian Ralph in Providence Journal.

Why Canned Salmon Is Cheap.

When one comes to think of it it seems quite wonderful that one should be able to buy a pound of salmon in a can from the Pacific coast for twenty-five cents. The frozen fish costs forty cents a pound at least, while the unfrozen article ranges in eastern markets from one dollar up. Besides, the manner in which each can is made to contain a segment of salmon perfectly fitted into it appears most surprising, the bones, even to the larger vertebræ, melting in the mouth without requiring so much as a crunch between the teeth and the red flesh separating in beautiful clean flakes.

Yet salmon would be very much cheaper than at present were it not that the great canners of Alaska have formed a combination to restrict the product. This is unfortunate for consumers perhaps, but lucky certainly for the fish, which would be wiped out altogether within five years at the most if the companies engaged in their capture had a market for all they could produce at profitable rates. The methods employed are the most destructive conceivable, inasmuch as the fishermen stretch seines across the mouths of the rivers and take the fish which are going up the stream to spawn. There is a law against this sort of thing, but it is not enforced. Eventually, doubtless, the supply of this valuable finny game will run out and artificial propagation will have to be resorted to.—Washington Star.

Insomnia and Nervousness.

There can be no doubt that many persons suffer from insomnia which had its origin, or at least its principal strength, in their own nervous apprehension that they are or are about to be afflicted with it. Any one of a dozen causes may induce wakefulness, and yet the person lying in bed with the faculties alert at the moment when they would naturally be expected to be wrapped in slumber has nine times out of ten, or ninety-nine times in a hundred, nothing serious to apprehend. The stomach may not be in quite its normal condition—and there is no more potent cause of wakefulness.

Now an hour—ten minutes even—seems a long time in the middle of the night, when a person wishes to be sleeping and cannot. If a sensation of dread, of apprehension, is allowed to enter the mind, such a period simply becomes interminable. The nervous apprehension increases the difficulty, and feeding upon itself the derangement may quite possibly increase till it becomes a dangerous malady.—Good Housekeeping.

How to Save Money.

Some men plead poverty when they are well off. Gilhooly is one of these. His landlord said to him:

"I want you to pay your rent right off."

"I haven't got any money."

"But you have got to pay it anyhow."

"Now, you look here, if you keep on dunning me for that rent when I've not got a cent do you know what I'll do? I don't like to do it, but you'll goad me to it."

"What will you do?"

"I'll buy me a house for cash and put a stop to this paying by the month."—Texas Siftings.

Silence Unkind Criticism.

"This world could be made better," said Mrs. French-Sheldon with emphasis, "if we would exercise more magnanimity in our judgment of other people's motives, and by devoting ourselves to the accomplishment of some fixed object, ambitious or otherwise, which will give scope to latent qualities and develop new ones, hence tending to break down prejudice by self enlargement. By silencing the unkind criticism which may be provoked and even deserved. By recounting the good rather than the bad ones of those inimical to us."—New York World.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Levi S. Myers: Wheat on the west side is all right. I have one hundred acres already headed out and more that is getting there rapidly.

J. E. O'Brien: How is the plumbing trade? Splendid; we have more work than we can do. We want two or three more workmen.

M. W. Jenson, I think our crops around McIntosh beat yours all hol- . I have just returned from a to Thief River Falls and I found s in elegant shape up there also.

ohn Alderman: We are having immense trade this summer, both hardware and in agricultural im ements, of which latter we carry a l and complete line of everything.

S. L. Collins: I notice that the OURNAL says that "Arries & Lancaster did not raise their rates during encampment week." If you had gone still farther and included Collins' livery also, you would have struck it about right.

E. D. Childs: Crops, did you say? Well, if you can tell me whether we will have a frost before September 15th, I can tell you more about it. I believe if we get a late fall we shall get a good crop, and if we don't, we will not.

John Wynand: What do I know about the crops? Darned if I know. Sometimes I think they are all right, sometimes I don't. I believe, however, that the treshing machine will veal what they are, and I am not ing for an unusually large yield.

ve Hatlestad: You see a great said about the People's party g dead; wouldn't it be better to t till you see about that? Act as though it was not dead if you nt to be on the safe side. I think nomination of Ringdal as treaser was a master-stroke. He will arry this city.

Geo. J. McManus: Insurance business is always a little slow this time of the year, but I am pleased to be able to say that the New York Mutual Life is doing a rattling good business. Well, it deserves it, for, to say nothing about its representatives in this ity, is it not the best and soundest he field? ["Yea, verili, friend e!"]

N. Hixson: Crops are not the ever saw, i. e. except the crop liticians—there seems to be no unt on that crop. But talking t bossism, there never was a complete boss in Minnesota ics than the one who now absoy controls the People's party. ever had anything like it in this ntry and the farmers will awaken that fact some of these days.

E. C. Davis: Say, did you notice how extremely patriotic our county officials were during encampment week? I say it was a burning shame that they could not muster enough patriotism in all that crowd to even buy a small flag and raise it, to say nothing about bunting and other in dental decorations! I would ad e that they buy these faded ban s and streamers on the street cor rs, so that upon occasion our unty court-house can have some ning to remind people that our ounty officials are not all dead! It nade my blood boil to see the courthouse as bare as a hen-house and about as attractive.

O. R. Williams: I was over at the JOURNAL farm the other day and I think you have as fine land as ever a crow flew over, but I was impressed with the idea that you should have in this state a law similar to the one they have in Wisconsin in relation to drainage. There a farmer may dig a ditch through his own farm and compel his neighbor to carry it on through his land. In case of a nonresident the authorities may do the work and the land is good for it. All you need over at your place is drainage and you are so near the river that this could be had with little expense if you had a law like the Wisconsin law to operate under.

C. L. Hanson: I have just returned from the convention in St. Paul and stopped off in Otter Tail Co. to visit riends and relatives. They have ine looking crops down there and xcellent hay. In the town of Garlen, where I live, our wheat has been injured by dry weather which has prevailed ever since we finished seeding in the spring. We had one big rain-storm one week ago tonight (Monday) which did lots of good and some damage by knocking n standing grain. I had a fine of wheat, sown on potato d that was knocked flat and ot recovered when I left home St. Paul last week, and I am d it will not, as the stalks were and very heavy. We have lots y there this year.

UR FELLOW townsman, P. M. ngdal, was honored by the nomination by the People's party as candidate for state treasurer last week. Had they made as good a selection for every office as they did for this, they would have placed a stronger and better ticket in the field than they did.

FIELD PEAS FOR PIGS.

Fattening Food to Fill Up Until Corn Is Gathered.

The more hopeful outlook for the future production of pork in this country is occasioned by the recent removal of restrictions in Europe, which heretofore have prevented the exportation of American pork products. This state of affairs will tend to stimulate the growing and fattening of hogs. Hence the production of grain foods needed for this purpose will be correspondingly increased.

While Indian corn is generally admitted to be the standard crop for this purpose, yet comparatively few farmers are in position to commence fattening until the new corn crop is harvested, though they are well aware that it would be wisdom to invest a few dollars for a suitable grain ration at an earlier period. They know full well that pork can be produced cheaper in mild weather than during the winter season.

One reason why the field pea is held in such high estimate as a crop to feed pigs is by reason of the fact that it is ready to harvest nearly or quite a month earlier than corn. Again, the ease and simplicity of pea cultivation, its excellent fattening qualities and its natural adaptation to most conditions of soil all make sufficent inducement to commend its cultivation to those interested in cheap pork production. In selecting a soil for pea culture a light loam and low muck should be avoided.

Prepare the ground as early in the spring as it will work light and friable. The ground best adapted for growing the pea is where corn, potatoes or other hoed crops were grown the previous year. The variety most largely grown for this purpose is the "Small White Canada." The pea weevil, so disastrous to this grain in former years, has mysteriously disappeared from this section. This adds much to the profit and certainty of its cultivation.

Sow with a drill at the rate of two bushels per acre. After sowing, the ground should be well rolled down, the small stones being pressed into the soil and the surface left smooth and uniform. These methods will greatly facilitate the work of harvesting, which should be done with the old fashioned wooden revolving rake instead of the slow and tedious method of pulling the vines with the scythe. With a good steady horse commence to rake on the side of the field where the harvester can proceed exactly opposite the direction in which the pea is always found to be leaning or lodged. Returning, rake over the same ground, removing each gavel, or raking sufficient to pull the undisturbed vines remaining under them. A person following with a fork is then able to roll the raking one side, giving room for another "bout." In this manner six acres or more can easily be harvested in a day.

After two or three days of favorable weather the peas can be stacked in readiness for feeding. Of course they can be drawn under cover, afterward thrashed and the vines fed to horses and sheep during the winter. No other crop excels the pea in leaving the ground in a favorable condition to be followed by a crop of winter wheat. The state of the soil is such as to warrant satisfactory results. Why this is so few farmers can explain scientifically. The facts they are familiar with, and they seem willing that the matter should be left to scientists or experiment stations to investigate further.—Irving D. Cook in American Cultivator.

For Sucking Cows.

From Mr. John Lewis, herd manager for Mr. Adams Earl, Lafayette, Ind., we have received a description of a little device used at Shadeland to prevent cows from sucking themselves. Mr. Lewis says: "We had a Jersey cow upon which we tried everything we could think of without effect, until we had a blacksmith make a piece of 'nose jewelry' like that which we send you by mail today. We put it in with a bull punch, putting the tap in afterward. It accomplishes its purpose effectually, and I can with confidence recommend it. I would prefer it to any heavy stick or leather, as it is not so unsightly."

EFFECTIVE NOSE JEWELRY.

It will be observed that the tap to which Mr. Lewis refers is adjustable by means of a screw thread, so that the device is not only simple in operation but must necessarily be sufficient to prevent the practice which it is intended to stop.—Breeder's Gazette.

Live Stock Points.

"Texas flockmasters can produce wool for from six to nine cents a pound," says H. L. Bentley, of the Texas Live Stock Journal. It is in Texas perhaps that the American merino will find its best development.

The Ohio experiment station provided cement floors and a cistern for the liquid manure from thirty cows, and between Christmas and May 1, or a little over four months, the amount collected was over 100 gallons per head, with a fertilizing value of forty-seven dollars. This would give an income of about $2.35 per cow during the six months of winter. Where the manure is thrown out into the yard to be soaked by rains and dried by the sun, most of this is lost, and perhaps as much more from the value of the solids.

There is another serious outbreak of the foot and mouth disease in Kent, England. The British minister of agriculture should look at home when next he howls about unhealthy American live stock.

Admirers of Hereford beef cattle claim for them that they mature earlier than Shorthorns, and that at 2 years old, on good feed, they will weigh more. And as to looks, no handsomer cattle were ever created than the Herefords.

Do not forget to plant some pumpkins this spring for a bite for the live stock next fall. They all like them, and variety is thus added to their food without much cost. Pumpkins and corn thrive in the same ground and do not quarrel.

A DEAD SHOT INDEED.

AWFUL HAVOC WROUGHT ON A DARING UNION GUNBOAT.

A Unique Tussle Afloat and on Shore at St. Charles, Ark., in 1862—Well Matched Valor on Both Sides—A Decisive Shot and a Decisive Charge.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association. Book rights reserved.]

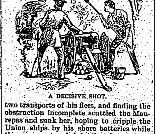
HEROISM as an American trait may perhaps be analyzed as the outcome of common sense and opportunity. There is no knighthood, no lady's favor in the hazard to spur on weak human flesh; nothing much in fact at stake except success and reputation. Potent, too, are all these influences, judging from the deeds they inspire. Here's a case in point, an affair quite unknown, although it was in its way one of the most desperate and sanguine in our annals. Out of a gunboat's crew of 173 souls, that drove wedgelike into one corner of the fight, 125 perished and 25 were wounded. It was in the contest for Arkansas, the second year of the civil war.

When the Union rams and gunboats of Ellet and Davis had cleared out the Confederate fleet on the Mississippi above Vicksburg, the rivers flowing in from Arkansas offered a refuge to every floating thing that escaped annihilation at their hands. Gen. T. C. Hindman commanded what there was of the Confederacy in Arkansas, and surmising that the Union gunboats might take a notion to inspect the interior of his bailiwick, he ordered that a stand be made at the bluffs on the White river below St. Charles, a point 100 miles from the mouth of the Mississippi. He sent to the spot two gunboats, the Pontchartrain and Maurepas, and 100 men—thirty-five of them armed. The thirty-five rifles were all that could be scraped together for the purpose. At the same time he ordered a Texas regiment led by Col. Allison Nelson, then on its way from the Lone Star State to re-enforce him, to proceed to the same point. Capt. A. S. Williams, an engineer officer, was put in command of the 100 men, the unarmed ones to aid in obstructing the channel.

On the 16th of June the Union ironclads Mound City and St. Louis and the wooden gunboats Conestoga and Tyler, under Commander A. H. Kilty, of the Mound City, and the Forty-sixth Indiana regiment, led by Col. G. N. Fitch, were slowly ascending the river just below St. Charles. The inspiring genius on the Confederate side was Capt. Joseph Fry, an old United States naval officer, who resigned in 1861 to follow the fortunes of his state, Louisiana, in the rebellion. He was a gallant fellow, tall, well proportioned, handsome, intelligent, modest and brave, a man with a past history and a fated future.

The approach of Kilty's fleet took the party at St. Charles by surprise. Nelson was not on hand with his Texans; in fact he had been detained up the river waiting for ammunition, which had yet to be manufactured out of lead gathered in bits from the country at large. He was known to be en route, however, making all haste to the rendezvous, and Fry decided to fight if attacked. A few hours delay might change the odds that were for the moment dead against him. His total force, including Capt. Williams' thirty-five riflemen, was 114 men, seventy-nine of them seamen on the gunboats Pontchartrain and Maurepas. The sailors were armed with revolvers only. The Pontchartrain carried two 32-pounder rifles and these were put into battery on the bluffs. Lieut. J. W. Dunnington, of the Pontchartrain, commanded the battery and worked it with the crew of his vessel. About 400 yards below Dunnington's battery, Capt. Fry, placed four guns from his own vessel, the Maurepas, in battery, and a short distance below that Capt. Williams stationed his thirty-five riflemen to act as sharpshooters.

This presented three obstacles to the approach of Kilty's fleet in ascending the narrow channel between the bluffs. Still another was added above the batteries. Capt. Williams had driven some piles in the channel, intending if time allowed to extend the barrier from shore to shore. The sudden appearance of the enemy put a stop to that work, and Capt. Fry sunk two transports of his fleet, and finding the obstruction incomplete scuttled the Maurepas and sunk her, hoping to cripple the Union ships by his shore batteries while they were entangled in the obstructions. It was a forlorn hope, of course—114 men and half a dozen guns against four gunboats and a regiment of well equipped soldiers. Yet every hour brought Nelson's Texans nearer, and wonderful things may happen in an hour or so. But it takes two to make an issue in war as well as elsewhere, and there was a man on the other side, or, to be more exact, a team of men, quite a match in daring for the plucky Confederates. The men of the team were Col. G. N. Fitch, commander of the expedition, and Capt. Kilty, chief of the little flotilla.



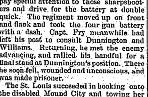
A DECISIVE SHOT.

Early on the morning of the 17th Col. Fitch put his infantry ashore a couple of miles below the town and engaged Capt. Williams' skirmishers. At the same time the fleet, led by the Mound City, steamed up and tossed shell and grape into the woods and bushes along shore. Fry's heavy guns gave no reply until the Mound City was opposite his second battery—the rifles taken from the Maurepas. A volley from these guns drew a hot fire from the fleet, and Capt. Williams was quickly hustled out of his quarters by the shell and canister from the gunboats and Col. Fitch's skirmishers. Fitch soon drew his men up in front of Fry's second battery, and after looking the ground over he signaled to Capt. Kilty that he would storm the position by land, unless the brave sailors preferred to move their ships up to the batteries and silence them by gunboat fire. Kilty signaled back from the deck of the Mound City that he would take the contract alone. The land troops and vessels could not fight simultaneously, because the gunboat fire swept the ground where the land force would have to charge.

Capt. Kilty stopped the Mound City directly in front of Fry's four gun battery, and for nearly an hour poured shot into it at a lively rate. Meanwhile Lieut. Dunnington, at the upper battery, opened with his 32-pounder rifles upon the Mound City, and Capt. Kilty signaled the St. Louis and her consorts to engage the lower battery while he steamed up to engage the new antagonist. Dunnington had placed his two guns some distance apart on the river bank, and Capt. Kilty passed the first one without silencing it, and his vessel soon got between two fires and within point blank range of both heavy guns. The engagement had lasted an hour and a half.

Fitch's men were in contact with Fry's skirmishers at long range, and showed themselves in full force. Capt. Fry, alarmed at this unexpected and formidable foe on land, sent up the river to Dunnington asking that every spare man should be sent him to hold the line. Things were getting desperate, and Nelson's Texans were not in sight. Lieut. Dunnington was standing at the piece farthest up the river, and having an unobstructed range on the slow, moving ironclad, he sighted carefully and planted a shot near her bow on the port side that was probably never equaled for effectiveness in any combat. After passing through the side of the Mound City the missile killed 8 men working the casemate gun nearest its path and then went through the steam drum directly fore and aft. The gun deck was immediately filled with scalding steam, and a scene followed which beggars description. The wheel was turning slowly at the time of the accident and kept on revolving until the bow of the ship was close in shore near the Confederate guns. Dunnington ceased firing.

From Fitch's position the accident was not clearly understood, but when he saw the vessel moving blindly ashore, her crew jumping headlong through the ports and from her decks into the water, and clouds of steam issuing from her hatches and her ports, he concluded that Kilty and the Mound City were out of the fight and he could take up the contract so valorously attempted by the unfortunate gunboat. Signaling the St. Louis, Conestoga and Tyler to cease firing, he quickly ordered his soldiers to advance on all sides. While doing so he observed that Capt. Williams' sharpshooters along the bluffs were firing upon the helpless seamen struggling for life in the river and also upon boats sent out to their relief by the St. Louis. Word was passed along the Indianian's ranks to pay special attention to those sharpshooters and drive for the battery at double quick. The regiment moved up on front and flank and took the four gun battery with a dash. Capt. Fry meanwhile had left his post to consult Dunnington and Williams. Returning, he met the enemy advancing, and rallied his handful for a final stand at Dunnington's position. There he soon fell, wounded and unconscious, and was made prisoner.



FELL WOUNDED AND UNCONSCIOUS.

The St. Louis succeeded in hooking onto the disabled Mound City and towing her ashore. She had been deserted by all her ablebodied men. Out of 173 officers, men and boys only 23 were fit for duty. In the casemate where the missile struck 83 were killed either by Confederate fire or the scalding steam. Of those who jumped from the vessel 42 were drowned, and 25 wounded were taken from the ship and the water. It was an awful shot and might have won the fight to the Confederates but for Col. Fitch's ready good sense and courage. Capt. Kilty's bold dash upon the batteries with all his vessels had dumfounded the enemy to such an extent that they lost their heads at the very moment when Dunnington's marksmanship virtually put the gunboats out of the fight. As it was, Fitch carried everything, and the bluffs were passed as far as the town within an hour. Nelson's Texans were at hand, actually within sound of the firing, and an hour's delay on the part of Fitch might have been disastrous.

Capt. Kilty was seriously scalded and lost an arm. He afterward arose to the rank of commodore. Col. Fitch was a volunteer officer, untrained to arms. He left the service soon after on account of disabilities.

Capt. Fry's later career was an exciting one. He drifted east after his exchange and commanded the famous blockade runner Eugenie, which always sailed under the Confederate flag. One day he attempted to carry a cargo of powder to Fort Fisher, North Carolina, while the Union blockading fleet was treating that work to a lively cannonading. Signals were sent him from his superiors on shore to save his crew and scuttle the ship; but he refused to do so, lighted her and took her safely to port. When the war closed Fry settled in the north, and in 1873 became commander of the ill starred Virginius, of Cuban revolution fame. He was taken by the Spanish authorities and, with 53 of his crew, was summarily put to death, although protesting his right to trial as a United States citizen.

During the war and at the time of the Virginius episode, it was asserted that Fry personally ordered his men to fire upon Capt. Kilty's unfortunate sailors who jumped from the Mound City to save themselves by swimming ashore. On the other hand, Capt. Williams, in an official report made four days after the fight, declared that he gave the order to his sharpshooters to shoot the struggling victims. Lieut. Dunnington reported that when the Mound City drifted to shore she was hailed to lower her flag, and this failing to come down, his men were directed to fire upon those in the water. Apologists of Fry state that he was not near the scene at the moment the firing began and could not have been responsible. In fact, such barbarous impulses rarely throb under the same jacket with the truly martial spirit that Fry on all occasions displayed.

Indians Dislike Dark Feathers.

Among the Indians dark feathers, and those in particular of the owl, buzzard, woodpecker and raven, are unspeakably accursed. No one will touch them except those who "have the evil road"—that is, are witches—and any Indian found with them in his or her possession would be officially tried and officially put to death! Such feathers are used only in secret by those who wish to kill or harm an enemy, in whose path they are laid with wicked wishes that ill fortune may follow.—C. F. Lummis in St. Nicholas.

A FRENCH SHILOH.

MARENGO, THE TEST BATTLE OF NAPOLEON'S CAREER.

Like Grant at Shiloh, He First Lost, Then Won—His Success the Beginning of Greater Things—The Daring Strategy That Brought on the Fight.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association. Book rights reserved.]

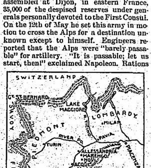
MARENGO—Shiloh, two events that punctuated two great careers. What Shiloh was to Grant, Marengo was to Napoleon. For Marengo, critics of Napoleon have never ceased to lash him and admirers have never ceased to praise, just as admirers laud Grant for Shiloh and critics would flay him if they could. Marengo came near proving a disaster to the French, so did Shiloh to the north.

Shiloh was saved by the opportune arrival of a division of supports when all seemed lost; so, too, Marengo. The vanquished at Marengo were the assailants, and their plan carried to the point of routing their opponents; just so at Shiloh. The defenders at Shiloh fought stubbornly and gave ground inch by inch as the defenders did at Marengo. At Shiloh the commander of the assailants fell at the moment when victory seemed within his grasp, and at Marengo the commander of the assailants left the field owing to fatigue and feebleness when victory was all but certain. Finally, Shiloh gave the cause of the victors a wonderful impetus; so also did Marengo, and as Shiloh made the fame of a budding general whose previous successes had been transitory, so Marengo boomed Napoleon as imperator and general when his lucky star was his chief capital. From a personal point of view Grant had to win Shiloh in order to get into the race for glory with such seniors as McClellan, Buell and Halleck, and Napoleon had to win Marengo to compete with his well intrenched rivals, Moreau and Massena. Had Shiloh ended as at one time seemed inevitable, Grant would probably have dropped into obscurity, and the same with Napoleon had Marengo gone against him.

Marengo—fought June 14, 1800—was a forlorn hope for Napoleon, although not for France. His success in Italy, in the campaign of 1796, and his campaign in Egypt made him first consul, but that appointment removed him from the army. In plain English, he had been shelved so far as active military leadership was concerned. In opening the campaign against Austria, in 1800, he had either to give the place of honor to Moreau or Massena, by sending their armies to the field, or to create a new army if he would lead himself, even nominally. As first consul he was commander in chief—much as the president of the United States is—and might accompany an army in the field, but not actually command it. To accompany the armies under Moreau or Massena would be to yield the glory of an achievement to other hands. At least this is the view of his critics.

But as usually happens in a crisis, the public had no time to note the purely personal events. Austria took the initiative. France was in danger. Who was to lead the rescue? Moreau's army, 110,000 strong, was guarding the frontier on the Rhine. Massena was at Genoa guarding the pass from Italy into southeastern France below the Apennines. He had 10,000 troops in Genoa and 15,000 under Gen. Suchet on the strip of frontier north of Nice toward the Alps. The Austrians attacked Massena with 120,000 men, besieging Genoa with 40,000, confronting Suchet's frontier guard with 40,000, and leaving the remaining 40,000 in garrison guarding communications. Of course it touched a sore spot in Napoleon to have northern Italy, which he had wrested from Austria in 1796, again brought under her domination and made the base of operations against France. Besides, it was among the probabilities that the Austrians in Italy would break through Massena's ranks, turn the southeastern provinces from their allegiances to republicanism, and then let loose upon the Rhenish frontier an army of 150,000 men to overcome Moreau.

The campaign was opened vigorously by the Austrians in Italy in April, 1800, and Napoleon needed to act promptly. For some time there had existed, on paper, a body of troops known as the Grand Army of Reserve of France. It was a byword throughout Europe, and was freely lampooned at home and abroad as consisting of a corporal's guard of decrepit old men and of weak striplings. Napoleon secretly fostered this view of it, and also secretly assembled at Dijon, in eastern France, 35,000 of the despised reserves under generals personally devoted to the First Consul. On the 12th of May he set this army in motion to cross the Alps for a destination unknown except to himself. Engineers reported that the Alps were "barely passable" for artillery. "It is passable; let us start, then!" exclaimed Napoleon. Rations and other supplies were packed upon mules, gun carriages were taken apart and packed in the same way; the cannons were sheathed in sledges formed of hollow logs, six days' rations were distributed to the soldiers, and money was sent ahead to the monks of St. Bernard to prepare a feast for an army. Relays of soldiers of 100 men each hauled the gun sledges up the mountain to the sound of martial music, and at the summit of St. Bernard pass they sat down to a warm repast, served by the monks. On May 20 the army had crossed and rendezvoused at the foot of the slope in northwestern Italy. There the gun carriages were put together, and the Grand Army of the Reserve was ready for battle on the Austrian rear. But at what point and in what way was a mystery to friend and foe alike, a secret locked in Napoleon's brain. The army took the direct route toward Genoa, 100 miles south of St. Bernard pass.



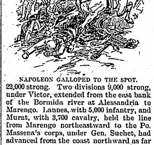
THE SCENE OF NAPOLEON'S EXPLOIT.

The field of operations destined to result from Napoleon's movement was the mountain locked region of northwestern Italy, Piedmont and Lombardy. The Austrian army under Baron Melas was in contact with the French under Massena, along the borders of the Gulf of Genoa. Its line of communication extended 200 miles from the army front eastward through Alessandria, Piacenza and Mantua. It was guarded on the north by garrisons at Turin and at Milan. Napoleon's advance from Switzerland south would carry his army across the Austrian line between Melas and his base.

Had Melas possessed the versatility of the Confederate general, Forrest, it might have ended in a case of "the biter bit" for Napoleon. His little army was in the Austrian rear, but should half of Melas' army turn around and show fight, what then? But Melas couldn't believe that the French had crossed the Alps and he looked upon the Army of Reserve as a myth. Napoleon had not only his Army of Reserve, estimated by some at 50,000 men, but Moreau had detached a column of about 20,000 from the Rhine to cross the Alps at the Gothard pass and enter Italy by Lake Maggiore in aid of Napoleon. By June 1, therefore, there were nearly 100,000 French soldiers in northern Italy or along her frontiers.

Napoleon made a feint on Turin, then turned east and drove the Austrians from Milan, making that his base. The column sent by Moreau was distributed on the line of the River Ticino, extending from the Alps southward to the River Po, and this movement shut Melas up in Piedmont with but one or two loopholes of escape. South of Piacenza and Alessandria the Apennines extend northward to the swampy borders of the Po, leaving but a narrow pass for the roadway between these points. Into this pass Napoleon threw his Army of Reserve. To Napoleon's view the Austrians were "bottled up." Not so, however, for Massena had been starved out and he had abandoned Genoa. This gave the enemy an open port and a means of succor by their English allies. The turn of affairs at Genoa put Napoleon off his guard just as the Union leaders were off their guard at Shiloh. He believed that Melas would receive English support at Genoa, and either operate against Massena's army along the coast or move north across the Po and then turn east to cut his way out across the Ticino.

Instead, Melas proposed to brush Napoleon from the pass south of the Po and recover Piacenza and the road toward Mantua. With this view he attacked Marshal Lannes' division on June 9 and was repulsed, retiring toward Alessandria. Napoleon lay idle until the 12th, surmising that Melas would cross the Po to the north, although a spy assured him that he was moving south toward Novi and Genoa. On the morning of June 14 Napoleon's army was at the gates of Alessandria, all except a division of 6,000 under Gen. Desaix, that had been dispatched to Novi to head off Melas on the south. The French were 22,000 strong. Two divisions 9,000 strong, under Victor, extended from the east bank of the Bormida river at Alessandria to Marengo. Lannes, with 5,000 infantry, and Murat, with 3,700 cavalry, held the line from Marengo northeastward to the Po. Massena's corps, under Gen. Suchet, had advanced from the coast northward as far as Acqui, but there was no communication between the two armies other than secretly through the Austrian lines.



NAPOLEON GALLOPED TO THE SPOT.

The Austrians opened the battle early on the 14th by crossing the Bormida at several points 31,000 strong and assailing Victor's line. Victor was slowly driven back to Marengo, where a small creek gave him a natural defense. Lannes was attacked, north of Marengo, and his troops also fell back step by step.

At the village of Marengo the French cannon under Marmont defended the creek against Austrian guns planted on the opposite side of the narrow ditch. Napoleon was absent when the ball opened, but on hearing the sound of battle he rode to the front, sending a courier to recall Desaix from Novi. Melas had detached a body of 2,200 cavalry to Acqui to head off the French under Suchet, reported to be passing that point for a junction with Napoleon.

Kellerman's French cavalry brigade, 450 strong, charged the Austrians and was repulsed. The Austrians then charged and carried Marengo. This was at 11 o'clock, and following that the French began to retreat all along the line. Napoleon led in the Old Guard of 800 sabers, but the Imperial cavalry crushed them. A division of reserves under Monner, also led up by Napoleon, was driven back, and in the parlance of the field "all was lost." It only remained for Melas to send in a column of cavalry to sweep the flying detachments over the open plains back of Marengo, and victory would have been his. But his cavalry reserve had gone elsewhere.

By the middle of the afternoon the French had retreated over two miles and were only striving to save themselves.

Melas was a man over eighty years old, and instructing his chief of staff to form the scattered troops into columns of pursuit along the main road to Piacenza, he retired to Alessandria for rest, announcing that the enemy was flying and the day was won.

Meanwhile the French had formed a rear guard for retreat. Desaix had reached the scene. A few scattering shots announced that the Austrian advance had begun. Desaix was on the direct road toward Piacenza, along which the Austrians were marching in close columns. A vineyard and a corn field concealed his men from the Austrians' view, and they marched to within 200 paces and halted.

All hope for the French hung upon the column led by Desaix, and he sent word to his chief that he (Desaix) must either attack or retreat. Napoleon galloped to the spot and ordered an attack, at the same moment urging Kellerman to lead his 600 horse upon the Austrian flank. Desaix headed the assault in front and was shot dead at the first fire. Both attacks were so bold that the Austrians turned and fled toward the Bormida. Kellerman took 1,800 prisoners, among them the Austrian chief of staff. The French followed their fleeing enemies to the river opposite Alessandria and cut them down without mercy, and at nightfall Napoleon was master of Marengo and of Italy. On the heels of that triumph the fates began to pose him for the master of all Europe.

WORLD'S FAIR NOTES.

The World's Fair Directory has expended up to date approximately seven and a quarter million dollars.

It is proposed to hold world's fair in Berlin in 1898, and in Paris in 1900, but definite action has not yet been taken by the nations concerned.

In Demark's exhibit at the World's Fair will be a fine array of porcelain ware and a notable art display, including reproduction of many of the Thoswaldsen sculptures.

An effort is being made to have the cotton mills of Georgia make a fine exhibit at the World's Fair. It is believed that such exhibit would greatly stimulate the investment of capital in cotton mills in the south.

The exhibit to be made at the World's Fair by Krupp, the celebrated German gun maker, will represent an expenditure of $1,500,000. The The largest cannon ever made, weighing 122 tons, will be in the exhibit, as will be also several hundred tons of war material.

The work of assigning space to the thousands of exhibitors in the various World's Fair buildings has been entered upon and will be pushed to a finish as rapidly as possible. As much more space has been applied for than is available it will be necessary to scale down the requests of a majority of the applicants.

The Washington state building at the World's Fair will show to some extent the forest resources of the state, The foundation alone will contain 171 logs, some of them 120 feet long and 42 inches in diameter at the small end. The superstructure of the building will contain, besides heavy timber, fine finished woods, and a complete exhibit of ship building material.

Captain R. H. Pratt of the government Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., wants to place 300 of the young Indian scholars at the Carlisle school in the civic parade at the time of the dedication of the World's Fair buildings. Captain Pratt desires also to have a full military band, composed exclusively of these Indian scholars. He intends to make at the fair an exhibit illustrating the educational and training work of the Carlisle school.

The tide of public opinion is unmistakably turning strongly in favor of keeping the World's Fair open on Sunday, provided a silent fair be assured. The exposition authorities have never had any idea of keeping the machinery running on Sunday and everything going at full boom as on week days, and since they have so declared themselves, the demands for Sunday closing have diminished greatly in number. Not a few who had petitioned for a closed fair, have changed their minds and revoked their request and have asked that the gates be opened.

The authorities of Harvard University have applied to Chief Peabody of the Department of Liberal Arts of the World's Fair for 7,000 square feet for a thoroughly representative educational exhibit from that historic institution. The officers of the university say they are prepared not only to fill but to splendidly and representatively fill every foot of space which can be granted to them for their educational exhibit, and they accompany their application with a carefully calculated schedule and diagram showing what they are prepared to do in this direction.

It is next to certain that the date of dedication of the World's Fair buildings will be changed from October 12th to October 21st, the latter being really the 400th anniversary of the landing of Columbus, allowance being made for the correction in the calendar made in the time of Pope Gregory. The senate has passed a bill making the change referred to, and it is not doubted that the house of representatives will take like action. The change was requested by the World's Fair commissioners of New York, the legislature of which state had provided for a Columbus celebration on October 12th. It was thought that the two celebrations, if held simultaneously, would detract from each other.

It was feared by many at first that the fine arts exhibit at the World's Fair, would be, perhaps, its weakest feature, because of the fact that art in America is yet too young to have produced any work of great merit, and because the exposition is to be held so far from the great European storehouses of art treasures that it was believed doubtful if any considerable number of them would be exhibited. So far from this being the case, however, it is now certain that the art exhibit will be one of the most complete and splendid that visitors to the exposition will have the privilege of seeing. This is due to several considerations. European nations, as well as all others, are taking an extraordinary interest in the Exposition. There is a commendable rivalry among those richest in art productions in the matter of making a creditable exhibit. They have come to recognize fully that the United States is by far the best market in the world for the products of the painter and the sculpter. Added to these reasons are the very efficient efforts of agents to the fair to enlist the interest of foreign nations in the making of exhibits in all lines, and particularly in the art division. Supplementing the good work done in this direction by a number of exposition special commissioners, Chief Ives of the fine arts department, has made two trips to European nations, with the result that from each one an art exhibit of exceptional merit is forthcoming.

COSTLY RAILROAD GRADE.

The New Great Northern Branch to Red Lake Falls a Marvel in Engineering.

The Great Northern extension from Pelican Rapids to Red Lake Falls embraces some of the heaviest work ever done in railroading in Minnesota. The heavy work is mostly all in this vicinity. The road crosses both the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers, in Red Lake Falls, and runs along the very edge of the latter river, upon entering town, for four blocks. The grade in this latter place is cut fight out of the bluffs on the river bank and a fill fourty or more feet deep made from the water's edge. The river is, in fact, being encroached upon. There are cuts of 40 feet at various points, and the road, after striking the level prairie, runs for a half mile 20 feet lower than the prairie's level. Since the advent of the 500 workmen and several hundred teams, who will be employed for three months yet.

A World's Fair Clam Bake.

National restaurants are to be a feature of the World's Fair. Nearly every foreign government that has decided to make a display at the Exposition has also arranged, through its representatives, for a restaurant in which refreshments will be served as they are at home. In most cases native attendants will be in charge of the restaurants. The German, French, English and other European commissioners have practically closed arrangements for these cafes. Visitors from the New England states will be agreeably surprised when they reach Jackson park to learn that a genuine New England clam-bake is to be operated at the Fair. The company that has secured the privilege of operating this establishment will spend $30,000 in constructing an artistic building. The structure, as planned, is two storied, with a casino roof. It occupies a commanding site, over on the lake shore, near England's building. The food will be cooked in the same way it is in New England coast resorts, which are patronized by thousands of people. During the Fair two special refrigerator cars will arrive every day with a supply of clams, lobsters and seafish. The building will be finished in time to give a reception to New Englanders when the buildings are dedicated in October. Facilities will be provided to serve 10,000 people a day during the Fair.

Royal Lace At the "Expo."

The Countess Brazza, writing to Mrs. Potter Palmer from Venice, touching the hoped-for exhibit, at the World's Fair, of the historical collection of laces, the property of the Queen of Italy, makes several interesting statements. The countess says the queen intends to send the crown laces, "a thing never done by any sovereign outside of her own country. Our history of lace begins a thousand years before Christ, with photographs of objects found in the Egyptian tombs." The countess guarantees the most perfect exhibit of its kind ever made, and stipulates only for an advantageous location. A drawing of the proposed arrangement was inclosed in the letter, with a minute and detailed description of the exhibit.

A Whaler At the Fair.

The old whaling bark "Progress," which has now reached Detroit on her way from New Bedford, Mass., to Chicago, where she and her contents will constitute for the benefit of World's Fair visitors, a complete exhibit of the whale-catching industry, has a remarkable history. She has made 17 trips around Cape Horn, all of them successful. Forty times has she crossed the Arctic ocean in search of the whale and his valuable blubber. In 1869 she set sail and joined the Arctic fleet. In 1871 terrific storms scattered the fleet and all met disaster except the "Progress," which came back to New Bedford with 300 sailors, seven captains, five women and three children, the survivors of the wreck. She carries six whaleboats, which have all seen actual service, and each one is provided with a complete equipment of paraphernalia. These boats are sharp at both ends, and can be driven at great speed by two good oarsmen.

August Fashion Notes.

In the matter of trimmings, one's own store of packed away finery which has been too good to discard, or mothers' hoards of laces and embroideries, may all be turned to account with charming results. Laces are used again with the best effects, and the woman who is not the enviable owner of real Chantilly or Brussels or English thread can purchase for a comparatively small sum such admirable imitations that she can well hold her own by the side of one dressed in real lace. Among the best imitations is the Irish point, which is heavy and much used for the collars, basques and deep cuffs now so fashionable. Then the imitation black thread or Chantilly is most wonderfully like that so laboriously made on cushions; machinery now will weave in an hour what it formerly took poor women and girls months to produce. This cheapening process may make the style of dressing common, but it gives the effect which is so dear to the woman's heart.

Shirt waists and blazers are the most popular and useful things out. The waist may be made of cotton, China silk, or thin flannel. If it fits neatly, and that is not difficult to do, it may always look well, because it can be made of such cheap material, if desired. Then there is the blazer—the open jacket falling over the hips—with its convenient pockets and a button or two to fasten it, if necessary.

All bodices are made more or less full, if they are not worn with these jackets—that is, all except the so-called tailor-dresses, which usually have the addition of a full skirt front or waist-coat.

Skirts are still close to the hips and laid in plaits at the back, and also too often much too long. For mountain-dresses or country walking, our best accoutred women wear them short enough to escape the ground.

Sleeves are gradually changing their shape, increasing in width what they are losing in height; and this will probably bring the long scarfs of our mothers' days in fashion again, because nothing but a scarf will fall well over these balloon sleeves.

From "Peterson's Magazine" for August.

A Husband's Greatest Blessing

Is a strong, hearty, vigorous wife, with a clear, handsome complexion. Many of our American women not only work too hard, but they have no change of scene, no opportunity to rest and lay in a supply of health, vigor and ruddiness. Now as a friend of all mankind (and womankind, too) we would whisper to the husband who has a weak, listless, sickly wife, with a dull complexion, take the little woman on a journey, and if you want to be sure she will enjoy that journey, buy her a ticket to the destination (whatever it is) over "The Burlington Route," for its elegant accomodations, smoothly running cars and the delightful scenery through which the line passes, will do much to rest and to restore her to health. "The Burlington" is the route to all health resorts. For full information write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The August "Peterson" is the finest number we have ever seen of this popular magazine. It opens with two very fine engravings, both being artistic gems. Gilberta S. Whittle's article, "Some Noted Washington Women," will attract much attention. It gives excellent photogravures of Mrs. Lieutenant Mason, Miss Kate Deering, Miss Matie Thompson, and various other society belles, together with a delightfully written biographical sketch of each lady. "A Thorough Misunderstanding," by Georgia Grant, is a first-class story. "A Country Wedding," by Dama B. Stevens, is not only a pretty description, but gives many valuable suggestions. "Held Up at San Angelo," by Howard Seely, is one of the most exciting tales this popular author has written. "An Eighteenth Century Cabinet-Maker," by Meredith Jackson, gives an interesting account of the celebrated Chippendale, with fine specimens of his work. "Ivory-Work" describes the newest fad in embroidery, and the directions for doing it are rendered still clearer by good illustrations. "Dorothy's Devices," by Minna Irving, will be worth everything to girls who want to learn how to dress tastefully on limited means. "The Hermit of the Hacienda," by Will Lisenbee, deserves special mention among the stories, though they are all capital. "Uses for Odds and Ends," by Cornelia Redmond, shows a fertility of resource amounting to genius. These paragraphs will give an idea of "Peterson's" variety and excellence. Terms, $2.00 a year; $1.00 for six months. A sample number will be sent for five cents. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Not Surprised.

Neighbor (breathlessly)—Oh, Mrs. Harddluck, your little son Johnny found a dynamite bomb, and took it into a stable down town and broke it with an ax, and blew up the stable and all the buildings around it.

Mrs. Harddluck—Land sakes! I wonder what that boy will be up to next.—Good News.

FARM AND GARDEN

A PLEA FOR THE SKUNK.

By Right of Its Good Works This Animal Claims the Farmers' Protection.

The skunk is in bad odor with the world at large, and yet every farmer's boy knows the commercial value of its soft fur; a value of sufficient consideration to have created special and remunerative industry known as "skunk farming." This industry consists in breeding these little animals for their pelts alone. But these furry pelts, according to observant farmers, are of small importance compared with the good work wrought on the farm by the live animals. Here is what a Michigan farmer had to say recently in The Rural New Yorker on the subject:

Were potatoes so badly grub eaten twenty-five years ago as they are at the present time? According to my memory they were not. Neither was a bounty offered on woodchucks in those days, nor was there one rabbit where there are ten now. In my opinion, if these were not killed off with shotguns, hounds and ferrets, they would in five years become about as great a pest in Michigan as they are at present in Australia. Why? Because their natural enemies are so few. The skunk is nearly exterminated for his fur, while there are literally no hawks, owls, minks, weasels, etc. I remember counting twenty-two skunk tracks that crossed the road one night after a light fall of snow in going about half a mile to school. The skunk enters the holes of chucks and kills and eats the young, and in his nocturnal wanderings finds the nests of young rabbits, destroys them and also any amount of bumblebee nests for the honey.

The white grub is I think the worst of all pests at present, and is increasing in sandy and loamy soils, and works on nearly everything the farmer raises. Some wheat fields have been entirely destroyed by the pests, but their worst havoc is in potatoes, corn and all kinds of roots, strawberries, raspberries and the grasses. Out of 500 bushels of my own potatoes last season at least one-third have been rendered unmarketable on account of the grubworms, and about the same proportion of my corn, and in 1890 five acres of corn were destroyed by their eating off the roots, hundreds of hills not reaching a height of eighteen inches. By digging into these hills I could get from one to half a dozen grubs to the hill. Besides, I have lost hundreds of raspberry and blackberry plants by their eating the bark from the roots. The damage done by these pests every year amounts to millions of dollars in Michigan alone, and it has long been known that the skunk is the most common enemy of the nuisances by digging them out of the ground during its nocturnal wanderings. Now are we to allow this little animal—one of the best of our friends—to become exterminated just because he happens to have some soft fur that the ladies want to wear? Woodchucks are terrible pests in all sandy or hilly portions of the country. Even my hired men and almost every boy know that the skunk ought to live for the good he can do in the above ways, and that he ought to be protected by the imposition of a five or ten dollar fine for the killing of each one. The skunk goes into the woodchuck hole or stays there through the day, and goes forth in the night and destroys insect life. He works all night, and is entirely harmless, except that he will sometimes get a chicken or two from the shiftless farmer, but this loss can be avoided.

How Often Should Corn Be Cultivated?

Thirty plats were devoted last season to the answering of this question at the Kansas station. The experiment was divided into two series of fifteen plats each. Series A had five plats cultivated twice a week, five plats once a week and five plats once in two weeks. The three five plat groups in series B were cultivated, respectively, two, four and six times during the season. The implement used was a spring tooth cultivator that gave shallow culture and could be run close to the plants without disturbing the roots. The land was clay loam.

A uniformity in yield in the plats under similar treatment, in both series, is noted in the report of results. But what is still more interesting is that the highest yields attained in both series, when cultivated once in two weeks and when cultivated four times during the season, is the result of what is practically the same amount of cultivation. Though the culture did not occur on the same dates for both sets, the plats cultivated once in two weeks were also gone over four times. This experiment also seemed to prove that, in a wet season like the last, and on soil of the character here employed, it is possible to give corn both too much and too little culture. The latter case is readily conceded by everybody, but, that the ground can be stirred too often will probably not meet with so universal assent. Nor is it probable that the mere stirring of the surface is in itself injurious, if the soil is not too wet when worked; but the greater the number of times the cultivator runs through the rows the greater are the number of chances that the roots on some plants will be injured, and also that now and then a leaning stalk will be broken by the team in spite of the care exercised by the plowman, and the director attributes the diminished yield of the plats subject to frequent cultivation to these causes rather than to the mere stirring of the soil.

Leaf Smut of Timothy.

This disease forms black smutty lines in the leaves of timothy and other grasses, which are finally reduced to shreds covered with dusty spores. Draining the soil well, transferring the crops to new land when they have begun to smut badly and exercising care with respect to manure are preventive measures.

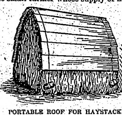
FARM AND GARDEN

COVER FOR A HAYSTACK.

Especially Adapted to the Requirements of Small Farms.

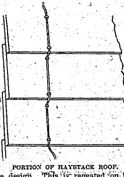
A hay barrack is unquestionably an excellent thing for the large haymaker, but it is quite out of the question with the small farmer whose supply of hay is determined more by his own need or by the rotation of crops followed out on his farm. It frequently occurs that on these smaller farms there are produced a few tons more hay than there is mow room for in the barn, and this must, as a rule, be stacked out with no protection. A large proportion of it is always lost, and in case of pure clover it had better be left in the field than stacked without protection from the weather, according to a Rural New Yorker correspondent, who has the following to say concerning the portable roof shown in the cut and originally illustrated by the journal mentioned:



PORTABLE ROOF FOR HAYSTACK.

The following is a practical roof or covering in use by him, and is known to serve its purpose well. The required materials are a number of inch boards, a foot or more in width and as long as the stack to be covered, some wire, such as is used for slat wire fencing, and some staples, the whole shown at Figs. 1 and 2.

Beginning at the ridge, a board is laid on and the wire which extends down each side of the stack is stapled fast; a second board is placed under this so that the lap is about two inches or a trifle more and stapled fast as shown in the design. This is repeated on both sides of the stack after the fashion of a common board roof until it reaches well down toward the ground. Finally, to prevent the wind from blowing it off, it is weighted down by hanging a heavy stone to the end of each wire. For a long stack the cover should be made in three sections, the middle one slightly overlapping the other two.



PORTION OF HAYSTACK ROOF.

Spraying Experiments.

From experiments carried on at the Maine Experiment station, with a view to checking the work of the codling moth, the following conclusions are drawn: 1. All sprayed trees had a smaller percentage of wormy fruit than did the unsprayed. 2. A mixture of one pound Paris green to 250 gallons water gave better results than did a weaker mixture; though a mixture of one pound to 320 gallons saved a large percentage of the fruit. 3. The number of windfalls was greatly lessened by spraying. 4. The proportion of wormy fruits among the windfalls was much smaller from the sprayed trees. 5. There is no danger of poisoning from the use of fruit which has been sprayed as directed. 6. The best time to spray probably varies with different varieties, but in no case should any trees be sprayed before the blossoms fall. 7. There is greater liability to injury of foliage from the use of London purple than from the use of Paris green.

A study was also made as to means of preventing or checking the ravages of the apple scab. Apple scab is caused by the attack of a parasitic fungus which grows on the leaves and young twigs as well as on the fruit. The attack is most severe in cool, moist seasons, and if it occur early in the season, before the year's growth is completed, the trees may be seriously injured. Spraying with carbonate of copper dissolved in ammonia, and diluted, has proved an effective means of holding the fungus in check. The average increase of salable fruit on the sprayed trees, over that on unsprayed trees, was 50 per cent., while in some cases the increase amounted to 65 per cent. A solution of three ounces of carbonate of copper in one quart of ammonia, diluted with thirty-five gallons of water, was found very satisfactory. The cost of spraying with this solution is about three cents per tree for each application.

Changing Seed.

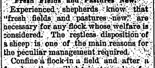
A New York World correspondent says: It is the practice among many good farmers to change the seed of oats, wheat and other small grains, as it is found that grain which has been raised and sowed on the same land year after year has less vitality in it to produce a generous crop than seed procured from another locality, even if the change has been only the distance of a few miles. Usually if a change of any distance is made it is better to bring the seed grain from the north of the location where it is to be used. Seeds from the south carried further north will mature as well as though raised in the same or a northern latitude. The same rule applies to corn and fruit trees.

PASTURE FOR SHEEP.

Henry Stewart Tells How to Provide Fresh Fields and Pastures New.

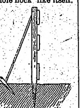
Experienced shepherds know that "fresh fields and pastures new" are necessary for any flock whose welfare is considered. The restless disposition of a sheep is one of the main reasons for the peculiar management required.

Confine a flock in a field and after a few days they will begin to explore for ways of escape to other fields, and soon show the effects of their restlessness and dissatisfaction in a falling off of condition. The experienced shepherd, therefore, provides for this necessity by dividing the pasture by means of portable fences, or removing the flock to another field, where in a few days they begin to show a desire to return to the former pasture. Hurdling sheep is most largely practiced where land is high and the area restricted. Henry Stewart describes in Country Gentleman his own plan. He says:



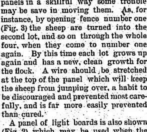
FENCE PANELS OF LIGHT POLES.

My plan has been to provide light hurdles or portable panels which may be readily taken down and set up again, and so give the sheep a change before they become restless. A discontented sheep makes the whole flock like itself, and a falling off in condition is an immediate result. These panels may be made of light poles sawed down the middle and put together as shown in Fig. 1. Holes are made in the ground by a pointed bar, and the stakes being set in them are driven down with a heavy mallet. The ends are wired together. By disposing of the panels in a skillful way some trouble may be save in moving them. As, for instance, by opening fence number one (Fig. 3) the sheep are turned into the second lot, and so on through the whole four, when they come to number one again. By this time each lot grows up again and has a new, clean growth for the flock. A wire should be stretched at the top of the panel which will keep the sheep from jumping over, a habit to be discouraged and prevented most carefully, and is far more easily prevented than cured.



PANEL OF LIGHT BOARDS.

A panel of light boards is also shown (Fig. 2), which may be used when the poles are not easily procured. I have made plantations of Norway spruce on the north side of fields for the purpose of getting a supply of these poles, and by planting closely it will be only a few years before the poles will be large enough for use. The shelter thus afforded by the groves is also most valvable to any sheep farm as well as for any other, and the cost is a mere trifle.



A DIVIDED FIELD.

When soiling is practiced, only small lots are required, and such crops as rape, oats and peas, white mustard, turnips, clover—and in the south, cow peas, scarlet clover—or fodder corn anywhere, may be grown for the flock. But for the sake of the health of the flock these small lots must be frequently changed, and plowed and sown with any one of these crops for pasture, as long as it may last. By such a method of feeding, a flock may be made an accessory to any kind of farming, especially on a dairy farm, where the sheep will follow the cows and gladly pick up what they have left. For the rearing of early lambs, this method of soiling the ewes will be found a great economy, and all the more as this pursuit is necessarily carried on in localities where land is of high value.

Bee Paralysis.

Bee paralysis is becoming so common of late that it threatens to be quite a serious affair. From quite a number of sources comes the report that common salt is a specific remedy. Ernest Root says that in the home yard, where the grass was kept down with salt, no cases appeared, while in the outyard, where no salt was used, there were two cases. I have almost always kept the grass down with salt in front of my hives, and have never had a case in my apiary, says the editor of The Beekeepers' Review.

Poultry Pickings.

The white Leghorn is not only an excellent fowl, but a very prolific layer.

Hot weather, with occasional wet, starts diarrhea in chickens. As a preventive mix chalk with the food occasionally and give boiled milk as a first drink in the morning.

Houses, roosts, coops, nests, etc., should be kept thoroughly clean and disinfected. If neglected, disease and vermin will run riot. Cleanse the water dishes every day, and refill three times a day with fresh, cool water.

Scaly legs are eyesores, and with such simple remedies as applying vaseline or lard, to which a few drops of carbolic acid has been added, there is no excuse for their presence in a well kept flock of poultry.

Don't let your chickens run on low, damp places. Nothing produces gapes [illegible]

Remember that milk is an excellent food for egg production.

UNFORGOTTEN.

The morning hours were merry,
The genial moon is calm,
The fragrance of the wild rose
Is like a healing balm.
The birds within the woodland
Carol a happy song.
But in my heart abides still
A sorrow deep and strong—
My poor lost love!

The glittering streamlet murmurs
Over its pebbly bed,
The fleecy cloud is sailing
So lightly overhead;
The southern breeze is playing
Among the hazel boughs;
But, ah! remembrance dies not
Of hopeful, happy vows—
My poor lost love!

The calm lone hills ascending
Toward the clear blue sky,
O'erlook the smiling valley
Where here at rest I lie;
Those lone hills are the emblem
Of that far silent land,
Where she I loved is resting,
One of a countless band—
My poor lost love!

A vision of a yew tree—
A narrow, turf clad grave—
The winter of a country
Where winds tempestuous rave;
A little torrent falling,
With moaning, mournful sound,
Fills my imagination
Far more than all around.
My poor lost love!

Ah! gentle, joyous Nature,
Thy wearied, mourning child
Delights in thy rejoicing,
But may not be beguiled
From thinking of that dear one,
With dull heart aching sore;
My own, my vanished loved one,
My soul's light evermore—
My poor lost love!

Your Uncle Loren Secures the Plum.

Loren Fletcher was nominated to represent the new Fifth District in Congress on Tuesday last. For many years "Your Uncle Loren" has had the bee buzzing in his bonnet, but until now that is all he has had. If Mr. Fletcher should be fortunate enough to be elected—and we believe he will—he would make an excellent member of that body.

Warren Register:—Richard Kivel, brother to Sheriff Kivel met with a terrible accident last Friday at Argyle, while assisting in moving a building. He was holding a cable on the capstan, when the crab, which holds the capstan, suddenly flew from its fastenings throwing a crow-bar with great force against Mr. Kivel's head; at the same time that he was struck on the other side of the head by one of the sills or cross-bars of the crab, driving an iron bolt and the nut on the end of it, an inch across, into the side of his head for a distance of two inches just below the brain. He was alive at last accounts with slight hope of recovery.

Training School Notes.

Thirteen names have been added to to roll this week. The new comers are nearly all teachers of experience and form an excellent addition to the classes.

President L. C. Lord of the Normal school at Moorhead lectured at the Presbyterian church last Thursday evening to a good audience. His subject was "Habit." The lecture was plain, pointed and forcible and made an excellent impression.

As the work progresses the interest deepens and hard study is the order of the day.

The next lecture of the course will be given in the Presbyterian church on Thursday evening by Miss Emily R. Harris. Subject—"Recent changes in the British Government."

Grand Opera House.

That our theatre will be filled to repletion Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 1st and 2nd, goes without saying, as on those nights that popular Irish-American comedian, Dan'l Sully, will appear in two of his brightest comedies. He will begin his engagement in "The Millionaire," and on Tuesday evening that charming comedy-drama, "Daddy Nolan."

The story of Daddy Nolan is simple and ingenious. The plot hangs on the fact that a wild son has forged his father's name to notes for a large amount of money. The old man meets the notes, but is reduced to poverty. He drives the son from his home, telling him to remain away until he can come back an honest man. Daddy Nolan, however, receives the son's wife and child into his home. He had been ignorant of their existence until the crime was committed. There is happiness in the humble home, notwithstanding the poverty, until old Nolan has to make his last payments. Then he falls into the clutches of a pretended friend, and is saved only by the timely arrival of Tom, who has made a fortune in the West.

This is the outline of the story. The play introduces many strongly drawn characters, the best of which is that of Daddy Nolan, and it gives a picture of low but honest life in New York. The genuine wit and humor of the dialogue and characters and situations, the homely pathos and brightness of the actors make the charm of the play. The torments of the old man's life are his boy Jimmy, admirably played by Phil McFarland, and Patty, in which part Miss Daisy Chaplin made herself very charming. Mrs. Nelson Kneass as Mrs. Nolan, admirably portrays the character of the bright and faithful old Irish wife, while Mr. Sully has greatly improved in his acting with his broader opportunities. His Daddy Nolan is full of humor, and surpasses the charm of simplemindedness. The character is well worked out, and the portrayal of the character was that of a thorough comedian. Of course, much of the fun is rough, but it is all funny, and there is nothing offensive about it. The bad boy and his naughty sister are not too prominent, and the interest centers in the character of the old man. The play may be favorably compared to Harrigan's best work in the same line.

June Weather.

The following items are taken from the monthly summary of the Minnesota weather bureau for the month of June. The maximum temperature observed was 94 at Cambridge on the 11th, Grand Meadow and Jackson on the 2d. The minimum temperature was 30 at Pokegama Falls on the 2d.

The greatest amount of precipitation was 11.40 at Grand Meadow, and the least was 1.32 at Lake Winnibigoshish Dam.

Thunder storms were frequent throughout the state. Hail fell at Alma City on 5, 15, 16, 23, Ash Creek, 20, Easton, 15, Farmington, 6, Granite Falls, 5, 6, Jackson, 12, 15, Maple Plain, 6, 11, 12, 13, Rolling Green 15. Auroras: Bird Island, 27, Camden, 5, Clear Lake 18, Fergus Falls, 10, 11, 20, Montevideo, 3, Princeton, Pine River Dam, Granite Falls, Rolling Green, 2.

Severe storms occurred in the southern part of the state. Rolling Green reports 15th, 4:30 p. m., funnel shaped cloud moving from west to east, backed by a dark, green cloud of destructive tornado, 5 miles north of station, accompanied by hail, lightning and heavy rain. Alma City, 15, valuable horse killed by lightning in Janesville. Ash Creek, tornado, 20, 4 to 4:30 p. m., almost east, bearing a little south, 2 or 3 persons killed, west side of county. Some buildings blown down. Easton, 5 p. m., tornado, moving northeast, no electricity, four persons killed and ten injured, houses, barns and wind-mills blown down. Grand Meadow, heaviest rain for twenty years on 15th; 5 inches in four hours, clouds from every direction at one time. Not heavy wind at ground; but terrible disturbance overhead. Maple Plain, the severest rain and hail storm in several years on the night of the 11th and 12th. Houses suffered and wagon bridges washed away.

WHAT THEY SAY.

J. S. Nichols: You can say that the crops in Polk county are ring-streaked and speckled this year, with the prospect of very much less than an average yield, especially if we get an early frost. I have wheat in the dough that I think I can cut inside of two weeks. I have some winter rye that I think I shall cut next week; and by the way, talking of rye I think our farmers miss it that they don't sow more of it. I find it an exceedingly valuable crop to raise. Tell your readers all to come out to Maple Lake to the farmers' picnic on the 6th of August.

Ben McKinney: What do I think of that western country? Well, young man, my powers of description are quite limited, but you wait till the rest get back. There are some eloquent talkers among 'em, as you know, and they are all coming back—just as soon as they can save up money enough to come with, and they will tell you all about it. Of the entire Crookston colony the only ones who are making any money are Dr. Van Dyke and Les McDonald. You see more people out there out of work and strapped than in any country I ever struck. You fellows who stuck to Crookston when the exodus occurred are all right, and don't you forget it.

Tuberculosis in Rats.

For seven years I have been making almost daily experiments upon the internal organs of dead animals in order to increase my knowledge of comparative pathology. The postmortem examinations were made for the most part at the Lamparter Glue works, in the suburbs of Lancaster, Pa. Here of course were the bodies of large numbers of animals which afforded me an abundant supply of subjects for examination. The vicinity of the works swarmed with rats. Many of those, the workmen told me, sickened and died from time to time, and I became curious to know something about the disease that carried so many of the rodents off.

I could find next to nothing about the rat in books, so the thought growing upon me that the disease so fatal to the rat might be made dangerous to the rat's nearest neighbor, man himself, I undertook a series of experiments. My first rat subject was a sick one which I captured in the yard of the glue works without any exertion. The animal crawled about, made no effort to escape from me and when picked up offered no resistance. Its appearance indicated that it was dying of general debility. Its body was greatly emaciated. Its back was arched and its face bore an expression of distress. It refused food, was racked with a constant cough and in a few hours after being captured was found dead in the comfortable prison in which I had placed it.

My next subject was a healthier and more active rat. I caught him only to mark him and then gave him his freedom. He came into the yard regularly for his rations of flesh from various animals, but gradually showed the same symptoms that marked the condition of my first subject, and in fourteen days after capture he, too, was dead. The postmortem examination of these two cases developed the fact that the lungs were badly diseased. Tuberculosis had destroyed the right lung of each and only a part of the left remained.—Dr. S. E. Weber's Lecture.

A Mile Differs Sometimes.

The measurement in English yards of the different lengths of a mile in several countries is as follows: Arabian mile, 2,148; Austrian mile, 8,296; Bohemian mile, 10,137; Brabant mile, 6,082; Burgundian mile, 6,183; Danish mile, 8,244; Dutch mile, 6,395; English mile, 1,760; English mile, geographical, 2,025; English mile, nautical, 6,080; Flemish mile, 6,869; German mile, long, 10,126; German mile, short, 6,859; German mile, geographical, 8,100; Hamburg mile, 8,244; Hanoverian mile, 11,559; Hessian mile, 10,547; Hungarian mile, 9,113; Irish mile, ancient, 2,240; Italian mile, 2,025; Lithuanian mile, 9,780; Oldenburg mile 10,820; Persian mile, 6,086; Polish mile, long, 8,100; Polish mile, short, 6,07 ; Prussian mile, 8,237; Roman mile, 1,628; Russian, verst, 1,165; Saxon mile, 9,904; Scotch mile, ancient, 1,984; Spanish mile, 4,635; Swedish mile, 11,700; Swiss mile, 9,153; Tuscan mile, 1,808; United States mile, 1,760.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Bagging Grapes.

People often ask what is the use of the abstract studies scientific men and women often indulge in. The reply is you must first discover a new truth before you can tell whether you can make any value of it. The valuable discovery that the black rot can be prevented from injuring grapes by inclosing the bunch in a paper bag is the direct result of scientific studies.

When it was found that the rot was caused by a fungus growing from a little seed or spore which, floating through the atmosphere, attaches itself to the grape berry, it was the easiest thing to think of putting bags over the bunch early in the season so that the spore couldn't get there. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been saved to the cultivator by this bagging of grapes which would have been totally lost but for the labors of scientific men.—Meehans' Monthly.

The Ingredients of Fireworks.

The chief constituents of all fireworks are gunpowder and its ingredients. Iron and steel filings and castiron borings, free from rust, are used to increase the brightness of the display and produce the Chinese fire. When the rocket explodes up in the air the bright and varicolored sparks are produced by these filings as they ignite in the oxygen.

Copper filings and copper salts are used to produce greenish tints. A fine blue is made with zinc filings. A light greenish tint with much smoke is made out of sulphuret of antimony. Amber, resin and common salt protected from dampness produce a yellow fire. Salts of strontia make a red light. A green light is also made by the salts of barium.—New York Evening Sun.

The Rat Transmits Disease Germs.

When the reader thinks of the countless number of rats that infest the regions occupied by human beings, of their wonderful reproductive power, and of their seemingly causeless but rapid migration from one dwelling place to another hundreds of miles away, he must admit that if it is possible for the rat to convey disease germs from point to point this power for evil is incalculable. When he left plague stricken London and sought another field did he leave the plague behind, or did he keep a share of it to distribute elsewhere?—Dr. S. E. Weber's Lecture.

They All Dodged.

A quaint minister once said, "Now, brethren, I propose to throw this hymn book at the man who has been thinking of something other than the sermon."

He made the necessary gesture, as though he would hurl the book, and, curiously enough, every man in the congregation ducked his head.—London Tit-Bits.

How One Knows.

A wedding came off at Tyrone at the unusual hour of 6:45 in the morning. It is unnecessary to add that this was the wedding of a railroad man. Any other kind of a man selecting the same time would have been married at a quarter of 7 o'clock—Philadelphia Inquirer.

First Wheat in America.

The first wheat raised in the New World was sown on the Island of Isabella in January, 1494, and on March 30 the ears were gathered.—St. Louis Republic.

When you send your check out of the city to pay bills, write the name and residence of your payee thus: "Pay to John Smith & Co., of Boston." This will put your bank on its guard if presented at the counter.

It is calculated that it would take a person over 800 years to read all the standard works that are published, and yet we seldom come across a man who will acknowledge that he has not read every one.

Cyrus Thompson claims to have discovered the key which will unlock the mystery of the Maya codices and probably of the Central American inscriptions.

THE EVENING PRIMROSE.

Sad Evening Primrose, with your silken stole
Hung delicately sunward, what a soul
  Looks from your patient eye! How frail and pale
You stand among the flowerets! and your bowl
  Shows like a vanishing phantom of the grail.

Young buds that point a finger to the blue
Crowd on your stem, and youth and hope are new,
  While the sap runs; yet scarcely has the sun
Warmed twice upon your petals ere their hue
  Falls into pallidness of death begun.

And strewn about the grass the blossoms hide
The poor discolored fragments of their pride,
  Or hang disconsolate with draggled vest,
And clinging, sodden cerements, to abide
  The gradual workings of the Alkahest.

Was it for this you struggled into light?
That one brief day should crown a tedious night?
  Was it for this you felt your way along
The paths of natural growth, that from their height
  Shrill death should echo in your triumph song?

It may be so. There are who say the bliss
Requites the pain; yet could it be for this (God knows) you opened your sweet, patient eyes
To see the sun's face once and die in his kiss?
  For me—you bloom again in Paradise.

—Nina Layard in Longman's Magazine.

Names and Businesses.

There is at times, a peculiar coincidence as regards the name of a man and his business. Such an appropriateness of name to calling is frequently quite accidental. "Sexton Brothers, Undertakers and Upholsterers," is the wording of a sign at Long Branch, and a dressmaker on Clinton street, New York, bears the name of N. Nadel (the German for needle). To those who understand German, Schneider will seem an equally appropriate name for a dressmaker, and there are plenty of butchers in town named Metzger, while at least one barber glories in the name of Scheerer. But it seems odd that a Baecker should deal in meat, or that even an Avenue A. Barber should sell beer.

However, when we hear of "Taylor & Cutter," a firm of clothiers, or find that "Stickwell & Co." are mucilage makers, there is a strong suspicion of an intentional manufacture of appropriate firm names. And that story about the broker firm of "U. Ketcham & I. Cheatham" has been told so often that one hardly knows whether to credit it or not.—New York Times.

Centralization of Government.

The history of the federal government is one of growing strength and influence. The difference between the intention of the founders of the system and of the existing fact is nearly as great as that between the opinions of Jefferson and moderate Federalists. From the first organization of the government to the present time there has been almost a steady advance toward centralization. This advance has been both aided and retarded by the supreme court; but in the legislative branch of the government and in the popular mind the proportions of the federal government have constantly grown larger. It has not been the tendency of the people of the republic to strengthen the local government at the expense of the general government. On the contrary, the general government has grown at the cost of the states.—Henry L. Nelson in Harper's.

The Nepalese "Kora."

The Nepalese "kukri", or heavy curved knife, with the edge on the inner side, is familiar by name to readers of the accounts of our "little wars," in which the Ghoorka infantry have taken part. But there is another Nepalese weapon, the "kora," the most strangely shaped sword ever used, which, starting from the hilt about an inch and a half wide, when near the end turns at right angles and expands to six inches. The late Jung Bahadur, a noted expert at all eastern arms and exercises, was able to decapitate a bullock with one blow of the kora.—Chambers' Journal.

Insects in Stored Grain.

The transformation and habits of the grain moth, black weevil and red grain beetle are about the same. The eggs are laid within the grain, both before and after it is gathered, and the mature insects come forth in three to six weeks after the eggs are laid. Their depredations are not confined to any one cereal, and by their work they cause a marked decrease in weight. Sulphur or salt sprinkled in husked corn will tend to drive the insects away.

The best remedy for grain insects is bisulphide of carbon. For this a "quarantine" bin should be built and the grain treated in it as gathered. The amount of bisulphide needed varies with the tightness of the bin, but as a rule 1 ounce of bisulphide to 100 pounds of grain is sufficient. As the bisulphide is explosive, all lights from matches, cigars and the like should be kept away until all odor from the fumes has passed off. Insects in mills should be treated with bisulphide, beginning in the basement and going upward. To destroy all insects in the spring with bisulphide in or near the empty granary will tend to decrease any damage done the next fall and winter.—Mississippi Station.

Speaking of the Late Queen.

James I disliked to hear encomiums lavished on his predecessor, "Le Roi Elizabeth," as the French called her, and always depreciated her when possible. On one occasion some one speaking of the late queen as a "most wise princess," James said sharply, "She had wise counselors." "And, please your majesty," said the speaker, "did ever a fool choose wise counselors?"—London Standard.

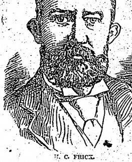
DEFECTIVE PAGE

H. C. FRICK SHOT.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE CARNEGIE COMPANY BADLY WOUNDED.

He Receives Two Bullet Wounds and Several Knife Stabs—While Not Yet Out of Danger the Chances Are in Favor of Recovery—A Detailed Account of the Attempted Murder.

PITTSBURG, July 23.—Henry C. Frick, the head chief and practically the absolute dictator of the iron industries of Western part of the state, and the possessor of a fortune variously estimated at from five to ten million dollars, was shot and perhaps fatally wounded a few seconds before 1:45 o'clock p. m.



H. C. FRICK.

DETAILS OF THE SHOOTING.

The Would-Be Assassin Premeditated the Cowardly Act.

PITTSBURG, July 24.—It was a few minutes before 2 o'clock p. m. when a dark-complexioned young man with a Jewish cast of countenance, of medium height and fairly well dressed, entered the elevator in The Chronicle-Times building, which is occupied by the Carnegie Steel company, and asked to be let off at Mr. Frick's office. The young man had been a frequent visitor during the past few days, and David Fortney, the elevator boy, thought nothing of the request, but stopped at the second floor and pointed out the way to the chairman's private room.

As was his custom, Mr. Frick took lunch at the Duquesne club at noon and returned to his office at 1:30 o'clock. The office of Mr. Leishman, a business partner of Mr. Frick, adjoins that of the chairman. Mr. Leishman came in, and the two were holding a private conference, no one else being in the room.

A few minutes before 2 o'clock Harry Heckle, the office boy, noticed a man hastily push open the swinging gate in the railing that runs between the public portion and the enclosure where the desks of the stenographers and clerks are located. There was no one near the private office and the boy hurried up to ask the intruder what he wanted, but he was too late, as the stranger had already entered the private apartment. As he entered the office Mr. Frick looked up, as did also Mr. Leishman, to see who it was. Mr. Frick was examining a bundle of papers. The man sprang within about five feet of Mr. Frick and, pulled the trigger. The first cartridge did not explode; the second shot entered the back of Mr. Frick's neck and, glancing downward, passed to the outside below the armpit. Frick made an exclamation and jumped to the window on Fifth avenue and tried in vain to open it. The assailant passed immediately in front of the desk, and approaching close to Mr. Frick fired again. The ball entered the muscles on the left side of the neck and passed around to a lodgment under the right ear, where it was later reached by the probe. At this instant Mr. Leishman threw himself on the would-be-assassin and wrestled for the possession of the revolver. Leishman grasped the weapon and turned the pistol upward as it exploded, the ball entering the plaster near the glass partition.

With agility the desperate man drew a dagger and attempted to stab Leishman, who was holding his assailant by the shoulder and body. Mr. Frick saw the gleam of the steel, and although staggered by the shock of his wounds and bleeding profusely, he jumped between the men and seized the man's arm. The latter freed himself from Leishman's grasp and into Frick's right side just above the hip, making an ugly wound three inches long. He made another lunge, and this time the knife struck higher up, but the point struck a rib and glanced down without inflicting much of an injury. Twice again was the knife thrust at Frick, but he was merely scratched at these last attempts to kill him. The struggle was in full view of those on the street.

By this time the office boys and Deputy Sheriff May, who just entered the office as the first shot was fired, threw themselves upon the assassin. May had drawn his revolver and was about to shoot the fellow in the back, when Frick cried out, "Don't kill him. We have got him all right. Leave him to the law." The man broke away and tried to escape, but was secured and taken to the central police station. The prompt action of Mr. Frick saved the lives of Mr. Leishman and his self-appointed executioner. In five minutes a half dozen surgeons were on hand. Mr. Frick was told to lie down on a lounge, and after his clothing had been removed the wounds were washed and the bleeding stopped. At 4 o'clock the bullets had been removed and at 7 he was taken to his home in the East End.

THE WOULD-BE MURDERER.

He Passes the Time Quietly in His Cell at the Police Station.

PITTSBURG, July 24.—The would-be murderer, Alexander Berkman, spent the night in cell No. 4 in the central station and awakening bright and early asked for some breakfast, particularly requesting that it should include some eggs. A good meal was given him, and after cleaning the plates he put on a clean laundried shirt, a stand up collar and a light tie; then he lit a cigarette. One of his first questions to the guard was concerning Mr. Frick, and when told that he was doing very well, shrugged his shoulders and said that he had nothing to say. Presently he asked what the people, laying stress upon the point that he did not mean the papers, thought of the affair. On being told that it was the general opinion that he had no ground for his action, he replied energetically:

All the people will soon think as I do. They say I am against the law, but I say that man was against the law. He was against the people and when he is against the people he is against the state and therefore against the law."

He went on to say that he had worked on a Russian as well as some German papers in New York, but would not give their names, although he reeled off the names of the proprietors and editors of the Staats Zeitung. He said that he left New York Thursday morning over the Baltimore and Ohio road. When asked if he came with the express intention of killing Mr. Frick, he replied: "Well, I say that Frick has killed many men and he has to suffer for it."

AN ANARCHIST PLOT.

Rumor That Many Persons Are Implicated in the Shooting of Mr. Frick.

PITTSBURG, July 25.—The police authorities are convinced that the attempted assassination of H. C. Frick was an anarchistic plot that may be as great in scope as that from which Spies and his companions were hanged. They have the names of a number of persons in New York, Long Branch, Hoboken and other places whom they think were implicated, and telegrams have been sent to have them arrested. Until they are in custody the names will not be made public, as the police fear the publications would defeat the ends of justice. Inspector McKelvy says they might be able to show that Herr Most was interested in the affair. A number of arrests will be made.

ANOTHER ARREST.

A Pittsburg Anarchist Charged with Complicity in the Shooting of Frick.

PITTSBURG, July 25.—Karl Knold, a local anarchist, has been arrested in connection with the attempted assassination of H. C. Frick. Berkman, the would-be murderer, stopped at Knold's residence for eight days before the commission of his crime. Knold admitted this to the police and said he knew nothing of Berkman. The latter wrote him on his arrival at Pittsburg and told him Most had given him his address and thereupon gave him lodgings. Knold said he knew nothing of Berkman's purpose. The police, however, doubt this and think now the attempted assassination was an anarchistic conspiracy and Berkman was the tool selected to carry out their purpose.

The condition of Mr. Frick continues to improve. The doctors examined his wounds during the evening and found that no symptoms of blood poisoning had developed. This is the extreme danger. Mr. Frick suffers considerable pain, but still insists on conducting the immense Carnegie business.

CAUSED MUCH FEELING.

Many Protests Against the Brutal Punishment of Private Iams.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., July 25.—An indirect result of the shooting of Mr. Frick gave Homestead its one exciting topic during the day. It was the case of W. L. Iams, the private of Company K, Tenth regiment, who shouted "hurrah for the man who did it," when told of the act of Berkman, and as punishment was strung up by his thumbs, had one side of his head and half his moustache shaved, and was drummed out of camp. In addition to this disgrace the sentence carries with it dishonorable discharge from the national guard and denial of the right to enlist in the federal army and the rights of citizenship. The Iams case threatens to become national. Homestead people talk of nothing else. Even the return of Hugh O'Donnell after his release from prison was subordinated by it. Letters and telegrams denouncing it have been received in Homestead, in Pittsburg and by the governor of Pennsylvania. One of the protests to Governor Pattison was from the Washington correspondents of Pennsylvania asking for the removal of Colonel Streator, who ordered the punishment of Iams.

Young Iams threatens to bring suit against Colonel Streator and General Snowden, but this is by no means the most serious aspect of the case if reports be true. It has caused much feeling in the national guard, particularly among the rank and file, and members of the Tenth regiment are authority for the statement that Company K, to which Iams belonged, will have to be disbanded because its members do not intend to re-enlist after their present term of enlistment has expired.

ADMITTED TO BAIL.

O'Donnell and Other Strikers Held in the Sum of $10,000.

PITTSBURG, July 25.—Hugh O'Donnell and the other strikers have been admitted to bail. The action of Judge Magee has been anticipated by those who heard the evidence adduced by the prosecution on Saturday. The court reviewed this evidence at length, cited the law on the question and announced as his conclusion that no case of murder in the first degree could be made out against the prisoner. It was apparent, he said, that O'Donnell was not an actual participant in the action. Bail was fixed at $10,000 in each case.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—In the house the sundry civil appropriation bill was again considered in committee of the whole, the pending amendment being the appropriation for the world's fair. The house proceeded to vote on the amendments. When the house got through with the various amendments of the senate it had concurred in the Sunday closing amendment and in the paragraph making appropriations for diplomas and medals, and had refused to concur in the $5,000,000 appropriation and every other substantial amendment.

Immediately upon the assembling of the senate the conference report on the fortifications bill was presented and agreed to, thus leaving only the sundry civil and the deficiency bills for action. At 2 o'clock the anti-option bill was taken up and discussed until 4:35 when it was laid aside temporarily. The sundry civil bill, with with the action of the house thereon, was laid before the senate and Messrs. Allison, Hale and Gorman were appointed conferees on the part of the senate. At 6 o'clock the senate went into executive session and adjourned.

Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—In the senate the morning hour was taken up by Mr. Allen, of Washington, on a local bill in regard to the Puyallup Indian reservation in that state. At 2 o'clock the anti-option bill was taken up and Senator Vest addressed the senate in opposition to the measure. He was followed by Senator Daniel, who spoke of the bill as a dangerous and dishonest measure. Mr. Daniel still had the floor when the senate adjourned.

Politics were tabooed in the house and the machinery of legislation, well oiled by a resolution from the committee on rules, ran with unusual smoothness. A number of measures were passed, the most important of which was a bill increasing the pay of the life-saving service men. The bill granting an American register to the steamer China was defeated. The commerce committee was authorized to investigate the Reading combine.

Thursday.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—The anti-option bill was debated for three hours and a half in the senate and went over without action. All the speeches were in opposition to the bill.

The house passed the Canadian retaliation bill without opposition. Several minor measures were also passed.

Friday.

WASHINGTON, July 22—In the senate Mr. White, of Louisiana, concluded his speech on the anti-option bill shortly before 5 o'clock, having occupied four and a half hours in its delivery. Mr. Davis, of Minnesota, by special request of the committee on foreign relations, asked consideration of the house bill providing retaliatory tolls to be made for the United States for the adjustment of discriminating tolls against the United States by Canada. The bill was unanimously passed and the senate bill on the same subject indefinitely postponed.

In the house, on motion of Mr. McMillin, Monday was set apart for the consideration of resolutions from the house committee on investigation of the pension office. The public land committee was accorded the floor, under the special rule, and recommended reimbursing the Des Moines river settlers in Iowa. Meeting opposition the bill was withdrawn.

Saturday.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The anti-option bill occupied the senate again all day, diversified only by a brief financial discussion over a proposed legal tender amendment to an important bill relating to judgments of the United States courts.

The senate amendments to the general deficiency bill occupied most of the time in the house, the French spoliation claims being discussed for two hours, the house disagreeing to this item, 79 to 119. The Indian depredation claims amounting to $478,252, as inserted by the senate, were agreed to by the close vote of 96 to 94.

Monday.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—In the senate Mr. George spoke in favor of his substitute for the hatch bill. George's bill does away with the license and revenue features, but provides that persons shall be fined not less than $5,000 on conviction of being a party to a transaction in which delivery is not contemplated. It is a mild document compared to the other and is specific in relieving farmers and merchants from restrictions. Its only effect is to prohibit fictitious sales.

Representative Lind, of Minnesota, made a speech in defense of General Raum in the house. The majority report condemning the commissioner of pensions was before the house for consideration.

Troops Withdrawn.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—General Schofield has received a dispatch from General Ruger at Wardner, Ida., stating that the situation of affairs there was so satisfactory that in his opinion most of the United States troops ordered there to preserve the peace could be withdrawn with safety. General Schofield immediately telegraphed General Ruger directing that the Twenty-second infantry from Fort Keogh and the Twenty-fifth infantry from Fort Missoula be ordered to return to their respective posts.

Fifty-two head of cattle were killed by lightning last week near Sanborn.

Three glandered horses were killed at Mapleton last week by order of the state board.

The total personal assessment in Minneapolis amounts to $20,460,556—an increase of nearly a million as compared with last year.

Minneapolis is to have a new dry goods house, one of the largest in the Northwest. The firm name will be Harrison, Hopworth & Cross.

Antonie Fratochand, living on Buffalo river, near Richwood, was shot and instantly killed by his uncle while deer hunting, being mistaken for a deer.

The commissioners of Mower county appropriated $500 at their last meeting to build a monument to the memory of the soldiers and sailors of the late war.

Reports from Highland Grove and Cromwell townships, Clay county, state much damage resulted to grain by hail Friday. Most of the farmers are insured.

Between twelve and fifteen teachers institutes will be opened in various parts of Minnesota during the month of August, which will continue until the month of October.

Goodhue county's barley crop has been badly damaged by storms. Senator Peterson estimates the loss to the farmers of the county through the lodging of grain at $500,000.

Gustave Hoagland, a carpenter living at Plato, while drunk went to sleep on the track. He was run over by a freight train and instantly killed, his body being severed in twain.

A drum corps, composed of seven brothers named Moore, the oldest aged 20 years, attended the Renville delegation to the People's party convention, and furnished music during the sittings.

T. V. Knavold and H. D. Brown, president of the Albert Lea bank, and other capitalists have decided to start a third national bank with a capital probably of $75,000. Negotiations are pending to erect a fine modern building.

Frank C. Best, a carpenter of Lakefield, and Henry Rhodes, a farmer living five miles from there, fell from a scaffolding while working on a barn, and Best was fatally injured, dying within two hours. Rhodes was not seriously hurt.

The biennial synod of the Lutheran church, in session at Richmond, Ind., accepted the offer of St. Paul, and will move its seminary to that city. St. Paul has offered seven acres of land and $5,000. The first outlay for building will be about $30,000.

At a meeting of directors at Red Wing T. B. Sheldon, of Red Wing, was elected president of the Duluth, Red Wing and Southern railway, to succeed F. W. Hoyt, deceased. H. E. Perkins was elected to fill the vacancy in the board of directors.

The twentieth anniversary of the "Blueberry war" at Brainerd was celebrated by a banquet at the Metropolitan hotel, St. Paul, Monday night, nearly two hundred of the participants were present. Governor Merriam and several other notables also lent their presence.

John G. Woolley will go to Europe in September, to be gone about three months. He goes at the request of Lady Somerset, and will deliver a series of addresses in England. Mr. Woolley is now supervising the proceedings of the convention at Rest island, in Lake Pepin.

A calf with two mouths, one eye, one nostril and otherwise deformed head, is the present excitement near Stewartville, on the farm of James Griffin. The body is perfectly formed and the calf healthy. This is the third freak of the kind Griffin has become possessed of. He has a good nucleus for a side show.

W. T. Mills, until lately a wholesale dealer in butter and eggs, in Mankato, has made a voluntary assignment to Loren Cray. The liabilities amount to $46,000. The failure is thought to be due to losses in business sustained several years ago. It is expected that creditors will be paid dollar for dollar.

The annual summer meeting of the Minnesota Horticultural society was held at Lake City last week, about fifty members being in attendance. There was a fine exhibit of summer fruits. A banquet, which included various toasts and responses, and a ride over the city and Rest island were given the visitors by the citizens.

Mrs. Converse and her daughter, Mrs. McClure, were terribly injured in a runaway about three miles from town while on the way home from High Forest. The back part of the buggy seat tipped over when the team started. Mrs. Converse had her collar bone and shoulder fractured. Mrs. McClure sustained serious injuries about the head and shoulders.

The Minnesota commissioners will prepare a complete exhibit of all the native grasses in the state at the world's fair—about 120 in number. It is also intended to make a complete entomological collection. Most of the bugs are to be found in the collections already extant, so that the state would be at very little expense in making this collection.

Charles Dablow, a farmer near Morris, and an ex-member of Company D, Forty-second Illinois volunteer infantry, in the late war, had a musket ball extracted from his head last week, which he has carried since the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 20, 1863. The ball entered just above the right temple, and was taken out just back of the right ear.

The trustees of the Minneapolis Educational Endowment association have decided to close its business, provided a majority of its members are in favor of such a measure, and have sent out circulars to all members, giving the reasons why this course is deemed best for all concerned. If a majority favor it a receiver will be asked for, and the assets, amounting to $62,548, will be paid back to shareholders pro rata.

LAID LOW BY FIRE.

VILLAGE OF IRON RIVER, WIS., ALMOST TOTALLY DESTROYED.

With the Exception of One or Two Buildings the Entire Town in Ruins—Fifteen Hundred People Without Shelter and in Most Cases Without Food.

MARQUETTE, Mich., July 25.—The village of Iron River, Wis., was practically destroyed by fire which broke out about o'clock p. m. in the hotel. With the exception of one or two buildings the town is in ruins, 1,500 people are without shelter and in many cases without food. Little is left of what twenty-four hours ago was one of the most prosperous mill towns. The total property loss aggregates $200,000 with very little insurance. The Northern Pacific station and an engine and half a dozen cars, belonging to the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic, were also burned. As soon as the news was received here General Manager Fitch, of the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic, ordered the Lake Superior limited train, which was on its way to the west, to pick up the coaches at Ironton and take them to Iron River and rescue the women and children. When the extent of the calamity became known Mr. Fitch issued orders to collect provisions at Sidney, Ewen and Trout Creek and send them to Iron River on the Duluth express, thus providing at least a breakfast for the burned out people. Men, women and children are huddled about the ruins of their home. Many of the poorer residents are absolutely destitute. A few people have sought refuge in the saw mill near the town. Those who saved provisions from the flames are dividing with the less fortunate, but even this cannot prevent many families going hungry.

FIFTEEN DEAD.

A Colliery Explosion in Pennsylvania Causes a Serious Loss of Life.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., July 24.—An explosion of gas occurred on the tunnel of the first lift of the New York Farm colliery at 11 o'clock a. m., by which fifteen men are known to have been killed outright and one is lying at the point of death at his home. Of the dead two are still in the mine covered with debris.

Prominent officials superintended the removal of the debris and the recovery of the bodies of the unfortunate men and at the same time instituted a thorough investigation as to the cause of the explosion. It is said the explosion was caused by gas liberated by a blast on the second lift, rushing through the first lift where it was ignited. There is no criminal carelessness on the part of any of the employes or officials.

VERY TORRID WEATHER.

Many Prostrations from Heat Occur in Chicago, Thirteen Resulting Fatally.

CHICAGO, July 25.—There were more fatalities and prostrations by heat in the city Monday than on any day during the present season. At 7 o'clock in the morning the temperature was 80 degs. and rose gradually until 10 o'clock when it registered 87 degs. At noon it was 90 and between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon there was a steady temperature of 94. The greatest number of sunstrokes, as shown by the police records, occurred betweed 10 a. m. and 5 p. m. Following is the list of the dead whose names have been reported to the police:

FRED BRANKAKE.
MISS KATE MULVEY.
DENNIS KELLEY.
FRED RALSTROM.
OTTO BECK.
ANTON BOKR.
JOHN MCGRATH.
PATRICK ORMSBY.
NELLY KEMHIS.
Four unknown men.

In addition to the above about twenty-five others were prostrated, many of whom will die.

THESE GET PLUMS.

A Batch of Diplomatic Nominations Sent to the Senate.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The president has sent to the senate the following nominations:

Andrew D. White, of New York, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia.

A. Louden Snowden, of Pennsylvania, (now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Greece, Roumania and Servia) to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Spain.

Truxtun Seale, of California, (now minister resident and consul general of the United States to Persia) to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Greece, Roumania and Servia.

HARRITY FOR CHAIRMAN.

The Democratic National Committee Meets at New York and Elects Officers.

NEW YORK, July 22.—The Democratic national committee met here, Chairman Brice presiding. W. F. Harrity, of Pennsylvania, was elected as the new chairman of the committee, and S. P. Sheerin, of Indiana, was re-elected secretary.

Listoe Gets a Consulship.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—The president sent to the senate the following nominations: To be consuls of the United States: F. B. Loomis, of Ohio, at St. Etienne; Soren Listoe, of Minnesota, at Dusseldorf, and a lot of army and navy promotions.

Militia Ordered Home.

HOMESTEAD, July 25.—Two of the national guard have been ordered home and it is possible that the main body of the soldiers will be withdrawn in a few days.

A Fearful Alternative.

"Protection is doomed!" is the exclamation of those who are trying to make party capital out of recent strikes and riots. Very well, then, let us have Grover Cleveland and free trade. And after we get Grover Cleveland and free trade, after protection shall be no more, we shall then see whether everybody will have plenty and content, and be happy therein; whether there never will be any further trouble about wages; whether strikes and riots will be no more; whether there will be no further accumulation of wealth on the one hand or examples of poverty on the other.—Portland Oregonian.

Some Complications of Free Trade.

It ought to be evident from this showing that free trade, which on the fiscal side will only tax a larger number of persons and on the industrial side will only increase importations and add a new factor to domestic competition, will not prove the industrial and social panacea which it is represented to be. We need but point to Great Britain for confirmation of our contention. No country in the world is more vexed with social and industrial questions than Great Britain, and most of them have arisen since the adoption of free trade.—Detroit Tribune.

"The Imperial Cleveland Party."

Fusion of the Democratic and People's parties, in addition to having been perfected in Kansas, is likely to take place in Minnesota, the Dakotas, Iowa and Nebraska. Why not make it universal? In the matter of what passes for principles there is really very little to choose between these two parties. As for the name of the new amalgamated association, we beg leave to suggest the Imperial Cleveland party.—New York Morning Advertiser.

How Republicans Will Feel.

On the whole there is going to be plenty of fun in this campaign. There are unusual complications and a good many of them. All who enjoy the fray can have a hand in it, and it will be instructive and entertaining all the time. The Republicans will fight with good heart and hope and feel all the time like the man safe on shore who finds a certain pleasure in the struggles of those tossed about on the high sea.—Hartford Post.

The Boys Know It.

There is nothing really inconsistent in the attitudes of Headsman Stevenson and Platitudinizer Cleveland in regard to the distribution of public offices. To be sure the motto of Adlai is "To the victor belongs the spoils," while Grover proclaims solemnly that "Public office is a public trust." But both utterances mean the same thing in the end, and the Democratic boys know it.—New York Press.

Facts About American Tin.

The Pittsburg and Mexico Tin Mining company, whose mines are at Portillos, Colo., near Durango, recently sent a carload of good tin to New York. Three tin mines are now being worked by this company. The ore, after being washed, effecting a certain amount of concentration, shows 40 per cent. of tin. Operations are to be pushed on a large scale.—Denver Miner.

A Tariff Picture.

In 1860 the day wages of the Mason Machine works, at Taunton, Mass., one of the largest iron mills in New England, averaged $1.05 per day of eleven hours' work, or 9.54 cents an hour. Now they average $1.71 per day of ten hours' work, or 17.1 cents per hour.—New York Press.

A Straddle Plank.

The tendency of the Democrats to go to the people with false promises is shown in the decision to delay the passage of the free lumber and free iron ore bills until after the election, because of the danger their passage would cause the party in North Carolina, Alabama and Tennessee. Their plank is a straddle.—York (Pa.) Dispatch.

Just Plain Dennis After Nov. 8.

The Biblical interpretation of the name of Adlai, according to the Democratic theologians, is variously given as "The Just" and "My Ornament," but in the latter day lingo of the United States Mr. Stevenson's name will be just plain Dennis about the time the polls close the evening of Nov. 8.—St. Louis Star Sayings.

An Expensive Bauble.

It is intimated that Calvin S. Brice's term as chairman of the national Democratic committee cost him nearly $500,000. If these figures are correct it is not so difficult to understand Brother Brice's modest refusal to accept a reelection. He knows when he has got enough.—New York Press.

It Will Increase the Lead.

The Democratic boast that Illinois will be the battle ground of the canvass will serve merely to make the Republican lead in the state larger than it has been in any recent presidential year.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Education Helps the Republican Party.

It was entirely proper that President Harrison should address the National Educational association. Education is doing a great work for the Republican party, as well as for the country.—Kansas City Journal.

Democratic Ticket Ought to Suit.

This talk of the socialists about nominating a presidential ticket of their own is foolish. What is the matter with the Democracy as a socialist and anarchist party?—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

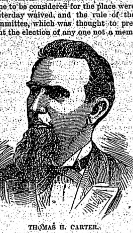
Of Course; Why Not?

Every political newspaper in England, Tory and Liberal, stands squarely up for Cleveland and Stevenson, and never loses an opportunity to ridicule Harrison and Reid.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

CHAIRMAN CARTER.

What Leading Newspapers Think of the Republican Campaign Director.

In choosing Mr. Carter as its chairman the Republican national committee selected a leader of whose competency and fitness there can be no doubt. Mr. Carter was one of the five men originally proposed as chairman when the committee first met for the purpose of organization at Washington. The personal reasons which induced him to decline to be considered for the place were yesterday waived, and the rule of the committee, which was thought to prevent the election of any one not a member, followed Mr. Carter's objections. Republicans will say with one accord that they are glad to be rid of both the objections and the rule, and that they will follow the leadership of this ardent, strong and popular chairman with complete confidence that he will carry them to victory.



THOMAS H. CARTER.

Mr. Carter possesses certain characteristics that justify this assurance. He is cool. He does not lose his head. His perceptions are quick, his instincts sure, his judgment is safe and his resolution ready. Few men in the country are more widely or pleasantly known to those on whom falls the burden of political campaigning. To the workers of the party therefore his selection will come with an especially strong feeling of satisfaction. He has never been a factionist. There is no side, no element, no following with which he is not entirely friendly. This is not due to the fact that he lacks decision of character or the force to back his opinions and preferences.

But he has the great knack of getting along pleasantly with his fellow men, of achieving his purposes without giving offense and of holding his friendships firmly while always increasing their number. He will make a good chairman—of that we are more than sure. He will make a good leader, valiant, loyal and inspiring. And he will be able to obtain from the body of distinguished gentlemen who elected him to be their official head that degree of work which is the full measure of any committee's capacity. It will be united, earnest, steady, systematic work. It will be work of honest men, intense Republicans and scientific politicians. And it will win!—New York Tribune.

He Won't Please Democrats.

We fancy that the Democratic newspapers will not be satisfied with the election of Mr. Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, as chairman of the Republican national committee. It may be assumed, we think, that almost any other person would have suited them better. But the Republicans will try to get along with Mr. Carter, although of course they are always ready to acknowledge the candor and wisdom of Democratic suggestions in regard to the management of Republican campaigns.—Wilmington (Del.) News.

Just the Man for the Place.

The selection of Hon. Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, by the Republican national executive committee as national chairman will meet the hearty indorsement of all Republicans. Although a young man, Mr. Carter is well known among the great workers of the party as a Republican of ability and energy, and just the man for such a position. As an organizer he has few equals; he is a tireless worker and his efforts will show good results in the northwest.—Pottsville (Pa.) Journal.

Wait Until Election Night.

"Who's Carter?" It is the Utica Observer which asks this idle question. Late on election night next November—say about 1:15 o'clock the next morning—the editor of The Observer as he surveys the more or less picturesque ruins of the Cleveland ticket will have the fact impressed upon his soul with considerable distinctness that he recollects who Carter is.—New York Tribune.

A Tireless Worker and Organizer.

Mr. Carter is a tireless worker. His organizing capacity is well known. He is one of those Republicans who is known as the most loyal of President Harrison's friends. He has wide acquaintance with the men who are leaders of Republicanism in the states where the presidential election will be most hotly contested.—Chester (Pa.) News.

Honest Confession Is a Great Relief.

The New York Sun wants Mr. Cleveland to write a letter to Senator Gorman frankly acknowledging that he and not Gorman was responsible for the attempt to straddle the tariff at St. Louis four years ago. While Mr. Cleveland is writing that letter he ought also to explain who suggested the tariff straddle proposed at Chicago several weeks ago, when his friend Vilas fought so valiantly against an honest free trade expression.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Sad Contrast.

The Democratic party has not had an Illinois man on its national ticket since 1860, when Douglas ran for president, and the contrast between Douglas and Stevenson shows how sadly said party has deteriorated.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

POWDERLY'S VIEWS.

Some of the Democratic papers are still trying to make political capital out of the Homestead trouble, but the following article from the pen of T. V. Powderly shows that the statements made by the democratic press are so ridiculous that even the most unsophisticated workmen can not be hoodwinked by them. Among other things Mr. Powderly says:

Partisan papers are endeavoring to make political capital out of the terrible scenes which took place at Homestead the other day. The Democratic papers are vehement in their denunciation of the Republican party for enacting a tariff law under which protection was afforded to manufacturers. There is no love for workingmen in the hearts of these editors; a desire to serve party interests alone actuates them. Let us review the situation in brief. Tariff laws could not be passed without discussion, and in all of the debates which took place in congress over the Mills and McKinley bills I cannot find that a single amendment was offered by a Democrat to give the workmen a certain portion of the tariff when collected. The Mills bill and the McKinley bill differ very little in the duty on steel rails, plates, etc. One was a Democratic bill the other a Republican. The McKinley bill reduced the duty on the articles manufactured at Homestead, and Democratic papers, in asserting that the trouble at that point is due to the McKinley bill are but condemning the very thing that they themselves advocate—a reduction of the tariff. The Pinkertons existed before the Mills bill was introduced in congress and that institution continues to flourish now that the McKinley bill is in force. Whether the tariff goes up or down, disputes between employer and employed would continue. Workmen are not the fools that politicians believe them to be, for we do not feel that the coming of the millenium depends upon the way congress legislates on the tariff.

If our Democrats who are so eager to make political capital out of the difficulty will lend me their ears, I will whisper to them that Representative Watson, of Georgia, has had a measure before congress for the last four or five months which aims at the abolition of the Pinkertons as a factor in the industrial life of the United States. The Democratic party has a sweeping majority in congress; it has a full knowledge of the acts of the Pinkertons on previous occasions. I have presented evidence enough to congress to prove that the Pinkerton is an enemy to American liberty. That Democratic majority has a knowledge of the existence of Watson's bill, and it has up to the present time dillied and dallied with it and has no idea of passing it. "We have petitioned for redress," have endeavored to get the ear of congress, but "our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury," and civil war at Homestead. Democratic editors who now rave about the Pinkertons and condemn the Republican party for their actions at Homestead would lend an air of sincerity to their writings if they would but demand of the majority, held by their own party in congress to pass the law which will wipe the Pinkertons from the soil of America.

WHY FUSION FAILED.

St. Paul Globe, July 19, 1892:—Those honest and sincere, if, as the Globe thinks, mistaken men in the state, whether Republicans or Democrats, who will now cast a useless vote for Mr. Weaver, are entitled to know exactly why the fusion proposed by the Globe failed. Those Democrats in the state who either supported or opposed the proposition to fuse are entitled to know just what was proposed and why it did not carry. Those misguided men who look to Ignatius Donnelly as the incarnation of political purity and unselfishness, and have expected to support his ambition, are also entitled to know why fusion failed.

The proposition submitted to Mr. Donnelly was that the Democrats should name four men of such character and reputation and party loyalty as to put their Democracy beyond all question, for electors on the People's ticket. The Alliance should be allowed to name one elector. The People's convention should name four. It was to be distinctly understood that no elector by this fusion should represent anything else but the principles of his party. There should be in it no fusion of principles.

Mr. Donnelly added as a condition that he be indorsed for governor. This broke off the interview. The following evening he sought the party who had made the proposition and said his committee rejected all fusion, but that they would name electors and pledge them not to vote for Harrison, thus depriving the Republicans of the state, if the Democrats would indorse him for governor. The offer was rejected.

This conduct is characteristic of Donnelly. It heads in his intense selfishness and ambition. These have lost him what standing he had ever acquired in any party to which he has attached himself, and they will lose him his present following as soon as it gets to know him. He was willing to get electors' votes for Weaver; he was equally willing to sacrifice Weaver unless he, too, could be secured. He was willing that the remainder of his ticket should suffer the fate of the hindmost if only he were taken care of. The Globe commends these facts to the serious consideration of these men whom Donnelly and Fish are playing for their selfish purposes. It especially commends them to the Democrats among them, if there are any.

MR. CLEVELAND'S LATEST.

New York Press: No one can say henceforth that Mr. Cleveland is not unreservedly in favor of the Confederate free trade plank in the Chicago platform. In the latest letter from the chronic candidate up to the hour of going to press he affirms his devotion to absolute free trade, with an unqualified fervor which must add to his already great popularity in British manufacturing circles. In this epistle Mr. Cleveland declares that no sincere advocate of honest tariff can be dissatisfied with the position the Democratic party has assumed on that subject; and he asserts that "none need fear that the contest will not be made in the lines laid down, which have already proved so acceptable to a great majority of the people."

This is sufficiently explicit to satisfy the most exacting Mugwump. The position which the Democracy has taken is stated in the following extract from its platform:

"We believe it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the federal government has no constitutional power to enforce and collect tariff duties except for purposes of revenue only."

These are the lines which Mr. Cleveland declares have been "laid down," and it is certain that no matter how much the shrewd managers of the Democratic party would like to evade the issue, the fight will be waged squarely between protection and free trade.

This plank, with which Mr. Cleveland thinks no good Democrat can be dissatisfied, commits the Democracy unconditionally to warfare against the industries of the United States. It would abolish the barrier that keeps out the products of labor working at from one-third to one-half the American rate of wages. The American wage worker would have to descend to the level of the European laborer if this Democratic declaration of principles were carried into effect; the entire fabric of American industries, of which protection is the keystone, would necessarily be reconstructed on the basis of cheaper labor and longer hours.

The Republican party accepts Mr. Cleveland's challenge. They are willing to fight the battle on the issue of independence against poverty, of high wages against low wages, of American interests against foreign interests, and they have no fear of the result.

LEGAL RIGHTS AND MORAL OBLIGATIONS.

New York Press:—A contemporary which is unable to see any justice on the side of the late employes of the Carnegie works at Homestead asserts, after commenting upon the progress of labor from the time when the laborer was little better than a chattel, that "employers have not lost all their rights because laborers have won many new ones."

Why not put it plainly and state that, as to rights, there is neither difference nor distinction between employer and employed? The laborer of to-day may be the employer of to-morrow, but his rights do not change on that account. He is the same individual, with exactly the same rights under the law, as before. The man using millions of dollars in the employment of thousands of persons has exactly the same rights as the poorest employe on his pay-roll.

We hear a great deal about the rights of capital. Capital has no rights save the rights which every form of property has under the law. The dollar in the laborer's pocket is equally under the protection of law with the millions in a safe deposit company's vaults. The right in the one dollar is exactly the same as the right in the millions. An employer has no rights as an employer distinct from his rights as a citizen, and the same is true of the employe. The law knows no distinction between Mr. Frick and Mr. Hugh O'Donnell.

But there are moral obligations and moral claims which neither employer nor employe can afford to ignore. These obligations and claims go back to the golden rule, to the Sermon on the Mount; they go back to the origin of humanity itself. The man or set of men that ignores these obligations may not incur any legal penalty or violate any law. But he does violate that sense of justice and of fairness implanted in the human heart which should guide and temper the administration of law.

THE SHOOTING of H. C. Frick, at Homestead, last week was a dastardly deed, and its effect will be disastrous to the cause of labor even though it was not done by any one directly interested in the question in controversy nor was it approved by them. There seems to be in this country a gang of anarchists whose ideas of liberty are extremely crude, to say the least, and they always take the opportunity afforded by these labor agitations to get in their nefarious work, and this work is always to the disadvantage of the cause of labor. That labor has its equal rights with capital no one disputes, but that the rights of labor can ever get proper recognition by the red hand of anarchy we deny, and even if capitalists could be annihilated by anarchy the state of things thus brought about would be fully as disastrous to labor as to capital. Capital is as essential to labor as is labor to capital, both have their rights before the law and any system that attempts to regulate and establish the equity between them without recognizing this fact, in this free country will miserably fail. It is just as essential to the interests of labor to see such miscreants as the attempted assassin of Frick justly punished as it is to capital, and it is also to the interest of labor to keep all such anarchists out of the ranks.

Minneapolis Evening Journal:—There are lots of cowards in the world, and a good many of them find their way to the newspaper offices with communications signed "Taxpayer," "Citizen," "Old Resident," or something of that kind. They are generally people who have a grievance. They want to to "roast" somebody but they wouldn't have that somebody find it out for anything—"because it might make trouble, you know." But they expect the newspapers to print their anonymous screeds and accept whatever consequences there may be. These are the same people who are always complaining that the newspapers dare not print what they think—do not dare to express their real opinions. The waste-paper basket of the newspaper offices are filling up with their effusions.

The Marshall County Banner, the People's party organ for Marshall county, makes the following statement: "Our reporter attended the Republican caucus at the city hall last Saturday. He reports that the meeting was attended by about sixty voters, all of whom wore Republican badges. Upon inquiry we were not a little surprised to find that many of our heretofore true blue Alliance men had wandered away again and found political solace in the ranks of the old parties. We are pained to realize this state of affairs, and we earnestly hope that our wayward brothers will in due time see the errors of their ways and return to the ranks."

Marshall County Banner:—The St. Hilaire Spectator has always been a strong republican journal. For the past month the Spectator has been a quasi People's party paper. Hon. Frank Ives, the People's party candidate for judge, is the father of the editor of the Spectator and so far has not come out unequivocally for the People's party; or as it appears, editor Ives is yet undecided whether he will support his father or not. This is strange consistency.

W. W. ERWIN, of St. Paul, and G. W. Arno, of Sioux City, have been engaged by the St. Paul labor unions to go to Homestead and defend the strikers who have been arrested. These two attorneys are a strong legal team, and were engaged by the defense in the Haddock murder case at Sioux City. They have offered their services free of charge, if the labor unions will pay their necessary expenses.

SPEAKING of the crops in Marshall and Kittson counties, the Hallock News says: "Almost every farmer has at least a portion of his crop in good condition while the rest is rather late. The fact that the grain as a general rule is not very heavy will make it possible for it to ripen quickly. Unless we have early frost the farmers will come out in fairly good shape this year."

ONE of the bitterest and most hotly contested campaigns ever fought was that which closed with the election in Manitoba last Saturday. The issue was national versus separate schools. The position of the government and its opponents briefly is defined as follows: The government is in favor of a provincial nondenominational system and is opposed to maintenance in whole or in part of separate Roman Catholic schools out of general funds. Opposition formerly supported separate schools, but executed a flank movement, and declare themselves substantially in accord with the government on this question, though they want the power of appeal removed. They also have the scandal charge against the government, and the issues were warmly discussed. The Greenway government was returned to power by a small majority, and the national school comes out triumphant—as it should.

THE secretary of state annonces that settlement has been reached between the United States and Chili as to the indemnity to be paid by the latter on account of the assault upon the crew of the Baltimore. Seventy-five thousand dollars in gold is to be distributed among families of the two men who lost their lives and to the surviving members of the crew who were wounded.

THERE have been enough Nelson delegates elected to warrant the assertion that Knute Nelson will be nominated for governor by the republican state convention which meets in St. Paul to-day.

RAMSEY COUNTY elected McGill delegates to the state convention and now that gentleman may be considered fairly before the convention. But Nelson has the country delegates behind him.

Fertile Journal:—Knute Nelson arrived home last week from Dwight, Ill., where he went to be treated for the drink habit. Mr. Nelson returned a cured man, and says he feels like a different person.

CLAPP INTERVIEWED.

He Does Not Say That He Would Refuse the Nomination for Congressman.

DULUTH, July 16th.—Attorney Gen. Clapp was interviewed to-day in regard to accepting the Seventh district congressional nomination, which seems likely to be tendered him, as four counties have already elected delegates and instructed them for him although he is not a candidate.

"While the action of these counties is very pleasing to me in one sense," said Gen. Clapp, "I do not see how I can be considered in the race. If I have any residence in the district it is in Fergus Falls, and Otter Tail county has been instructed for Corliss. I was not a candidate, and the fact that my own county is instructed for another, of course, precludes me from being a candidate now. I hardly think I will be nominated, and it is useless to discuss what I would do in case I were nominated.

Walled Cities of Italy.

Necessarily the romantic and historical charm of English walled cities is but small compared with that of continental cities. The walls of Rome, for instance, are standing monuments of the city's history from the earliest times to within the last half century; but owing to the extraordinary character and variety of other antiquarian objects, they hardly come in for that share of the visitor's attention which they deserve. Yet an inspection of them, with their ancient and medieval gates, the many styles of their construction, each pointing to a particular period of their history, their size and strength, their odd little nooks and corners and their picturesqueness, is worth a journey, which convinces the stranger that they would form the chief attraction of any other city but Rome.

Indeed, as is not surprising, Italy is a nest of ancient walled towns, and we may note all degrees of grandeur, from the still formidable looking zones which surround Genova La Soperba or Firenze La Bella to the quaint little lines of fortifications which zigzag up the vine clad hillsides of the north coast of the Mediterranean, surrounding in many instances mere villages, but speaking eloquently to us of those hard, stirring times when the hand of every man was against his neighbor.—Cor. Chicago Herald.

Persian Swords.

The swords of Hindostan are of endless variety in size and shape, the most common being the "tegha" and "talwar," broad, much curved blades, wrongly styled scimitars, the real scimitar being a clumsy chopperlike weapon, nearly straight and widening to the point. There is the "khanda," a heavy straight sword with basket hilt, like the Scottish claymore. The khanda was an object of worship to the Rajputs, precisely as to the Scythians. The "pata," or gauntlet sword, much used by the Mahrattas, was a development of the "katar," having a long rapier blade, often of Spanish make, and a cylindrical hilt, into which the arm was passed to the elbow. The Persian sword, however, was valued above all others, and particularly those of Khorassan.

These are the real "Damascus blades," the damascening being produced by the crystallization of the steel. Connoisseurs recognize ten different varieties of watering or "jauhar," and the most incredible prices have been given for fancy specimens. But the great brittleness of these swords makes them unfit for use by Europeans, who would shiver them to pieces by a "swashing blow," while the oriental employs their razor edge only for the "drawing" cut.—Chambers' Journal.

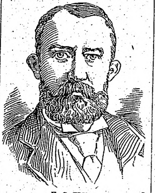
THE HOMESTEAD WAR

MEN FIGURING PROMINENTLY IN THE PENNSYLVANIA LABOR TROUBLES.

H. C. Frick's Rise from Poverty to Wealth—The Brothers Who Are at the Head of the Pinkerton Agency Carefully Guarded.

Frick and Pinkerton are two names that have been in everybody's mouth for weeks past. Even Gladstone and Salisbury are less talked of. Mr. Frick, the responsible manager of the great Carnegie company, has an uneventful history, but that of the Pinkertons is like a serial romance, with occasional touches of comedy and many of blood curdling tragedy.

H. C. Frick was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1850, and began life with no capital but good health, a good education and unyielding tenacity of purpose. His firmness, now called obstinacy by the Homestead people, stood him in good stead in his days of toiling upward. He acquired a large fortune, chiefly in making coke, and when Andrew Carnegie retired from active business he selected Mr. Frick for president of the Edgar Thompson Steel company. On July 2 he became president of the Carnegie Steel association and at once brought the issue with the workmen to a head.

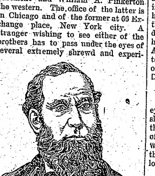


H. C. FRICK.

"The Pinkertons" is a phrase which now means the organization, not the family. It was formed by Allan Pinkerton, who was born Aug. 25, 1819, in Glasgow, Scotland, and died in Chicago July 1, 1884. In early life he figured in some Chartist riots and had to fly to the United States. While working as a cooper in western Illinois he discovered the retreat of a gang of counterfeiters and managed their capture so cleverly that he soon became a noted detective. In 1852 he and Edward L. Rucker, a lawyer, began the organization of the "Pinkerton Detective Agency."

The business has grown far beyond mere detective work, and the Pinkertons are now practically a standing army, ready to be employed by any bank, railroad or corporation, and as such several states have legislated against them. Their exploits at Braidwood, Ills., during the miners' strike, in Jersey City during the coal handlers' strike, in Pennsylvania among the Molly Maguires, and elsewhere, are fresh in public mind. In Missouri they lost five men while hunting for the James boys.

They are themselves more afraid of bombs than anything else, and their headquarters are like sentineled fortresses. Of Allan's eight children only three survived him, and of these Robert A. Pinkerton manages the eastern department and William A. Pinkerton the western. The office of the latter is in Chicago and of the former at 66 Exchange place, New York city. A stranger wishing to see either of the brothers has to pass under the eyes of several extremely shrewd and experienced men, he is expected to carry no big package of any sort with him and if he has any arms on his person there is sure to be a man within grabbing distance of him while he talks. He may not know it, but the man is there just the same. In fact, the Pinkertons do not intend to get knifed or blown up if vigilance will prevent it.



ALLAN PINKERTON.

Mr. Frick had evidently foreseen a serious contact with his workmen and prepared accordingly. He had broken up the union among the employees of the Edgar Thompson Steel company and had defeated the strikers in the McConnellsville coke region, and thus earned the hatred of the Amalgamated association. He had also gained experience, and his every move shows that he anticipated a long struggle.

The Census of Costa Rica.

A general census of the republic of Costa Rica, recently completed, shows a population of 243,205 souls. San Jose is the most populous province, with 76,718 inhabitants, and Guanacache is the most sparsely settled, with only 20,049 dwellers on its broad acres. The district of Punta Arenas is accredited with 12,167 people, and Port Limon with only 7,484. There has been great development as well as a large increase in population since the Costa Rica railroad was built.

IN AN OLD CEMETERY.

She sits upon the worn old grave,
And gayly uses as a pillow
The battered headstone, rudely carved
With funeral urn and weeping willow.

The epitaph she puzzles out,
With words and laughter light and mocking,
Displaying well a dainty shoe,
And quite an inch of silken stocking.

She jests about the curious name,
The verses with quaint old phrases laden;
And yet—what if in future years
Some saucy Twentieth century maiden

Upon a summer afternoon—
An ancient cemetery choosing—
Should flirt upon her grave, and think

Willing to Sell Cheap.

An amusing incident happened in a southern city court the other day. A Jew was on the witness stand testifying against a negro who had stolen a pair of pantaloons from his store.

"How much are the pants worth?" asked Judge Thompson.

"Well, judge," responded the witness, "it depends on the man who wants to buy them: I sell them to one man for six dollars, to another for five dollars, but you can have them for four dollars."

"Sir," responded his honor, in a disgusted tone of voice, "I want you to tell me what those pants are worth."

"Ah, judge," said the Israelite, "take 'em for three dollars if four dollars don't suit you."

"Look here," thundered the judge, "if you don't tell me the exact value of those pants I will send you to jail for contempt of court."

"Well, then, judge," pleaded the obtuse witness in a most insinuating tone of voice, "take 'em for two dollars. It is giving them away almost, but you can have 'em for two dollars."

By this time the people in the court room were convulsed with laughter and the judge himself was obliged to forget his disgust and join heartily in the laugh. He did not buy the "pants," however.—Green Bag.

Reasoning Power of Ants.

One morning a gentleman of many scientific attainments sat quietly and alone at his breakfast. Presently he noticed that some large black ants were making free with the contents of the sugar bowl. He drove them away, but they soon returned, seemingly unwilling to leave their sweetened feast. Again they were dispersed, only to return in increased numbers. There was a lamp hook directly above the center of the table, and, to try their ingenuity, the gentleman suspended the sugar bowl to the hook with a cord, allowing it to swing clear of the table about an inch.

First the sagacious little creatures tried to reach it by standing on each other's backs. After repeated efforts all of which were failures, they went away and it was supposed that they had given up in despair. Within a surprisingly short time, however, they were seen descending the cord by dozens and dropping themselves into the sugar bowl. They had scaled the wall, traversed the ceiling and discovered another road to the treasure.—St. Louis Republic.

Different Terms for the Same Things.

Among the peculiarities of so called pure English, nothing is more singular than the difference between the names given to footwear. In America a boot is something which comes nearly up to the knee, while in England anything above a low cut shoe is invariably described as a boot. The same peculiarity exists in regard to hose. In England the only two words used are stockings and socks, the difference being entirely in the length of the leg, and the word half hose being purely American. In the trade in this country there are three distinctions—the stocking, a sock and half hose. There is no ribbed top to the American sock, and there are other technical differences which are unheard of in the old country.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Odd Ideas of Beauty.

An African beauty must have small eyes, thick lips, a large, flat nose and a skin beautifully black. In New Guinea the nose is perforated and a large piece of wood or bone inserted. On the northwest coast of America an incision more than two inches long is made in the lower lip, filled with a wooden plug.

In Guinea the lips are pierced with thorns, the head of the thorn being inside the mouth and the point resting on the chin.—Jenness Miller Illustrated.

A Bay Window Plant.

Cobea scandens is a pretty thing for a bay window. It is a very rapid grower and a good specimen will soon fill up all the space. Its flowers are purple, shading to green, large and bell shaped. Give it a large pot or box to grow in and plenty of water if fully exposed to the light.—Exchange.

An Invitation for One.

An Atchison man had so much trouble with his girl's sisters, who insisted on accompanying them everywhere, that he proposed to her in their presence after first explaining to the others that it was an invitation that could not possibly include them.—Atchison Globe.

It is always safe to fight against a cold by external applications, as camphorated oil rubbed upon the throat and chest and between the shoulders—this is admirable for children; or vaseline similarly applied.

The flowers that lead as providers of popular perfumes for the handkerchief and toilet are the jasmine, violet, tuberose, rose, bitter orange flower and cassia.

WHY REPUBLICANS.

A North Dakota Farmer Wins a Prize in Answering This Question.

The La Moure, N. D., Chronicle says: Some weeks since B. F. Spaulding, chairman of the Republican state central committee of North Dakota offered a prize of $30.00 to the North Dakota farmer who should write the most merit ious article on "Why North D ta Farmer Should be epublican," and a prize of $10.00 for he second best article. The best rize was awarded to Charles E. towers, of Wheatland, Cass county. Ir. Stowers' article is as follows:

"In giving a reason why the farmers of North Dakota should vote with the Republican party we shall only advance the economic reasons for such action. To better understand the present conditions under which the farmer labors it is necessary to go back and view the history of things. Our early industrial history is the history of a foreign plantation. As a result the natural balance between the different branches of human effort was disturbed. Where an unnatural number were engaged in agriculture there naturally accumulated a surplus of agricultural products, which resulted in lowering the price of the labor so engaged.

"The countries of the old world, by reason of their capital and long establishment prevented the surplus of agricultural labor from engaging in manufactures. They made it diffi lt for farmers to learn their arts. hey would, when occasion required, ood the American market with eap goods, thereby making it al ost impossible for new industries o maintain themselves and pay the price demanded by American free labor. Until a man could earn more by entering a factory, he preferred to work on a farm.

"The profit in farming depends on two elements. The efforts of the farmer and the fertility of the soil. So great in America was this latter element, that a very slight effort brought a bountiful return. In America therefore, the cost of production in agriculture was small, from the standpoint of the farmer's exertion, d wages were, thus high. In rope, however, where land was arce and less fruitful, after centur of cultivation, wages were low. nder these conditions those who ished to engage in manufacture in nerica were compelled to pay high wages than were paid for the me class of labor in Europe.

"The American manufacturer was, erefore, compelled to sell at a higher price than the European, or sell at a loss. Now, it must be remembered that there was a surplus of farm labor and farm products and a demand for manufactured products, which to a certain extent was supplied by Europe and paid for by our surplus of farm products. There was a great loss to our farmers by reason of the cost of sending our products to Europe and then bringing their products here.

"Early in the history of our government the statesmen who believed as the Republican party now believes, determined to protect our home manufactures and thereby furnish employment for our surplus agricultural labor, and by so doing also furnish a home market for the surplus of agricultural products. This was done by enacting a protective tariff.

"The Republican party has always upheld and continued in force such a wise tariff that our manufactories have been able to compete with the manufacturers of the old world, and, while paying better wages, are now able in many cases to produce better goods at the same or at less cost to the consumer. This wise legislation by the Republican party has substituted a domestic for a foreign market. The manufactories now compete with the farm for laborers and so remove those superfluous farmers, who only tend to glut the market and thereby reduce the value of the farmer's labor.

"Those who are engaged in manufacturing are consumers and not producers. The farmer of North Dakota wants consumers. The nearer those consumers are to the farm the better for the farmer. The Republican party by the passage of the McKinley protective bill and the reciprocity feature of the bill enables our farmers to buy such articles as cannot be produced or manufactured in this country for the actual cost of roduction, transportation added, ithout duty, at the same time it opens up to our manufacturers new markets for their goods, thereby stimulating them to greater efforts and removing more labor from competition with the farmer. What the North Dakota farmer wants is a greater demand at home for his products. The price of wheat is fixed by the market value of wheat in the market where our surplus is sold. Now, if by judicious legislation a part of our wheat producing labor can be induced to employ itself in other pursuits three things will result. Our surplus will be reduced, our home market will be increased and the farmer's labor will be more valuable. The policy of the Republican party is to promote this condition of things. The farmer of North Dakota should therefore be Republican and vote the Republican ticket, as it is simply a business transaction wherein they are to be benefitted financially.

"Now let us look at the other great question which divides the two parties—the silver question. Money is a medium of commerce and is a commodity the same as wheat or oats, wood or coal. Money has two values—intrinsic and what we may call accepted.

"The intrinsic value of labor is fixed by the amount of labor employed in its production. The accepted value is fixed by legislation and common consent. In gold we have both values equal, as it has been found that during a long series of years practically the same amount of labor has been required to produce a given amount, and by common consent and by legislation the gold dollar has been accepted as the unit of values. There was a time years ago when the amount of silver contained in our silver dollar required the same amount of labor to produce it as did the gold dollar. Then the size of the silver dollar was established by legislation. At that time the intrinsic value and accepted value of a gold and silver dollar was the same. Now, by reason of a larger production of silver as compared with gold, the intrinsic value of the silver dollar has decreased, but legislation has not changed the accepted value. The Democratic party has introduced and advocated a free silver bill which the Republican party has opposed. The intrinsic value of a silver dollar is now about 70 cents, but by reason of the government stamp, or signature as it were to a check, the accepted value of a silver dollar is a dollar. The free silver men seek to deposite 70 cents worth of silver in the United States mint and receive in return a silver coin stamped by the goverment as acceptable for a dollar, thereby making 30 per cent. profit. The free-silver men are mostly found in the Democratic party and receive their support from the same. Now the question is do the farmers of North Dakota want to aid any such movement?

"Under our present system whatever profit is made is made by the government, and if the government must finally redeem its silver coin, it has the value with which to do so. Whereas, if the free-silver Democrats should prevail the silver men would have made the profit, and the government who stamped the coin would have to redeem at a loss; or, in other words, to illustrate, the government would stand in the place of a bank wherein the silver men could deposite 70 cents worth of the product of the mine and receive a certificate of deposite calling for a dollar. What bank could stand long under such a system? Would you sign a check for a stranger for $1,000 when he only deposited $700 with you? The Republican party is in favor of a sound medium of exchange, the Democratic party is not. Which party should the farmers of North Dakota sustain? There can, we think, be but one answer. The farmers of North Dakota should be Republicans because the Republican party is sound on tariff; sound on the money question; sound on the question of civil rights to all and sound on the question of an economical administration of public affairs by honest and competent officials."

"The Best is Good Enough."

The man who said: "The best is good enough for me" may have been an egotist, but he had the merit of frankness at least. The motto of "The Burlington Route" is: "Only the best is good enough for our patrons," and acting on that motto it has the best track, the best grades, the best coaches, sleepers and dining cars, the best connections, the best time, and reaches all the best cities in the west. Its employes are required to be courteous and accomodating, and the management endeavors to arrange all matters of train service so that the passenger shall feel he is receiving the best of attention, and that he is in the hands of the best railroad corporation he ever patronized. The constantly increasing business done by this line and the popularity it has already acquired in the great northwest show its motto to be the taking one. Carvings on Easter Island.

The hard volcanic rock of Easter island is covered with carvings intended to represent human faces, birds, fishes and mythical animals. Fishes and turtles appear common among these sculptures, but the most common figure is a mythical animal, half human in form, with bowed back and long clawlike legs and arms. According to the natives this symbol was intended to represent the god "Meke-Meke," the great spirit of the sea.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CAMPAIGN LEADERS.

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THIS YEAR'S CANDIDATES.

All Are Religious Men, All Have Hair on Their Faces and the Majority of Them Are Lawyers—Some Interesting Gossip.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

FOR various reasons the characteristics of candidates for public office interest the people, yet for reasons as various and slightly more explainable these characteristics find small publicity. Although the nominee is desirous of standing well with the voters, he shrinks slightly from letting them into the secrets of his toilet and various physical statistics. Yet such things get to the public ear sooner or later, and prove as entertaining information as do full details of how the candidates stand on the silver question, the tariff or prohibition.

It can be said of President Harrison that he wears a hat larger than Cleveland's (7½) and a collar a half size smaller (16½). A No. 6 shoe fits his foot, while Cleveland finds a 5½ ample despite his extra weight. Mr. Harrison's right pedal extremity measures 9¾ inches. Like the third Napoleon, his legs are short and his body long.

Before it grew gray his hair and whiskers were dark brown. His eyes are of the same color and there is the suggestion of a squint about them, due possibly to weakness caused by intense application. He dresses plainly, never pays over fifty dollars for a suit of clothes and always has his trousers of a different color from the coat and vest. He likes black neckties and good cigars—both small and first class.

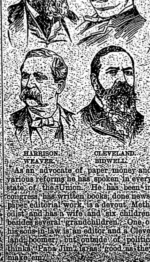
He is the son of a farmer, belongs to the Presbyterian church, was graduated from college and has been a lawyer, soldier and politician. He is of medium height, and Indiana claims him as a favorite son, but he was born at his distinguished grandfather's home, North Bend, O., Aug. 20, 1833. He has voted the Republican ticket ever since the days of Fremont and Dayton. It should be added that he never wears but one style of collar—a turndown, made by an old Indianapolis friend—and that he has a pigeontoed tendency.

Grover Cleveland is the son of a minister and a native of New Jersey, having been born at Caldwell, March 18, 1837. Like Harrison, he does not despise a good cigar and is not averse to a glass of wine. He wears a 7¼ derby hat and a No. 17 standing collar. His face is adorned only with a mustache and his hair is thin and brown, now turning gray. He is a great lover of fruit, eggs and buckwheat cakes, and the chief thing that rouses his wrath is the frequently renewed attempt to make Mrs. Cleveland and Baby Ruth prominent factors in the political campaign.

He had a fair education, clerked in a village store, went to Buffalo, published a book on shorthorned cattle, studied law, was selected assistant district attorney and after that his career is a familiar one to the American people. He has made and saved money, and his wife is also said to be worth $500,000 in her own right. Mr. Cleveland has always been a Democrat and an attendant of the Presbyterian church.

James Baird Weaver, the People's party candidate, doesn't smoke, drink or swear. On one occasion, while a soldier, he did curse, but after the battle was over he publicly apologized to the regiment for his profanity. Five times he has been a congressional nominee and this is his second race for the presidency. He has been what opponents call an "agitator" for fifteen years.

He is of medium height, has gray hair, a gray mustache and blue eyes. He wears a turned down collar and white necktie, and prefers a frock coat, close cut vest and uncreased trousers to any other style of outward adornment. He is the son of a farmer and was born in Ohio June 12, 1833. After "doing the chores" he studied law evenings, but when twenty years old went to California. Even then he was a Greenbacker, for he refused to hunt for gold, and going to Iowa he secured admission to the bar. He was a soldier during the war, a lawyer and Republican politician until 1877, and after that a free lance.



HARRISON. CLEVELAND.
WEAVER. BIDWELL.

As an advocate of paper money and various reforms he has spoken in every state of the Union. He has been in congress, has written books, done newspaper editorial work, is a devout Methodist and has a wife and six children, besides several grandchildren. One of his sons-in-law is an editor and a Cleveland boomer, but outside of politics thinks "Papa Jim" is as good as they make 'em.

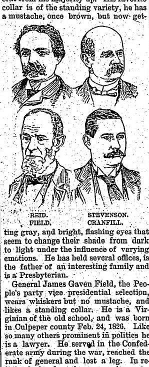
Like Harrison, General John Bidwell, the Prohibition candidate, glories in full whiskers. He wears a No. 15½ standing collar, is quite gray, has neutral blue eyes and is a native of New York, where he was born Aug. 5, 1819. When in congress a quarter of a century ago he was a vine grower and advocate of winemaking, but he has changed all that since, and now not a grape dare sprout on his magnificent California ranch.

He has taught school, was a Pacific coast pioneer and served in the Mexican war and the California militia during the civil struggle. He has been a miner and farmer, has affiliated with Republicans and Democrats, has been a member of the state and national legislatures, and now, although more than threescore and ten, doesn't look more than fifty years of age. His neighbors like him, and in every respect he is a vigorous old man.

Among the vice presidential candidates Whitelaw Reid is known of all men. He was born Oct. 27, 1837, at Xenia, O., was graduated from college in his teens and took to teaching. When twenty years of age he went into the newspaper business, and as reporter, war correspondent and editor of the New York Tribune has been in journalism ever since. His principal personal service in politics has been as minister to France. He is tall, thin and of distinguished appearance and is a Presbyterian.

Not so very long ago his hair, mustache and little chin tuft were raven black. Now they are tinged with gray. By his own energy he amassed a modest fortune, and the lady whom he married is also wealthy. He is reputed to have the finest stock of wines in America, and it is no uncommon thing for him to serve a dozen rare vintages at a dinner. Personally he is very abstemious. His New York and country homes are magnificent. Save during the Greeley campaign he has been a consistent Republican. He wears a No. 15 standing collar, a No. 7 shoe and is very quiet in his style of attire.

Cleveland's running mate, Adlai E. Stevenson, is a native of Kentucky, being born in Christian county Oct. 23, 1835, but has lived nearly all his life in Bloomington, Ills. He is a college graduate, a lawyer, and has been a Democrat from his majority up. His favorite collar is of the standing variety, he has a mustache, once brown, but now getting gray, and bright, flashing eyes that seem to change their shade from dark to light under the influence of varying emotions. He has held several offices, is the father of an interesting family and is a Presbyterian.



REID. STEVENSON.
FIELD. CRANFILL.

General James Gaven Field, the People's party vice presidential selection, wears whiskers but no mustache, and likes a standing collar. He is a Virginian of the old school, and was born in Culpeper county Feb. 24, 1826. Like so many others prominent in politics he is a lawyer. He served in the Confederate army during the war, reached the rank of general and lost a leg. In religion he has long been conspicuous as a Baptist. His eyes are dark brown and so were his whiskers—years ago.

The Prohibition nominee for vice president has many breezy characteristics. He is young—only thirty-five—is a native of Texas, has lived among the Comanche Indians, has been a cowboy and a ranchman and of late has exchanged the Winchester and the fandango for the Gospel gun. His keen blue eyes no longer sight the rifle, but the pencil as he edits a Prohibition paper at Waco. He is now a physician and a leader in the Baptist church and he brings to the causes of temperance and religion the same virile assertiveness that made him a power on the "round up." Nowadays he wears a mustache and affects a standing collar. Formerly a flannel shirt suited him.

FRED C. DAYTON.

Across Mexico by Rail.

The Jalisco Pacific Railway company, which was recently organized in Mexico with a capital of $10,125,000 to build the extension of the Manzanillo and Colima railway from the latter point to Guadalajara, will continue the line to two points on the Mexican National railway. The portion of the line now in operation, which is owned by the Mexican National Construction company, has proved eminently successful. The distance from Manzanillo to Guadalajara is 225 miles, and there are already 59 miles of railroad in operation, leaving 166 miles to be built. Guadalajara, with a population of about 80,000, was formerly one of the most prosperous trade centers of the republic, and the best informed business men of the city believe that the completion of the railway to the Pacific ocean will restore its old time commercial importance. With the completion of the Jalisco-Pacific to Guadalajara, it will be possible to cross Mexico by rail from ocean to ocean, starting either from Tampico or Vera Cruz.

Infantile Dignity.

Nearly all Spanish babies inherit the fierce, hot, rather vindictive temper of their ancestors, and their sense of dignity is easily offended. They expect to be treated with a courtly deference which they regard as their right. Altogether, they are most reserved, ceremonious little creatures.

What Others Say.

The California Fruit Grower says: "One of the drawbacks of California is the large landholder. Fortunately he is becoming less numerous, and the subdivision of large ranches goes merrily on."

According to The Farm, Field and Stockman a calculation has been made of the comparative results, from an economical point of view, of the substitution of lowest grades of pan molasses for coal as fuel which is now being practiced in some parts of the south.

It used to be the notion among dairymen that the separator would injure butter. "But," says Hoard's Dairyman, "that idea is generally dispelled now, as the finest of butter is made by this process."

American Cultivator says that no late crops will pay better than a piece of land planted with mangel-wurzel for stock in winter.

According to The Jersey Bulletin, pacers are unpopular in New York, but popular in Chicago and other towns that go in for speed.

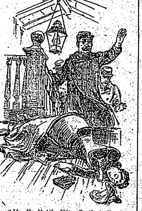
A SOLDIER'S SECRET
BY CAPT. CHARLES KING. U.S.A.

COPYRIGHT, 1892, BY J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY AND PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THEM.

CHAPTER I.

When the Indian summer haze is hovering over the bluffs along the Pawnee in these dreamy, sunshiny afternoons of late November, there is a languorous spell even in soldier life, and the troopers love to loll about the wide porches of the barracks during their brief leisure moments or while waiting the trumpet call for stables. There is scarcely a breath of air astir. The broad, fertile valley under the bluffs, forest fringed along the stream, gives forth a faint, pungent, smoky odor, and the eye wanders across its soft undulations, its vistas of alternate glade, grove and shadowy pool, and sees it all as through some filmy, intangible veil. The sharp outlines so characteristic of the frontier at other seasons, giving to the ridge to the northwest that razorback guise that inspired the original explorers, Kentuckians and Missourians, to refer to the range as "Hawg Buttes," are mellowed into softer curves.

There is an echo sprite abroad in the autumn skies, for the distant whistle of the trains, the puff and pant of engines miles away, the rumble of the express as it flies across the wooden truss at Big Bend far down the valley, the lowing of cattle and the tinkle of their bells at the farms beyond the reservation lines, the shouts and laughter of village children scouring the stream banks for the last of the year's crop of beech or butternut, the soft laughter of the ladies gathered in the veranda of the major's quarters, all come floating through the pulseless air to the listening ears of the sentry dawdling here along the post at the western gate and distracting his attention from the purely military functions which he is called upon to perform. Over at the guardhouse many of the men are drowsing in the afternoon sunshine. Among the stables the horses are standing at the picket line, with drooped heads and lazily swishing tails. The officer of the guard, knowing the colonel to be away on a late shooting excursion and the major held at home by the demands of hospitality, has dropped into a doze while sitting bolt upright at his wooden desk.



"My God! it's Nita Guthrie."

Scores of the garrison proper seem inclined to follow his example, and the tall, dark faced, black bearded soldier—a handsome fellow—leaning on the breast-high wall over at the east end midway between the hospital at the edge of the bluff and the junior surgeon's quarters, his chin on his arms, his cap pulled well down over his eyes, seems to have been stricken by the general somnolence. It is only the ladies who are wide awake and alert, for this is Nita Guthrie's last appearance, so to speak. She has been paying a brief visit to Dr. and Mrs. Holden, kinsfolk of hers, but is to take the east bound train this very night. Mrs. Holden goes, too, leaving her lord, the junior medical officer of the station, to the mercy of the other women, and of all the families of some thirty married officers stationed in this big garrison not one is unrepresented at Major Berrien's today, for Nita Guthrie has won all hearts. But this, say those who have known her long, is an old, old story with Nita; she has been doing the same thing for years.

There is tang of suggestiveness about this statement; moreover, it is true: Miss Guthrie is not in the first bloom of youth. "Why, she must be nearly thirty," say some of the younger girls and younger matrons, who envy her none the less the freshness, the grace, the winsomeness that hover about her mobile face; but those who are in position to know and have no reason to feel the faintest jealousy assert very positively that Nita is not more than twenty-five.

"Well, why hasn't she married?" is the instant query of Mrs. Vance, to whose benighted mind it ever appears that because a woman hasn't she cannot.

"Simply because the right man is yet to come," is Mrs. Harper's equally prompt reply. "Nita Guthrie has had more offers in six years than any woman I ever heard of."

"Then there must be something back of it all," responds Mrs. Vance, whose theories are not to be lightly shaken. "Was there some early affair?"

"My dear Mrs. Vance, I have no doubt I could tell you a dozen stories, all plausible, all in active circulation when last I visited St. Louis and saw her in society there, and all as near the truth probably as any we could invent here. Nobody knows but Nita, and she won't tell."

Now as the autumn sun, all red burnished gold, is sinking to the horizon on this final day of a charming and memorable visit, Nita Guthrie is bidding adieu with laughing, kindly cordiality to the little coterie gathered in her honor. To one and all she has the same frank, gracious manner. Over all she throws the same odd magnetic spell, seeming to impress each and every one in turn with the same idea, "Now, you are just the most thoroughly delightful creature I have ever met, and I cannot bear to say goodby to you." There is the lingering hand clasp, and yet not the faintest sentimentality. Nita's blue eyes—very blue—gaze straight into those of her friends. She seems to advance a step or two, as though eager to meet and take by the hand each newcomer. Even the elders among the women find it hard to go, and as for the girls, they linger spellbound; they cluster about her, watching the sunshine in her face, the play of her features, the sparkle of her eyes, drinking in her winsome words, her rippling laughter.

"It's just the only chance we've had to ourselves, Miss Nita," protests Winifred Berrien. "You've been surrounded by men all the rest of the time, and we couldn't see you now if it weren't that they had to be in stables. Oh, if you only didn't have to go tonight!"

"Indeed, Winnie, I don't want to go. It seems to me nothing can be more delightful than life in an army post like this. Certainly no girl ever had a better time anywhere than you have given me here, and it is so unlike what I fancied it might be."

"It is entirely unlike what life on the frontier used to be, Miss Guthrie," answers her hostess, the major's wife, in her calm, placid way. "Any one contrasting our beatitude of today with our life here, there and everywhere over the west during the Indian campaigns in which the regiment was incessantly engaged can only wonder how we found it possible to exist in those days. Social conditions have changed, too, and in the gathering of our troops in larger garrisons a great many of the unpleasant features of the old life have been eliminated entirely. Indeed, I wish you might stay and see more of us. But you are coming again, are you not?"

"If wishing will bring it about I shall be with you again with the coming summer or early in the spring. I have promised Mrs. Holden that I will return to her if only for a fortnight."

The enthusiasm excited among the girls and apparently shared by all the women present when this announcement is made ought certainly to convince Miss Guthrie that they most reluctantly part with her now and most pleasantly anticipate her future coming. The clamor of voices is such that for a time no one is conscious of the fact that out on the parade the regimental line has formed, and that the band is already trooping down the front. Berrien had taken his position as commanding officer. Several subalterns, whose heads were kept rigidly straight to the front, found their eyes wandering furtively over toward the major's quarters. In couples and groups a number of the ladies come sauntering forth, gathering opposite the center nearer the colonel's house, from which point they generally watched the closing ceremony of the day. But still oblivious to any music but that of her voice a dozen of their number hover about Miss Guthrie. Even gunfire fails to distract their attention. It is not until the major himself returns, tossing off his helmet and tugging at his waistbelt, that they realize that parade is over and dinner waiting.

"Now, you will come back next spring?" "You will write?" "You won't forget to send me the photograph—mind, cabinet size—Miss Nita?" "Indeed if ever I get anywhere near St. Louis you'll be the first soul I shall come in search of."

It is a little flock of enthusiastic army girls surrounding her, maidens whose early lives had been spent wandering from river to mountain, from the gulf to the Columbia, to whom city life was almost a revelation, and city belles beings from another world. Winifred Berrien is the leader of the coterie, a girl whose eyes are as dark as Nita's are blue, and they are ready to brim over at this very instant.

"Here comes Captain Rolfe for you now, and we've got to let you go; but we'll all be down to see you off at train time."

The man who enters at the moment and stands just within the heavy Navajo portiere, smilingly looking upon the group and quite unconscious of the almost vengeful glances in the eyes of the young girls, is a cavalry officer about thirty-five years of age. He is a tall fellow, somewhat heavily built, yet well proportioned and athletic. His face is tanned by long exposure to the sun and wind of the wide frontier. His brown hair, close cropped, has a suspicion of gray just silvering the temples. His eyebrows are thick and strongly marked. They eyes beneath are deep set and fringed with heavy lashes. The mustache, sweeping from his upper lip, is of a lighter brown than his hair, and [illegible] wise his face is smoothly shaven and is one which impresses those who look upon it even carelessly [illegible]. He still wears his [illegible] and holds in his hand the [illegible] met for forage cap, which latter headgear at this moment is being dandled in one hand, while the fingers of the other beat rapid tattoo upon the visor. Comrades of Rolfe would tell you this is a sign that he is nervous; yet to look at him there, smiling upon the group, quite as though remarking what a pretty picture they make, no one else would be apt to think of such a thing.

"Ready in a moment, Rolfe," shouts the major from an inner room. "You ready, Berengaria?"

"I am always ready, Richard, as you well know," is Mrs. Berrien's placid response. "I think I never kept you waiting so much as a moment."

"Promptest woman in the army or out of it," booms the major from his sanctum, his jovial voice resounding through the rooms of the bright garrison home. "Never knew anything like it, Miss Guthrie. Why, do you know, even when I wasn't half proposing she never let me finish the sentence! 'Twasn't at all what I was going to ask her—that day, at least. Meant to eventually, of course, if I ever could muster up courage, but this time I had only found grit enough to ask for her picture, and I was engaged in less than ten seconds."

Winnie Berrien rushes from the parlor into the paternal den, voluble with protestations against such scandalous stories at mamma's expense; but Mrs. Berrien, slowly fanning herself, remains calmly seated, as though impervious to these damaging shots, at which everybody else is laughing merrily.

"Possibly you don't believe me," again booms the major, his jolly red face aglow, as he is dragged forth from the den, still struggling with the sleeve links of his cuff. "Winifred, my child, unhand me. You'll never bring your old father's gray hairs in sorrow to the grave by such unwomanly precipitancy, unless it's a civilian with ten thousand a year: will you, dearest? Miss Guthrie, I never expect to be a rich man. I hadn't as many dollars when I fell in love with Miss De Lancy as I had buttons, and we only wore single breasted coats in those days, and I was the junior captain. I pledge you my word I never would have had the cheek to offer myself. 'Twas the woman did it. I was going away for a week, and I said, 'You can give me one thing, if you will.' I only meant to beg for that picture, and, by Jove! she slipped her hand into mine. I was shaking all over. 'I—b-beg pardon,' I stammered. 'I was only going to—beg for your p-p-p——' 'My promise?' said Berengaria, sweetly, looking up into my eyes. 'You have it, Richard.' Prompt? Why, she just jumped at me. Splendid arrangement, though, Miss Guthrie. She furnished the quarters and all the money, and I the vivacity and beauty of the household, until Winnie came; she contributes a little toward it now. But we're a model couple, aren't we, Berengaria?" And the major bends with playful tenderness, the fun sparkling in his eyes meanwhile, and kisses his handsome helpmeet's rosy cheek.

"We have few crosses, certainly," replies Mrs. Berrien, whose own name is anything but Berengaria, that being, as she is frequently called upon to explain, some of the major's historical nonsense. "We have few crosses, and those of course I bear. But now," she continues, with much decision of manner, "if you are partially restored to sanity we will go, or keep dinner longer waiting. Miss Guthrie, do they allow lunatics at large in the streets of St. Louis? Major Berrien spoke of getting a month's leave this winter and going thither."

"Oh, send him by all means, and he shall be treated at our own asylum. Father would rejoice in him—as I do, Mrs. Berrien."

"And shall I get the colonel to detail Rolfe here to conduct me thither and turn me over to the asylum authorities?" queries the major, with a knowing cock of the head. "Rolfe hates city life as a general thing, but he would accept that duty, I fancy."

"Captain Rolfe will be very welcome. Indeed, I only wish you might bring the whole regiment, major. Just think what a good time the girls would have this winter if that were only possible."

"Berengaria says," bursts in the major again, "that if I only show you proper attention on this visit you'll be sure to send us invitations to bring the whole family and spend six weeks at least."

"Father, you outrageous fibber!" gasps Winifred, rushing at him and placing one slim hand upon his mouth, while twining the other, with its soft, white arm, about his neck. "Indeed, Miss Guthrie, you must be told that father is perpetually poking fun at mother, making her say all manner of things she never thought of. It is all well enough in the regiment, where people understand it and are prepared for his nonsense, but many strangers are completely deceived at times, and mamma never so much as remonstrates."

Evidently mamma does not consider it worth while.

"It would be wasting time, Miss Guthrie, and we are wasting time as it is. Captain Hazlett will never forgive you, Major Berrien, if you keep dinner waiting another minute. Captain Rolfe, will you escort Miss Guthrie? Come, Richard, march!"

"After you, Rolfe," says the major, with a bow of extra ceremony. "After you."

"Before them, if you please, you blind goose!" whispers his better half. "Haven't you sense enough to see he wants to speak with her and that this may be the only opportunity?"

"What! Rolfe wants to talk with her? Why, Miss Guthrie," he booms aloud, "I hadn't the faintest idea"—But here the wife of his bosom lays firm hand upon his sunburned ear and fairly marches him forth upon the veranda. [illegible]

"Silence, Dick," sternly murmurs Mrs. Berrien. "There is no fun in this affair, and I warn you—not another word."

Twilight has fallen upon the garrison as they stroll across the parade. The men have vanished from the scene, but the tinkle of guitar and banjo tells where they have gathered. Most of the officers are at dinner. One or two couples are just entering the gateway of Hazlett's quarters—guests invited to meet the fair visitor on this the last evening of her stay. Dr. and Mrs. Holden can be seen among them, Mrs. Holden gazing somewhat anxiously at Nina and her escort, for it is plain that Rolfe seeks to detain the woman to whom he has paid such unusual and devoted attention ever since the hour of her arrival. Silence and peace have spread their wings abroad, hovering with the twilight over the broad reservation, and the Berriens, walking rapidly now, as the energetic lady can lead her expostulating spouse, come suddenly upon the sight of the great golden moon rising above the distant bluffs and peering in upon the garrison through the wide space that interposes between the surgeon's quarters and the barracks at the east end.

"Now, there is something Miss Guthrie really must see," says Berrien, halting short. "As one of her admirers and entertainers, I feel bound to call her attention to it."

"Dick!—stupid!—move on at once. You must not speak to her now. Can't you see?"

"See? Of course I see, and I want her to see—that's why I stop." Again half teasingly, he attempts to turn as though bent on looking back. She promptly whirls him about and faces him in the proper direction. "Oh," he persists, "if it is something about her you wanted to me to see, can't you understand that I have no eyes in the back of my head and that therefore I should be allowed to look about."

"You see, sir, and understand the situation perfectly well as it is. You're simply bent on mischief. You know that Rolfe has been her shadow all day long, hanging about her to say his say. He knows this to be his last chance. Everybody will be there the moment dinner is over. Everybody will surround her, and unless he speaks now he must let her go without a word."

"Berengaria, you amaze me! Are you conniving at his capture? Didn't you tell me you knew she wouldn't have him?"

"I did; I know it now; but he is a man who wants to hear his fate from her own lips and plead his cause, too, like a man, unless I am very much mistaken in him. No, sir, don't you dare look back."

"Poor devil! Why couldn't he wait till after dinner? she might be in softer mood then. I always am. That's why you always wait till after dinner, I presume, when you have anything special to ask. Now this will take his appetite away entirely."

"As if he had any in the first place! Positively, Richard, you have no soul above a dinner. When a man is as desperately in love as Rolfe, do you suppose he cares much what he eats?"

"Well, seems to me I was never off my feed," is Berrien's reply with preternatural gravity, looking straight to the front now and refusing to meet his wife's dark eyes.

"You!" with fine scorn. "You! Why, Richard Berrien, with all your amiable qualities of heart and weaknesses of head no one on earth would ever associate you and sentiment in the same breath. Of course you and your appetite are inseparable; but Rolfe is different; he is a lover."

"Well, what am I?"

"You are simply a goose tonight. Come, don't stop at the gate now; push right on into the house after the Holdens. I'll run up to Mrs. Hazlett's room with Nita."

A dozen of the fort people only have been bidden to dinner, for hardly a dining room at the post is big enough for more, and on the porch anxiously awaiting the coming of his guests is Hazlett.

"Where are Rolfe and Miss Guthrie?" asks he as men will ask. "All here now but them."

"Coming at once; only a few steps behind us," promptly answers Mrs. Berrien. "Run in, major; I'll wait for Nita." Berrien looks as though he meditated a mischievous remark, but something in her voice and manner tells him that instant obedience is expected. He gives one quick glance and steps into the hall.

Presently, while chatting with others of the arriving party, he is conscious of the swish of skirts passing up the stairway. The door to the veranda is still open, and glancing out Berrien can see Rolfe alone leaning against one of the wooden pillars, his head drooping as though plunged in deep thought.

"Poor old chap! he's got his conge tonight, and that's the end of his two years' romance. Odd about that girl. She fancies nobody."

Three hours later, the moon being well up in the heavens now, and the whole parade shining revealed almost as bright as day, both the verandas and the parlor of Hazlett's cozy home are thronged with officers and ladies, chatting merrily together. The lights are still blazing in the barracks. The trumpeters in full force are grouped about the flagstaff sounding the last notes of tattoo. The Holdens have borne Miss Guthrie away with them, that the ladies might stow their evening gowns in the waiting Saratogas and then don their traveling garb while the quartermaster's big wagon trundles the luggage down to the railway station. Presently this lumbering vehicle can be seen slowly rolling away from the Holdens' gate, and everybody at Hazlett's waits impatiently for the return of the party. Mrs. Holden is deservedly a favorite in the garrison, and Nita Guthrie, as has been [illegible]

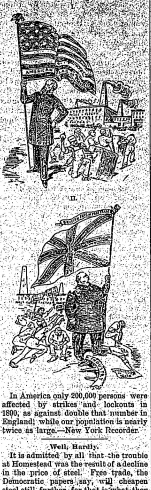
UNDER TWO FLAGS.



In America only 200,000 persons were affected by strikes and lockouts in 1890, as against double that number in England; while our population is nearly twice as large.—New York Recorder.

Well, Hardly.

It is admitted by all that the trouble at Homestead was the result of a decline in the price of steel. Free trade, the Democratic papers say, will cheapen steel still further, for that is what they mean when they say that protection raises the prices. The question is, How many strikes would follow free trade. Workmen who resist a few reductions under protection would hardly submit to reductions of 50 per cent. under English free trade.—Iowa State Register.

Treat Tammany Tenderly.

Why Democrats Hate McKinley's Bill.

It is no wonder the Democrats hate the McKinley law. It has proved that every prediction they made about it was false. It has increased our export trade instead of decreasing it; increased our free imports instead of "shutting out trade," and finally it has cheapened prices and raised wages. The law is its own vindication.—New York Press.

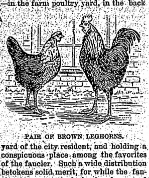
FARM AND GARDEN

BROWN LEGHORNS.

How to Obtain the Most Profitable Returns from This Popular Variety.

Numbered with other popular varieties of poultry is the Brown Leghorn. This sprightly bird is to be found everywhere—in the farm poultry yard, in the back yard of the city resident, and holding a conspicuous place among the favorites of the fancier. Such a wide distribution betokens solid merit, for while the fancier cares particularly for form and feather, the farmer, the farmer's wife and the city housewife want eggs and flesh. The Leghorn will give as many of the former as one could reasonably ask a hen to give, although individual specimens will not furnish as great an amount of flesh as individuals of some other breed. As for beauty, it is difficult to find birds of more pleasing color or graceful form.



PAIR OF BROWN LEGHORNS.

It is not generally known that Brown Leghorns can be bred to quite a large size, writes Webb Donnell, a Massachusetts poultryman, in The Country Gentleman from which this cut is reproduced. Mr. Donnell, who favors decreasing the size of the comb as usually seen on leghorn fowls, says:

To get the greatest possible value from the breed, the chickens should be hatched as early as possible. It is a great mistake to suppose they can well be hatched out late in the season simply because they mature quickly. Hatched late, the pullets will rarely lay before the following spring, when eggs will shortly be at their lowest point. They should be hatched so as to be got to laying by the 1st of September. The six dozen of eggs which each one ought to lay between that time and late winter, meeting the highest prices of the year, will go a long way toward making the Leghorn one of the most profitable breeds. But if one expects to secure good results with these fowls, he must make up his mind to give them plenty of room and plenty of opportunities to indulge their passion for activity, for without such conditions they will prove exceedingly unremunerative.

Looking at the breed from a fancy point of view, it should be the aim of the breeder to secure males with rich cherry red hackles, holding this color to the back, with a metallic black stripe through each feather; with rich black breasts and bodies, and with wing bows of solid red, not intermixed with black feathers. It is difficult to secure good striping in the saddle feathers, though this should be sought. It is desirable that the females should be of a rich deep color, both on backs and breasts, rather than that of that faded, washed out appearance so often seen. Such rich looking birds, with hackles that have a solid black stripe, free from penciling, will prove a source of much satisfaction to their owners.

Scabby Potatoes.

In addition to the rot that is occasionally so destructive to potatoes, the crop is more or less subject to scab. Various theories are advocated as its cause, but let the primary cause be what it may experience leads to the conclusion that the occurrence of scab depends on certain conditions of moisture and soil, writes a New Jersey farmer, who furthermore says:

While we may have more or less rain than we desire some seasons, one can, by selecting a favorable soil for planting, greatly lessen the prevalence of scab, if not entirely escape it. For three years I raised some potatoes on heavy undrained land, well manured—both stable manure and a commercial one being used together. The yield was a fairly good one, but a great many of the tubers were scabby. For the last two years I have planted on a light open soil, where the rain quickly descends through it, so that in a day or two there is no excess of moisture near the surface. I have used only one kind of fertilizer, the Mapes special potato manure, and have not been troubled with scab. To secure smooth potatoes I would plant on light or well drained soil and use only some good commercial fertilizer. I believe partially rotted stable manure and wet soils are both liable to produce scab.

Bee Buzzings.

The American Bee Journal says: "A good remedy for bee stings is to cut an onion in two and apply the cut surface to the wound."

Not securing the hives, sections, foundations and other supplies in season is a mistake made year after year by many beekeepers.

Gloves used about the apiary on becoming soiled can be easily cleaned by soaking a day or two in strong lye made from potash or wood ashes, or by soaking in water saturated with quicklime. The propolis comes off without difficulty after such a soaking.

Sweetened essence of peppermint is used to advantage while introducing queens. This scented water is put into an atomizer and the bees and combs thoroughly sprayed with it, then the queen is placed on one of these scented combs, a little of the spray thrown on her and the hive closed. This plan is said to work more successfully than many of the old plans and admits of immediate introduction of the queen [illegible]

THE RAGWEED.

How This Persistent and Troublesome Pest May Be Effectually Eradicated.

Ragweed is found in nearly every state in the Union east of the Rocky mountains and in nearly all the provinces of the dominion of Canada. It grows in great luxuriance and its numerous seeds possess much vitality. This annual infests the later farm crops rather than those that have grown early. No sooner have the grain crops been removed from the fields and hay from the meadows than the ragweeds push up their numerous branches and mature their seeds.

There are farmers who take it for granted that this troublesome weed cannot be eradicated. A correspondent writing from the Agricultural college at Guelph, Canada, in The Ohio Farmer, says: "Ragweed may be eradicated by the application of certain principles to the ordinary processes of cultivation rather than by specific modes that may be laid down. These are: 1. Drop out of the rotation such crops as ripen along with the ragweed. This means that red clover seed should not be grown on smitten fields. But it would not hinder the growth of hoed crops, as corn and beans and field roots, providing these were kept clean in the autumn. 2. Give much attention to autumn cultivation. This one means of fighting ragweed will do more to effect its destruction than any other. When the fields from which grain crops have been removed are gang plowed all the ragweeds growing in the same are destroyed, for they have not been ripened. Harrow once or twice to encourage the seeds that are lying in the ground to germinate. Spring cultivation is of little or no avail in fighting ragweed. 3. Mow the fields that have been sown to grass just before any of the seeds ripen. Mow them closely and leave whatever vegetation that has fallen to lie upon the ground. Give meadows the same treatment. This will not interfere with pasturing them. 4. Give attention to pastures and fence corners. The former, if pastured with sheep early enough in the season, will not give trouble, but if necessary these also may be run over with mower. Fence corners should be mown twice; that is to say, if the first cutting has been done at the usual time. 5. Grow hoed crops to the greatest possible extent, and make sure that none of the seeds of ragweed are allowed to ripen in them. 6. Use the mower on the highways at the right season. It is also advised that the neighboring farmers cooperate in the extermination of this weed pest, of which there are several varieties. The one shown in the cut is the most troublesome. The tenure of maturing the seeds extends from the latter party of July until frost."

The week has been a very good one for the growing wheat and if like favorable weather continues the result will be fairly a good crop for Polk county. The only question seems to be in relation to late sown wheat which will no doubt be all right if we do not get early frosts. The reports from the different localities continue to be good.

Our senior was the recepient of a box of choice cigars which came all the way from Sioux City, Iowa, with the compliments of Andrew Goff, who for a time was employed in Rolstad's restaurant, on Robert street. When Goff left this city he went to Sioux City where he purchased a restaurant and commenced business by himself and the fact that he now contemplates entering the mercantile business is evidence that he has done well.

During the seige a misunderstanding arose between one of the men and conductor Murray and the man caused the genial Hank to appear before Judge Christianson on Saturday at 2 p. m. The conductor showed up on time and asked for an adjournment until the following Wednesday, which was granted.

M. R. Brown arrived from Iowa last Thursday with a carload of horses, having been away two weeks. He reports oats and grass good crops, but corn will not be over a half crop. He brought back a pair of goats that prove quite a curiosity to the average Crookston small boy, who seldom, if ever, saw one of those festive, highly-flavored animals. They are quite the fashion in Iowa and Brown took a notion to be fashionable once in his life, so purchased a pair.

The Crookston Gas Lighting and Heating Company is the name of a concern that filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State last week. The incorporators are Hugh Thompson, John Cromb, W. D. Scott, L. D. Marshall, J. R. Clements, Wm. Anglim and C. E. Sawyer, and the first board of officers are Hugh Thompson, president; Will. Anglim, vice president; L. D. Marshall, treasurer, and C. E. Sawyer, secretary. Upon the arrival of their charter the company will at once take steps toward getting their plant in opeeation ready to commence business by by fall.

John G. Woolley, of Rest Island fame, will lecture at the Methodist church in this city on August 11. Mr. Woolley is well known throughout the northwest as a religious and temperance worker, and for several years he has labored most earnestly to erect a building on Rest Island, in Lake Pepin, where people who were addicted to the liquor habit could go and reform. By his lectures throughout the country he has accomplished his purpose, and the institution on Rest Island is now a haven of rest, refuge and reform. Mr. Woolley is probably one of the ablest speakers in the lecture field to-day. He is an eloquent talker and his words are full of thought, and all should avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing him.

The National Encampment, which begins in Washington, D. C., on Tuesday, Sept. 20th, bids fair to be the greatest gathering of soldiers since the grand review in 1865. It is estimated that over 60,000 soldiers will be in the grand parade, and this great number will not be all who are in attendance, for at every encampment there are more or less who are not in the parade. Arrangements have been so perfected that it will be easy for all to meet the members of their old regiment and company who are there, as it is intended to have the army arranged as nearly as it used to be as is possible, thus making it easy for all old comrades to meet. Moreover, there seems to be more interest among the old soldiers in this encampment than ever before, and more of them desire to be present, feeling that this will be the event of a lifetime, this meeting at Washington, the city that played so important a part in the drama of war. Every old soldier in the United States will have a great desire to go, and every one who can will do so.

The Republican caucuses were held at the usual places on Saturday evening at 7:30 and the following delegates elected to the county convention at the court house on Wednesday, July 27th.

First ward.—H. E. Cooke, W. A. Lanctot, Geo. O. Bunn and John Alderman.

Second ward.—John Monroe, T. G. Thompson and James Greenhalgh.

Third ward.—G. H. Palmer and R. J. Montague.

Fourth ward.—C. O. Christianson, A. D. Stephens, A. A. Miller, Hugh Thompson and E. M. Walsh.

Fifth ward.—E. D. Childs.

Speaking of a whilom resident of Crookston, the daily Tribune of Sioux City, Iowa, says:

Andrew Goff has sold his Dairy restaurant to Shoemaker & Herkenheim. Mr. Goff will start a big dry goods house on or about the 15th of September at some good point on East Fourth street. Mr. Goff is a sharp business man and will make a success of his new enterprise.

The JOURNAL adds its best wishes to those of his hosts of friends for his success in the new venture and if hustling will do it Andrew will "get there," never fear.

Farmers' Picnic.

A farmers' picnic will be held at Maple Lake on Saturday, August 6th, on which occasion Mr. Donnelly has been invited and is expected to speak. No pains nor expense possible will be spared to make the event a notable and happy one and every farmer in Polk county is cordially invited to lend his presence to the hilarity of the occasion. It will be a picnic by the farmers, of the farmers and for the farmers.

"The Millionaire."

Dan'l Sully will present his play, "The Millionaire," at the Grand opera house, Monday, Aug. 1st. It is a play strong in dramatic effect, and with a vein of real comedy running throughout. By way of a brief synopsis, it may be said that the story hinges upon the struggle of an Irish contractor, James O'Brien, against the combined wealth and influence of a powerful railroad syndicate. Mr. Sully portrays the true-hearted, noble Irishman, a man possessed of very little education, but with all the requirements of a true gentleman. It is decidedly the best work that this actor has done during his long and successful career, and places him in the ranks of legitimate comedians. The impersonation is humorous, fresh and broadly drawn in its humanity, and, above all, is absolutely faithful to the individual. Mr. Sully is, indeed, a true comedian, not to be classed with the buffoons usually found in sensational plays. He is a close observer of the humble life he portrays, and has the power of depicting its humorous as well as its pathetic side. The supporting company is composed of excellent artists, who may be relied on to enact the various characters in the drama, in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. Sully's engagement is for two nights. On Tuesday he will appear in his comedy-drama, "Daddy Nolan," a play combining mirth and music, pathos and tears. The sale of seats will begin Friday. A word to the wise is sufficient.

A Visit to Brown's Stables.

On Saturday last our reporter dropped in to M. R. Brown's stables and found that individual resting up after his trip to Iowa. After a chat in his office awhile Mr. Brown invited us to go out and see what was left of the carload of horses he brought in from Iowa on Thursday, he having sold six of them the day before. We found twelve as fine horses and mares as a man ever drew a line over, one team, a span of get black four-year-old mares being especially fine—perfect models in build and movement. They weigh 1,400 pounds each and are three-quarters Percheron and Mr. Brown takes just pride in showing them to his friends. Next we saw a span of steel-grey mares, three-year-old, that weigh about 1,200 pounds each, are seven-eighths Percheron and well put up. Then we came to a pair of two-year-old bay mares, three-quarters Percheron, which Mr. B. brought up for Osmund Osmundson, of Mallory. These colts will weigh about 1,100 each, are wonderfully well developed for so young a team and will make a splendid work team with proper care. We next found a fine team of big, heavy iron grey mares whose combined weight is over 1,050, three-quarters Percheron and as perfect in every way as one could wish to see. The next team was one fine black mare weighing 1,400 and one iron grey gelding weighing about 1,500, and last but not least a fine span of black geldings that will weigh about 3,000 pounds. Mr. Brown seems to have a peculiar gift in selecting horses and he seldom brings an animal to this market that his judgment does not fully approve, and the result is a fine lot of animals. In this importation he seems to have fairly outdone himself as a finer lot of well built young horses it would be hard to find anywhere. One object we have in this write-up is to emphasize the importance of thorough-bred stock; for no farmer who knows good horses when he sees them, can fail to recognize good breeding when he sees these animals. They are a living sermon, but they are no more than any farmer can have right at home if he will but use the proper care and attention. Mr. Brown invites the attention of farmers and all who like good horses to this lot, confident of his ability to please the most particular.

Changes in an English School.

In 1824 Mr. Milnes Gaskell writes from Eton that an upper boy "got spurs and rode some of us (lower boys) over a leap positively impossible to be leaped over with a person on your back, and every time (which is every time) we cannot accomplish it he spurs us violently, and my thigh is quite sore with the inroads made by those dreadful spurs; my new coat is completely ruined." In the next year Ashley minor, a son of Lord Shaftesbury, died in consequence of a fight which lasted two hours and a quarter on the same evening. The quarrel originated about a seat in the upper school.

Dr. Keate spoke about the sad event to the school three days later; he blamed the boys for letting the fight go on so long, but was not to be "seduced into any namby pamby peace-at-any-price sentimentalism." He said: "Not that I object to all fighting in itself; on the contrary, I like to see a boy return a blow." Such a state of things has fortunately entirely disappeared; a clergyman, a head master, a doctor of divinity, however much he might feel that the meek acceptance of injuries was not the sign of a keen and generous character, yet would now hesitate to mark fighting with his approval before an audience of boys whom he was bound by statute to instruct in Christian principles.—National Review.

How His Heart Was Won.

When Colonel Van Wyck was running for congress many years ago in the Fifteenth New York district, there was a certain Irishman who steadfastly refused to give the old soldier any encouragement. The colonel was greatly surprised, therefore, when Pat informed him on election day that he had concluded to support him.

"Glad to hear it, glad to hear it," said the colonel. "I rather thought you were against me, Patrick."

"Well, sir," said Patrick, "I wuz, and whin ye stud by me pigpen and talked that day fur two hours or worse ye didn't budge me a hair's breadth, sir; but after ye wuz gone away I got to thinking now ye reached yer hand over the fence and scratched the pig on the back till he laid down wid the pleasure of it, and I made up me mind that whin a rale colonel was as sociable as that I wasn't the man to vote agin him."—Nebraska State Journal.

ROLL CALL.

Aldermen present—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Watts, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette and Cromb.

Aldermen absent—W. E. Walker.

The committee appointed to confer with A. Walter regarding sewer, reported as follows:

To the Honorable City Council of the city of Crookston:

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee to whom was referred the matter of the sewer near the Crookston Brewery, beg leave to report as follows: We have consulted with A. Walters and he will give easement across his property for the sewer on condition that his assessment on property south of Fifth street be reduced to $50, and that any surplus clay after filling sewer be given him to fill excavation caused by old sewer. We advise acceptance of this offer.

JAS. E. MORRISEY.
J. H. MCGLOGAN.

Moved by Alderman Watts, seconded by Alderman Morrisey that the report be accepted and adopted and the city attorney be instructed to draw up a contract. A call of the ayes and nays resulted as follows:

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the report of the commissioners upon appraisment of damages and cost of grading on Ash, Broadway and Robert streets be referred back to them for revisement. Carried.

The committee appointed on the landslide on Robert street reported as follows:

CROOKSTON, Minn., July 25, 1892.
Honorable City Council city of Crookston, Minn.:

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee, appointed to examine the land-slide on the north side of Robert street, near the Sampson addition bridge, would report as follows: Upon examining the ground we found that it would be necessary to build about 210 feet of a retaining wall; we also found that a good foundation for such a wall at that point could be reached at a depth of about nine feet. We would therefore recommend that a retaining wall about 210 feet in length be built where the city engineer may direct; said retaining wall to consist of good sound oak piling driven at intervals of five feet from centre to centre, well capped with an oak cap; said wall to be locked to the bank with a sufficient number of good oak locks, placed as directed by the city engineer. The wall to be built as high as the sub-grade of the sidewalk thereat. We estimate the cost of such retaining wall, including the filling of the street adjoining at $350.

Respectfully submitted,

I. U. JENNINGS,
FRED ANDERSON, } Committee.
CITY ENGINEER,

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that the report be adopted. Carried.

Moved by Ald. Childs, seconded by Ald. Watts, that the question as to what fund the money be taken from to pay for this improvement be referred to the city attorney for his opinion. Carried.

Moved by Ald. Morrisey, seconded by Ald. Watts, that the city engineer be instructed to examine the mouth of the main sewer and report its condition at the next meeting. Carried.

The city engineer submitted a communication calling attention to the condition of the floor of the Sampson addition bridge, and upon motion by Ald. Morrisey, seconded by Ald. Childs, the city engineer was instructed to advertise for bids for repairing same. Carried.

THE DELEGATES.

Full Report of the Republican and Democratic County Conventions.

Names of the Delegates Named to Attend the State Conventions.

The Resolutions and Platform Adopted By the Republican County Convention.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The convention met at two o'clock and the committee on permanent organization recommended that the temporary organization be made permanent.

The committee on credentials reported 65 delegates present, and submitted the following resolutions to the convention, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That towns not represented in this convention by regularly elected delegates, that any resident of said town be authorized to cast the vote of said town.

Resolved, That in the absence of any of the delegates from the different towns, the attending delegate be authorized to cast the full vote for said town.

TIM SULLIVAN, Sec.
A. KAISER, Chairman.

The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

The Republican party of Polk county in convention assembled, at Crookston, Minnesota, this July 27th, 1892, do hereby promulgate the following as a declaration of principles and convictions.

1. That the administration of President Harrison is thoroughly American, wise and patriotic, and a splendid illustration of his fidelity to his pledges and to the interests of the Republic.

2. We cheerfully endorse the platform of principles enunciated by the National Republican convention held in Minneapolis, and endorse the nominees of that convention and ask the co-operation of all our citizens in securing the splendid victory at the polls with which a loyal people will reward our president for his noble actions during the past.

3. We endorse that bill now pending in congress known as the "Anti-option Bill," and ask of our senators and representatives in congress to give their hearty support thereto.

4. We recognize the fidelity and ability with which Senator Davis has supported and upheld the interests of Minnesota and the northwest, especially in his loyal advocacy of cheaper transportation rates by the improvement of the harbors, locks and canals of the great lakes, and we heartily endorse him for re-election to the United States senate.

5. We believe the best interests of the Republican party and the people of the state of Minnesota will be served by the nomination of Hon. Knute Nelson for Governor.

6. We believe that money in sufficient volume, whether gold, silver or paper, should be issued to meet the just requirements of trade; that each dollar, whether gold, silver or paper should be as good as any other dollar.

7. We endorse the action of the present administration in its efforts to bring together an international silver conference and earnestly desire that such conference may result in giving to the world the double standard of gold and silver, fixing silver at its normal and true value, so that both standards may be continuously used as the money of the world.

8. We endorse the present national banking laws and deprecate any policy antagonistic thereto.

9. We recognize the menance to republican institutions which the rapid centralization of capital in a few hands presents, and demand the enforcement of present laws, and where necessary the passage of further legislation, to prevent and keep down all trusts, monopolies and the fictitious capitalization of all the incorporated elements of transportation, whether by rail or water.

10. We demand that the state inspection department be severed and kept free from party politics.

Motion to proceed to the nomination of delegates to the State convention prevailed; also a motion that each commissioner district select one candidate. The several districts presented the following candidates:

1st District—Al Kaiser.
2d District—Gunder Krostue.
3d District—L. K. Aaker.
4th District—J. Holmes.
5th District—Tim Sullivan.

The convention then proceeded to ballot for six delegates at large, resulting in the choice of the following named gentlemen: Thos. Nesbit, Andrew Opheim, A. D. Stephens, C. O. Christianson, P. J. McGuire and Geo. H. Palmer.

Motion that each commissioner district proceed to select one candidate for the congressional convention at Moorhead on Sept. 1st prevailed, and the following gentlemen were so selected:

1st District—J. P. Johnson.
2d District—Jas. Baine.
3d District—Hugh Thompson.
4th District—Nick Nelson.
5th District—T. J. McAdam.

H. E. Cooke and J. Rosaaen were elected delegates at lage. On motion the convention adjourned.

The Democrats Meet.

The delegates to the democratic convention assembled at the court house and organized by electing M. E. Kirsch temporary chairman and W. H. Averill temporary secretary. The following committees were then named by the chair:

Credentials: Jas. Smith, Wm. Anglim, Timothy Sullivan, A. Gilmour and Arthur Dufresne.

Permanent organization: W. E. McKenzie, J. F. Holmes, John O'Leary, John Mickulecky and Sam'l Sutor.

Resolutions: P. J. Russell, Martin O'Brien, P. J. Falardeau, G. H. Barlow and J. E. Morrisey.

The committee named were ratified by the convention, which then adjourned.

At 1 p. m. the convention reassembled and the different committees reported. Fifty-six delegates were reported present; the temporary organization was made permanent; and a platform was adopted.

The following delegates to the state convention were then named: Alex. McKinnon, J. E. Morrisey, A. Dufresne, J. F. Holmes, Thos. Wallace, Geo. O'Reilly and A. Gilmour.

Veterans' Route to the Encampment.

Veterans going to the G. A. R. Encampment at Washington in September via the B. & O. R. R. will traverse territory fraught with a thousand reminiscenses of the conflict in which they figured so gallantly. Along Cheat River, on the western slope of the Alleghanies, they will pass the scenes of General McClellan's victories over Gen. Floyd in the early stages of the war. At Grafton they will pass near the battlefield of Phillippi. At Piedmont they will enter the historic Potomac valley, which was debatable ground all the way to Washington. The towering mountains, which shut in the valley, echoed and re-echoed almost hourly with the roar of cannon and musketry. The mountain tops witnessed the engagements at Martinsburg, Antietam, Sharpsburg, South Mountain, Monocacy, Ball's Bluff, Leesburg, Dranesville, Chantilly, Centreville and the hundreds of skirmishes along the hillsides and in the valleys. At the foot of the mountains along the banks of the Potomac, paced the solitary sentry, protecting often the tracks and trains of the B. & O. R. R., which the government zealously as the great highway of communication between the West and the National Capital, and which is the best known route to the East to thousands of veterans who traveled over it early in the sixties as raw recruits to join the ranks. And the Potomac! What memories its mention awakens! And Harper's Ferry too! There stood John Brown's old fort. There "Stonewall" Jackson performed his great exploits. It was near there that Lee crossed the Potomac into Maryland and then invaded Pennsylvania to meet the repulse at Gettysburg. At Harper's Ferry begins the famous Shenandoah valley, which is penetrated from end to end by the B. & O. R. R., bringing into easy access the battlefields of Winchester, Kernstown, Opequan, Cedar Creek, Fisher's Hill, Front Royal, New Market, Harrisonburg, Cross Keys, Port Republic, Waynesboro and McDowell. What memories of heroism, of forced marches, of victories and defeats these names recall! And with them comes trooping from the past the names of Sheridan, of Pope, of Banks, of Fremont, of Shields, of "Stonewall" Jackson, of Lee, of Ashby and of Early.

It is only by the B. & O. R. R. that these famous battlefields can be reached. During the encampment excursions will be run to them daily from Washington at greatly reduced rates. Excursions will also be run to Gettysburg, to Manassas, to Bull Run, to Fredericksburg and other Virginia battlefields.

A DISGRACEFUL ALLIANCE.

The Fusion in Kansas Between the Democrats and the People's Party.

The contrast between the action of the Democratic state convention of Kansas and the Republican state convention of Arkansas, which have just been held, is at once a striking illustration of the tendency of Democracy to adopt any course to defeat the Republican party, and of the firm purpose of Republicans to maintain Republican principles under all circumstances.

The Democrats of Kansas indorsed the electoral ticket of the People's party. In other western states they are said to contemplate similar fusions. Their action is proof of their willingness to do anything to defeat the Republican presidential ticket, however disgraceful an alliance may be required. The Republicans of Arkansas have rejected all overtures from the People's party to form a coalition to fight the Democrats, because the third party made it a condition of the fusion that Republicans should support the People's party electors.

The fusion in Kansas between the Democrats and the People's party is an evidence that the Democratic party is tending toward the crazy doctrines that have been enunciated from Omaha. Republicans in Arkansas have demonstrated their belief in holding fast to sound principles of government.—New York Press.

Another Chance to Reduce Wages.

If the rich man is given the opportunity in America of buying foreign goods free from duties, it is as clear as daylight that the American worker, in order to earn wages at home, must sell what he makes as low as the rich man can buy the foreign article. Indeed, with free trade, in order to hold his own market he will have to sell what he makes a little lower than the foreign article. With free trade, then, how can he sell goods in his own market? Simply by reducing his wages a little lower than his brother worker abroad receives. He has another chance to reduce his wages by voting for the free trade Democratic party.—Philadelphia North American.

The Great Unconscious Humorist.

Mr. Grover Cleveland has assumed many absurd attitudes in the course of his public career, and more than once provoked the public to laughter, but nothing he has ever done or said more nearly reached the height of the ridiculous than the ponderous platitudes regarding patriotism and politics with which his Fourth of July letter to Tammany Hall closes. Nobody but a great unconscious humorist like Mr. Cleveland would have thought for a moment of referring to a Tammany celebration as an attempt to teach the public that the Declaration of Independence was a movement to secure self government, and that patriotism must be unselfish.—Cleveland Leader.

A Poor Investment Indeed.

It has been figured out by a man with an inquiring turn of mind that the cost of the presidential campaign and the elections will be at least one dollar for every one of the 12,500,000 votes that will probably be cast next November. This is a large sum of money—a very large sum—and the people of this great republic ought to pause and reflect before they alow it to be spent in the election of a Democratic president. It would not be a grood investment.—Burlington (Ia.) Hawkeye.

A Logical Conclusion.

Workingmen, answer this question: Suppose that the workers in foreign lands are given the privilege of selling their goods here free of duties, and suppose you and I are permitted to buy said goods, does it not follow that all other buyers will buy them also? Does it not follow that just so much labor and just so much wages are lost to Americans?—Philadelphia North American.

No Ear for Calamity Howlers.

The calamity howlers complain that deafness is becoming prevalent. A man whose wages are as high as ever and who sees his country the most prosperous does not lend his ear very readily to calamity cries.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Kansas Will Finish in the Van.

There will be a close race this year between Kansas and Pennsylvania for the honor of being the banner Republican state, but Kansas feels confident of gaining this distinction.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

It Looks That Way.

Are the Democratic managers going to organize the Democratic national committee against Mr. Cleveland? This is the question that is puzzling the Sage of Buzzard's Bay just now.—New York Recorder.

Fifer's Title Is Clear.

"Private Joe" comes from the same town as "General" Stevenson, and did more fighting in war time than the "general." But then his military title is not in dispute.—Chicago News.

Cleveland Has Forgotten.

"General" A. E. Stevenson is anxiously hoping that some kind friend will soon inform Mr. Cleveland that there is such a town as Bloomington on the map. —Buffalo Express.

All Will Support It.

Colonel Clarkson will support the ticket. So will every other Republican. The ticket will be elected by a safe majority without doubt.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Sizz, Boom, Ah—h!

The Kansas Democrats have resolved to fuse with the People's party. This means that they have resolved to fizzle out of existence.—New York Recorder.

And the Boy Got Lost.

Mr. Cleveland must have intrusted his letter of congratulations to Mr. Stevenson to a district messenger boy.—Chicago Mail.

DODGING THE ISSUE.

DEMOCRATIC NEWSPAPERS IN THEIR MOST CONGENIAL ROLE.

Three Quotations Showing That the Tariff Plank in the Democratic Platform Means Free Trade Pure and Simple. Too Late to Retreat Now.

The disposition on the part of Democratic organs to run away from the confederate free trade plank in the Chicago platform is becoming general. This open declaration of war on American industries was uproariously greeted and jubilantly adopted by the Democratic national convention. An overwhelming majority of the delegates declared that it represented the principles and purposes of the Democracy, and the party prepared to begin a campaign for Cleveland and undisguised free trade. But the tremendous volume of angry protest from the masses of voters whose comfort and independence were menaced by this free trade threat promptly produced its effect. The free trade press began an absurdly futile endeavor to hedge. Of all the hedgers the New York Times is the most helpless and the most ridiculous.

The attempt of the Mugwump newspaper that is printed on imported British presses to prove that the representatives of the Democracy at Chicago were either fools, who did not know what they said, or willful falsifiers who published to the world as the most vital plank in their platform a statement which they knew to be a lie, is so diverting that we regret that we have not the space to reproduce the whole of it. As it is, we must content ourselves with reprinting a few of the most striking portions. It is to be feared that our Mugwump contemporary fatally damages its own case by making such astounding confessions as these:

"No protest or disclaimer, no professions of platforms, candidates or campaign orators can ever acquit the Democrats of the odious charge of being free traders.

"The Democratic yellow dog with the free trade tin can tied to its tail is legging it for dear life, with the entire Republican party yelling prodigiously in furious pursuit."

The aptness of the concluding illustration cannot fail to impress every reader. Incidentally we may remark that the Republicans propose to have a great deal of fun with that yellow dog before the campaign is ended.

The assertions made by The Times are as remarkable as its admissions. It pleads piteously as an excuse for the confederate plank that it "was not a deliberate and matured pronouncement;" it declares that the plank had been "purposely drawn in rough and intemperate language" for the purpose of embarrassing the feeble Cleveland element, which, as it embraced only a little more than two-thirds of the convention, was of course unable to make its real sentiments felt, and it closes with the stupendous statement that the tariff declaration in which was framed the great issue of the campaign was so little heeded by the Democratic convention that General Sickles, "Neal, of Ohio, and Watterson were the only persons in the convention who knew or cared" what this, the most important plank in the Democratic plank, said or signified.

The Chicago tariff plank itself and the declaration as to Democratic policy by newspapers and public men that are conspicuously hostile to the Republican party constitute the most fitting comment on the wild efforts of the Cleveland organs to propitiate protectionists without offending free traders. Here is the essential portion of the plank:

"We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the federal government has no constitutional power to enforce and collect tariff duties except for the purposes of revenue only."

This is the editorial utterance of the London Graphic, made within twenty-four hours after the Chicago platform had been cabled to England:

"Englishmen will watch Mr. Cleveland's campaign with cordial sympathy, for not only is his tariff policy in accord with the orthodox economic school of England, but his party platform wisely condemned the arrogant and irritating foreign policy of its opponents."

A very few days ago Henry George, whose ability and candor Democratic organs are never weary of praising, and whose free trade works the Democratic majority in the house have been surreptitiously circulating in The Congressional Record, said this of the Chicago platform:

"Thank God! At last, quicker even than we had more than dared to hope, what we have struggled for and waited for has come to pass, and the two great political parties of the United States stand fronting each other on the naked question of protection or free trade!"

The Democratic free trade standard has been firmly planted and conspicuously flaunted. It cannot be covered up now. But those who assisted in planting it can effectively call attention to their own cowardice and dishonesty by pretending to disavow the issue which they themselves have made.—New York Press.

A Regular Calamity Shouter.

Doubtless Stevenson is in harmony with the principles of the People's party. He used to be a Greenbacker and calamity shouter. Probably on national issues he still stands on about the same ground as Peffer, Weaver and the rest of the third party leaders.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Better Call Off the Jonah.

If Mr. Stevenson desires to be the vice president of these United States he should at an early date do something to antagonize the New York Sun.—Chicago Mail.

Loyal Tammany.

Mr. Croker sends a message out west that Tammany will be "loyal." Yes, "loyal" to itself.—New York Recorder.

WORKINGMEN ARE NOT FOOLS.

Free Trade Would Be the Greatest Curse That Could Befall America.

Democratic organs and campaign demagogues, paid out of Cobden club corruption funds, are endeavoring to convince the workingmen that they would be as well off under a free trade as under a protection policy. There are hundreds and hundreds of thousands of mechanics who have worked in the factories of the free trade barons of Manchester, Birmingham and other great English manufacturing centers. They know how absurdly false those arguments are.

Free trade would be the greatest curse that could befall the workingmen of America. The manufacturers could accommodate themselves to the change in a short time—first, by reducing wages, and, second, by extending the hours of labor. All the unions of the workers would be powerless to prevent these two inevitable results. The workingmen would of course bitterly resist the reduction of the one and the extension of the other. We should have long strikes and, it is feared, violence. In that event the free trade president would be compelled to call out the troops to preserve the peace against the dupes who voted for him.—New York Recorder.

What "Tariff for Revenue" Means.

The Democratic doctrine of a "tariff for revenue only" is a direct step toward absolute free trade. Every workingman knows that when the protective idea is cast aside by lowering the duties merely to produce revenue, at once the goods made abroad are rushed into this country to compete with the home made article. This not only destroys home work, but produces a much greater revenue. Then to bring the income from duties down to lower proportions the "for revenue only" advocates cut the duties down still lower, the result of which is more foreign goods, less work at home and more revenue than before. Then to stop the increased revenue free trade is inaugurated absolutely. In the meantime Europe will have drained the gold resources of this country, the American workingman will have been lowered many steps below his brother worker abroad, his occupation will have been taken from him and his workshops closed.—Philadelphia North American.

What He Can't Stand.

There is nothing the free trader so detests as "Republican" protection. Let it take any shape but that and he can swallow it, but "Republican" protection gags him. He has been gagging for the last thirty-two years. How much longer he will gag depends upon the length of his days. Sugar coat protection with "raw materials," or with "revenue tariff only," or with any suggested free trade capsule or British syrup and he can bolt it, but straight Republican protection strangles him, turns him inside out, and makes him, oh, so sick!—New Haven Evening Leader.

Vote for Harrison.

Because his administration has been clean, able and efficient at every point. Thomas Jefferson said the true test for every American official was: Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he faithful to the constitution? President Harrison has been all that. No scandal has soiled his administration. No one questions its capacity. It has managed the nation's finances well, conducted every department creditably, and the naval department brilliantly. And its foreign diplomacy has been simply grand. Can we do better than repeat that record? One good term deserves another. —New York Recorder.

Proved to Be Liars.

To judge from the utterances of the Democratic papers there are no such things in the United States as tinplate works. Yet in today's Record appears the advertisement of a Philadelphia house—N. & G. Taylor company—for skilled workmen in that branch of industry.—Wilkesbarre Record.

An Evidence of Good Will.

When Adlai Stevenson goes to New York to meet the committee to tell him of his nomination, General Palmer, General Black, Colonel Morrison and other leading Democrats should give him letters of introduction. This would be showing good will.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Not Good Form.

It is not considered good form to call for "three cheers and a tiger" for Cleveland at Democratic ratification meetings this year. Any allusion to the Tammany tiger in a Democratic meeting makes even the pretense of enthusiasm impossible.—Ohio State Journal.

The Incompetent Majority.

That "dangerous Democratic majority in congress" has failed to make appropriations for the navy, and "2,000 skilled workmen in Brooklyn will have to leave their work on the new cruisers" unless speedy action is taken by congress.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Watch Tammany!

Tammany must be either a liar or a knave—that is, to assert that Cleveland cannot carry New York and then to officially sanction his enforced nomination. It is a desperate plight. Tammany needs watching.—Schenectady (N. Y.) Union.

A Well Grounded Fear.

Grover Cleveland is fearful that some of the great monopolistic corporations of which he has been acting as attorney will injure him more than their money contributions will make up for in the coming campaign.—Elmira Advertiser.

Why So Slow, Adlai?

Your uncle Isaac Pusey Gray would have gone to Buzzard's Bay long before this, Adlai.—Chicago Mail.

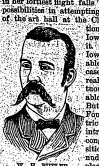
The Silence That Deafens.

"Deep calleth unto deep," but Hill's silence is still both intense and immense. —New York Recorder.

TO DRAPE WORKS OF ART.

Butler, of Iowa, Desires That Statues and Pictures Should "Be Decent."

The imagination is wearied, and fancy in her loftiest flight falls far below the possibilities in attempting to conceive of the art hall at the Chicago exposition as Butler, of Iowa, would have it. Butler, of Iowa—the honorable (and in this case that term really means virtuous and honorable)—Walt H. Butler, of the Fourth Iowa district, has actually introduced into congress a proposition that every nude figure, every plastic or pictorial representation of the human form divine, shall be "appropriately draped," to make it decent.



W. H. BUTLER.

What an advertisement that would be and how the nations would laugh! There would be the Greek Slave with a plaited petticoat and snug bodice, the Venus de Medici with her snowy bosom in a basket corset and her marble limbs gowned, old Atlas in knee breeches and Hercules—well, we should expect to see him in John L. Sullivan rig, with a smashed stovepipe hat shoved down over his forehead and—if consistency is to be observed—a stub cigar in his mouth. On second thoughts we are not sure but there is money in the Butlerian scheme. Its realization would be the joke of the ages.

Walt H. Butler was born Feb. 18, 1852, in Crawford county, Pa., went to Iowa in 1875, became in due time a superintendent of railway mail service and was elected to the Fifty-second congress as a Democrat.

She Was Under the Sofa.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Daily News tells a story of Henrik Ibsen's wooing of his wife. When he fell in love with the beautiful daughter of Pastor Thoresen, how to make known the fact to her troubled him for weeks. At last he resolved to write to her. He would come and fetch his answer the same afternoon at 5. Did the lady accept him she would be "at home;" otherwise not. At 5 o'clock he presented himself and the maid asked him to go into the best room. He was very hopeful and glad to have time to collect himself before he met the lady. But when he had waited half an hour awful doubts began to assail him. After an hour had passed he imagined the letter had not reached the young lady. Some fatal mistake was making a fool of him. Still he waited on.

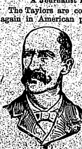
After two hours he began to be ashamed of himself. She would learn that he had sat two hours in that deserted house and would laugh at him. At last he jumped up in a rage and ran to the door. He was opening it when a loud peal of laughter arrested him. He turned and saw the fair head of his adored emerge from under the sofa. Her mouth was laughing, but her eyes were filled with tears. "Oh, you dear good fellow, to wait all this while!" she said. "I wanted to see how many minutes a lover's patience lasts. How hard the floor is! Now help me to get out and then we will talk." In less than a week the marriage was arranged.

The Desire to Be Dosed.

It is the deliberately expressed opinion of a leading St. Louis physician that Americans are a nation of medicine takers. He declares that "the returns from the sales of patent medicines are astonishing, but no general practitioner is at all surprised at this, because he has long since learned that hypochondria exists almost universally and that medicine taking is the great delight of an enormous percentage of mankind. One object a doctor should have in view is to cure with as few doses as possible, and I believe that 99 out of 100 medical students commence practice with this idea. If their experience is like mine they have somewhat let down in their efforts in this direction, and if they have not done so they have certainly offended quite a large number of patients. There seems little to choose between the sexes in the matter of a desire to take medicine regularly, and it is often impossible to persuade an apparently rational minded patient that a cure has been effected, that no more medicine is needed and that nothing but good diet and careful habits are required to build up the constitution."

A Journalist in Politics.

The Taylors are coming to the front again in American politics. So far as known they are not relatives of "Old Zach," but still the name goes. Two brothers of the name were recently rival candidates for governor of Tennessee, and now two Taylors are candidates for secretary of state in Ohio. The Republican candidate is Samuel M. Taylor and the Democratic is William A. Taylor.



W. A. TAYLOR.

The Democratic nominee was born in Perry county, O., fifty years age. At sixteen he began teaching school and devoted his spare hours to reading law with such diligence that at twenty-two he was admitted to the bar. He soon turned his talents into journalism, however, and has worked in turn for the Cincinnati Enquirer, Pittsburg Post, New York Sun and Pittsburg Telegraph, and is once more in the service of The Enquirer. His location is at Columbus, O., where he does the state capital work of The Enquirer. He is also an author of some note and was a soldier in the civil war.

AN OUTRAGEOUS GERRYMANDER.

How Tammany Has Manipulated New York Legislative Districts.

The Tammany Hall committee, which had charge of the legislative reapportionment of the city, sent to the board of aldermen, acting as a board of supervisors, the scheme of redistricting on which Boss Croker and his henchmen had agreed. It is needless to say that the Tammany serfs in the city hall at once executed the orders of their masters. The law provides that the supervisors shall perform this duty, but in this country an irresponsible body unknown to the law did the work, and the supervisors had no more to do with it than the Oklahoma Indians or the savages of darkest Africa.

The reapportionment is a fraud and an outrage upon the Republicans of this city. While the number of districts is increased from twenty-four to thirty, the number of Republicans who can possibly be elected owing to the gerrymander is only three, or about the same as under the old apportionment. The Republican vote of this city for Harrison in 1888 was in round figures 107,000, and for Cleveland 162,000, being a majority of 55,000. Under the manipulation of Tammany the Democrats will have a representation in the assembly nine times as large as that of the Republicans. This is out of all proportion to the numerical strength of the two parties. The Republicans of New York city are practically disfranchised in the assembly.—New York Recorder.

The Difference.

Some of the employees in Coates & Co.'s tin plate mill at Locust point, Baltimore harbor, which was destroyed by fire, received, according to the proprietor, as much as $5.60 a day. The best paid workmen in English tin plate mills (the foreman), according to Mr. Wilkins Frick, formerly secretary of the Wales Tin Plate Makers' association, of Swansea, received $14.40 per week, or $2.40 per day.—New York Press.

A Hard Nut for Democrats.

It is found that there were three times as many strikes in the protected industries during the Cleveland period as there have been for the same length of time under the McKinley law. The strikes in Cleveland's time are just as fairly attributable to the Mills bill as are the strikes now to the McKinley law. A study of these facts ought to teach free trade editors wisdom unless they are indeed past all hope.—Illinois State Journal.

Protection Prevents Strikes.

This larger prosperity of American working classes under the high wages of a protective tariff naturally tends to reduce the amount of labor troubles, and though some friction is always to be expected while social differences exist and human nature remains what it is, nevertheless it is fully demonstrated that protection is preventive rather than promotive of strikes and labor difficulties.—Cleveland Leader.

The Force Bill Absurdity.

The Republicans, with possession of the presidency and the control of congress, would be just about as apt to pass a "force bill" as they would be to enact a law for the re-establishment of slavery. The force bill has just about as much of a legitimate place as an issue in the campaign as Lincoln's emancipation proclamation.—Denver Sun.

Let Stevenson Testify.

The congressional investigating committee at Homestead should have summoned the Democratic candidate for vice president as a witness, and had him give the results of his experience as an employer of nonunion labor in his Illinois coal mine.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Stevenson as a Vote Drawer.

Old Republican voters of Illinois who have not been going to the polls for several years will all go this year and cast their ballots because of the nomination of Stevenson. And the result will be unfortunate for Mr. Stevenson.—Lawrence Journal.

No Sulking Among Republicans.

There is a chance that Mr. Blaine will make two or three rousing speeches for the ticket before the campaign closes. There will be no sulking among Republicans anywhere this year.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

This Settles It.

Governor Boies, of Iowa, will take the stump for Cleveland and Stevenson. In view of this announcement we do not expect to see Iowa give more than 25,000 majority for the Republican ticket.—New York Press.

Ballad of Buzzard's Bay.

The Mugwump wrings the wrinkles from his hair,
The loonbird calls throughout the long dark night,
The wise owl flutters from her free trade lair,
The groundhog blinks and battens in the light;
The small boy reverently flies his kite,
No ribald winds dare thither idly stray;
The solemn fish think twice before they bite
On the consecrated shores of Buzzard's bay!

The Yarmouth bloater bloats; the erudite
Read cyclopædias and load for bear;
[illegible] poet maunders up a wordy height
[illegible]d fires a feeling sonnet at the air;
[illegible]d-boltered ghosts of force bills lurk and scare
[illegible]he curious bumpkins till they flee away;
[illegible] sage seeks out secluded nests-de-mare
[illegible]n the consecrated shores of Buzzard's bay!

[illegible] Fat Man in the Moon with envious glare Sees the Fat Man of Earth, and in despite [illegible]roans for more fatness; dodos nest and pair,
And with their large, smooth bills the landscape smite;
[illegible]rish potatoes find their jackets tight,
And swell and bust 'em; there's the deuce to pay,
Before the campaign's really open quite
On the consecrated shores of Buzzard's bay!

ENVOI.

Even the wild waves don't care what they say—
And right is wrong, and everything is write

GROVER'S A "VICTIM."

ALL DEMOCRATS ARE ANXIOUS TO BE "PERSECUTED" SIMILARLY.

What "Republican Oppression" Has Done for the Dispenser of Flatulent Platitudes and Encyclopedic "Epigrams," Worth One Thousand Dollars a Pound.

A correspondent writes to ask why The Recorder does not include in its list of the "Victims of Republican Oppression" Grover Cleveland? Our correspondent calls attention to the fact that for the first time in its history, as a party, the Democracy has chosen one man as its standard bearer for a third term.

In answer to our correspondent we desire to say that the idiocy of the Democratic party in regard to the presidency and the nomination to the first office in the gift of the people is something with which we have no concern.

But the second proposition of our correspondent demands an answer.

We have refrained from placing Mr. Cleveland in the list of the "Victims of Republican Oppression" as a matter of political charity. We do not wish to add to the grave burden of political calamity that oppresses him at the present time. He has Hill and Dana and Croker and Tammany and the great Mugwump load to carry, and it is enough for any man.

The Republican party persecuted him in the past. It robbed him, according to his own plaintive story, as a poor farmer's boy. It cheated him as a poor law clerk, and in his adopted city of Buffalo it pursued him with all its tariff "iniquities" so remorselessly that he became a sheriff and a mayor, and finally the governor of the Empire State, and, last of all, the president of the United States.

For the benefit of the tariff barons it fleeced him to such an extent that he has become a millionaire, or very near to the millionaire mark. It has put the fees and the retainers of the millionaire barons in the green bag of his law firm. It has given him a handsome mansion among the Jersey pine trees. It has given him a townhouse in the choicest and most aristocratic section of the first of American cities. It has given him a home on the shores of Buzzard's bay. This victim of Republican oppression has a home in three states, and he made while he was president a good sized fortune out of a real estate speculation at the capital of the nation. There is not a Democrat in the land who is not dying to be "persecuted" in the same way.

Mr. Cleveland, according to Mr. Dana, weighs more than three hundred. He has to his bank credit more than one thousand dollars for every pound of mental and physical avoirdupois. It is a great record.

As a victim of oppression he wears the biggest "belt" in the country. He is a first-class specimen of the outrageous policy of "robbing the many for the benefit of the few." Look at him and say if we are not right. If he had not been "robbed" what a magnificent figure he would be!—New York Recorder.

Crawled Through the Same Hole.

The Atlanta Constitution, like the New York Sun, looking for a loophole to escape from utter demoralization, concluded to join The Sun and crawl through the same hole. That hole is "the force bill," and "the force bill" simply demands that "every man, rich and poor, black and white," should be granted his legal right to cast a ballot and have it counted. Such a demand frightens The Sun and Constitution until they cannot sleep.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

It Won't Fool the Voters.

Screaming about the "force bill" will not fool the voters of the country, though many of the leading Democratic journals are engaged in that detestable task in a desperate hope to distract attention from their party's attitude on the tariff. In fact, on the issue of a free and honest ballot the Democracy is as weak as it is everywhere else.—Boston Journal.

Rather Early to Give Up.

Free trade will tide us over,
And if we'll stick to that alone,
'Twill land us both in clover.

Says Steve to Cleve

If we are going to win this fight
'Twill be by rank inflation.

And when election day comes round,
They'll find themselves not "in it."

We deeply grieve
O'er our sad situation.

UNDER A MOVING TRAIN.

Sensations of a Man Who Thought His Last Hour Had Come.

To fall under a running railroad train, to lie on the rail and see death approaching one at the rate of fifteen miles or so an hour and only a few feet distant, is an experience not given to many to be able to relate. Yet this is what happened to a Chicago man.

"How did it happen? What were you thinking about?" he was asked the other day.

"Well," he replied, "I had no time to find out how it happened, but I do remember a good many things that I thought of while it was happening. Now it seems utterly impossible to me that such a flood of thoughts could flash through my brain and leave their individual and distinct impressions as did in the almost immeasurable short space of time that I lay on the rail in front of those wheels. It is said that just at the moment of one's death the whole doings of a lifetime are held up for review in less time than it takes to wink one's eye. I can readily believe it.

"In less than a second I thought of the many railroad accidents of which I had read. It flashed through my mind that I had often seen men credited with willful negligence or reckless intention in allowing themselves to be killed or maimed, and there I was on the track ready to furnish another illustration. Yes, sir; there I lay, flat on my back on the rail and saw the wheels of the after truck of the car come rolling along and only a few feet away. It almost seemed as if I felt them crushing and grinding my bones, yet I had, it seems, time to think also of how easily a fellow gets killed.

"I thought how foolish it was to accuse others of foolhardiness in getting run over when I myself was about to become a horrible example. I thought of how often I had 'let up lightly' engineers and conductors and helped to take the blame from them and put it on the fellow who got killed. But my greatest regret, in the time I had to think, was that I had so often adversely criticised the man who got run over.

"Strange as it may seem, however, these were not half my thoughts. I realized that I was yet alive, in the best of good health, every bone and limb sound, so to speak, and the next instant I would, I felt, be ground into pieces and my flesh and bones spattered over the railroad track. There was no power in the world to help me, so it seemed; not all that the engineers or conductors or brakemen could do would be of any avail. Then it flashed through my mind that I was on the brink of the other world and I had not even a chance to make one repentant prayer. I wondered what it would mean for me.

"While these ideas were running through my mind I must have made some sort of an effort to escape. I have no knowledge of how I did it, but I did roll off the rail outward. The wheel caught my heel, though at first it seemed as if my foot was cut off above the ankle and I was powerless to move it. I managed to get onto my right foot and balance myself on that for a second, to get my thoughts together as to what I should next do. It has taken me ten or fifteen minutes to tell this thing, but it did not, I should judge, from the rate the train was going, take anything like a second of time for it all to happen."—Chicago Tribune.

Took His Word for It.

At the battle of Seven Pines or Fair Oaks the Fifth New Jersey in connection with the regiments of the Second brigade and others, ably attested the universal confidence reposed in them by their commanders. Senator Wade, at Bull Run, said, "Give us a brigade of these Jerseymen and we'll beat the enemy still."

During the engagement of June 1 a Union soldier had his leg shot off by a ball from the enemy's artillery.

Captain Ramsey ordered one of his men (an Irishman from New Jersey) to assist the wounded man to the rear. Pat, while giving the necessary assistance, asked the man how and where he had been wounded.

"My leg was shattered by a cannon ball during the last attack," was the reply.

On the way to the hospital a fragment of shell took the already badly wounded man's head entirely off, unnoticed by Pat, who was carrying his comrade in his arms.

Upon arriving at the temporary hospital one of the surgeons, after looking at the man, said: "What did you bring this man here for?"

"Sure, Captain Ramsey tould me to," said Pat.

"Why, the man is dead; his head is completely shattered from his body," replied the doctor.

"His head, is it? Oh, the blaggard; shure and he tould me it was his leg, so he did."—New York Recorder.

How Chinamen Are Shaved.

The Chinese of San Francisco shave nearly every day. A queer little razor it is that they use, too. It is in no respect like our razor, except in the matter of the keenness of its edge. It is a wee bit of a blade, nicely curved into a semicircle. With this tool the Chinese barber scrapes the almost hirsuteless face of his customer and then shaves him around the ears and down the neck to the first bone of the spinal column. The rounded point of the razor is also inserted into the Celestial ear, and every ambitious hair that dares to show itself in the aricular lobe is clipped before it proceeds very far. The Chinaman, you know, is scrupulously cleanly about his ears. A growth of hair in them is considered a mark of low birth or of carelessness or ungenteel habits.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE anti-option bill is laid over till next session of Congress, when Senator Washburn will make another fight for it. It strikes us that this bill should become a law.

MANAGER Frick, of the Carnegie mills at Homestead, who was shot by anarchist Bergman, is slowly recovering, and if blood poisoning does not set in he will soon be entirely well. He has never relaxed control of the business of the immense concern.

IF the Homestead people receive "starvation wages"—as the democratic press would have the people believe—how is it that they have so much money saved up, both in the treasuries of their unions and in their private accounts, that they can go out on strike for an indefinite period?

THE Marshall county democratic convention instructed their delegates to the judicial convention to support Judge Mills, the present incumbent, who has filled his office satisfactorily to all classes. Judge Mills will receive the entire republican and democratic vote of this district, and a large proportion of the People's party. It is generally believed that the district judgeship should not be a partizan office, but that a judge and not a politician should be elected for this most important position.

MINNEAPOLIS is bound to be ahead of St. Paul. When the St. Paul papers announced that 4 and 9-10th inches of rain had fallen in St. Paul on the night of the 20th, the Minneapolis papers came out with the statement that 7 and 8-10th inches of rain had fallen in the Flour city during the same period. As the most damage was done in St. Paul it looks as if the city "at the head of navigation" was "padding" again.

JOEL P. HEATWOLE received the nomination in the Third district for Congress, and now if Gen. Clapp will accept the nomination in the Seventh the State of Minnesota will stand a good chance for being redeemed. Elsewhere we publish a dispatch to the Evening Journal of an interview, but that is not official. The General agrees to officially notify Capt. Donaldson, chairman of the Seventh district congressional committee of his decision, which he has not done as yet, so what his decision will be remains to be seen.

As long as Johann Most and other anarchist leaders are allowed the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press to disseminate their treasonable and anarchistic ideas, just so long will such tragedies as the shooting of Frick occur. In the last issue of the Freiheit, the official organ of the anarchists, under the heading "Frick Is Shot," Johann Most continues: "Down with Frick. A man like him has no right to live. His hands are stained with the blood of workingmen by the wholesale," etc. Is it any wonder that such wretches as Bergman, who have such doctrine continually preached to them, finally get worked into a state of excitement when they think it a sacred duty to go and murder some of these supposed "oppressors of the people?" The poor tool who commits the outrage is arrested, tried, imprisoned or hanged, while the man who incites him to acts of violence goes scott free. Most and all such leaders should be driven from the country under penalty of death ever to return.

THE punishment inflicted upon private Iams of the Pennsylvania militia at Homestead, for offering three cheers for the man who shot Frick, was brutal and inhuman. Iams is a young man of perhaps little judgment, and being a workingman his sympathies are naturally with the strikers, although he was doing duty against them as a militiaman. To have discharged him and disgraced him by taking off his uniform and drumming him out of camp would have been sufficient punishment for the offence committed and a warning to any of the soldiers who might be inclined to give vent to similar sentiments. But to suspend him by the thumbs until further suffering would endanger his life—until his pulse reached 120 and his head hung limp on his breast—was a punishment which should only be meted out for crime, and not for the indiscreet remarks of an excited soldier. Iams will institute a suit against Col. Streator, who ordered the punishment; and several lawyers have offered their services to Iams free of charge. From Col. Streator's standpoint Iam's crime was not so much in uttering the words he did as in not retracting them when asked to do so by his colonel. Even while hanging by the thumbs he still refused to retract, and acted defiantly till the last. His conduct merited punishment but not torture.

IN QUARANTINE.

Last Saturday Gov. Burke of North Dakota issued a proclamation, declaring quarantine against Manitoba. All trains south from Winnipeg to the boundary line were cancelled, and on all trains on the Northern Pacific railroad a notice of the proclamation was posted and such trains only ran to the boundary line. It is said that only a few cases of small pox at Gretna is the cause and much dissatisfaction exists on account of the quarantine, but if an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure the quarantine is a wise measure.

A NEW ERA IN POLITICS.

In speaking of the republican state convention which was held in the People's church in St. Paul, the St. Paul Dispatch says: "A political convention in a house of worship, with redolent oratory from the pulpit and caucusing among the pews, is certainly an innovation even in these times of party reformation. But when it was explained to many of the wandering delegates from some of the up country districts that the selection of the People's church for holding republican state convention, was in no manner attributable to the people's party, and that conversion to any other political faith would not be attempted, the explanation was accepted, although the more skeptical old timers preferred a convention hall where smoking was allowed, as in the days of yore. But the auditorium of the church is an ideal place for gatherings of this character. Roomy, cool, well lighted, and with admirable acoustic properties, the main floor of the church to-day was never occupied with a better satisfied body than the members of the big convention. Then too, the People's church is like its creed, broad-gauged, liberal, justice-loving and progressive, even as the cardinal doctrines of the grand old party assembled in convention today beneath its roof. The convention marks the beginning of the new era in the political history of Minnesota, and it remained for the republican party to inaugurate it. Heretofore party nominees have been chosen in smoke-enveloped halls, in the midst of surroundings where the presence of ladies was of necessity prohibited, and often have the proceedings been of such a belligerent nature that when subsequently reviewed those who participated really wondered if they had ever taken a prominent part in the exciting events. To-day the presence of a number of the fair sex, wives and daughters of many of the prominent republicans in the state, and those of the delegates also, rendered the convention from the start a most dignified and decorous body.

ON Friday of last week a number of the delegates in the Seventh Congressional district waited on Attorney General M. E. Clapp, at his office at the capital and asked him to become a candidate for congress in this district. After hearing what they had to say the general thanked them for their good opinion and said that while he had never had any ambition to go to the lower house in congress, this expression, coming from his old neighbors and friends, was very flattering and he should like to reciprocate, but his business arrangements, which he had already made, might be such as to call for his entire time and attention; they were of such a nature as to prevent him making any arrangements for the future without consulting his partners, which he would do at once and make answer to Capt. H. W. Donaldson, the chairman of the 7th district congressional committee at an early day. It is hoped that he will accept.

A SPECIAL to the Minneapolis Journal, under date of Aug. 2d, says:

Atty-Gen. Clapp, who is here looking after his interests in the Mesaba range, has decided not to be a candidate for congress in the Seventh district. "It is true," he said, "that I have been offered unanimous nomination by the Republicans of the Seventh district, but it is utterly impossible for me to accept on account of the many private interests which demand my closest attention. Any good Republican can win in the Sev-that Boen, the People's party candidate, is a strong man, is erroneous. There will be an Alliance candidate as well as a Democrat in the field, and the Republican nominee should easily carry the district."

LAST week the people of the eastern and middle states suffered from the annual mid-summer heated spell. In Chicago there were hundreds of cases of sunstroke and dozens of deaths. The hospitals were filled to overflowing, and the ambulances were kept on the run; the police force were worked to their utmost capacity to keep the streets clear of horses that were overcome by the heat and the business of the city was almost paralyzed for a time. Although the weather in Minnesota was warm there was no suffering from the effects of the heat. Take it all the year round, and there are few places in this country which equal the Red River Valley for a healthy and endurable climate.

TO SECURE PINE LAND.

A Modification of a Bill Which Allows the Purchase of Timber Land at a Low Figure.

Senator Pettigrew has made a conference report (which was adopted) on a bill which enacts some of the most important legislation for the Northwest that has passed at this session.

A bill authorizing persons who were entitled to enter lands under the mining laws of the United States to enter lands that are chiefly valuable for building stone, passed the senate long ago. Under the provision of the law in relation to placer mine claims, as it passed the senate, it had an amendment which provided that it should not in any way be construed to repeal or modify the act of June 3, 1678, in relation to the sale of timber and stone lands in the Pacific coast states. This in effect means that any person who desires to purchase timber lands in Minnesota or any other state may do so by paying $2.50 per acre for the same.

Senator Pettigrew said it means that any person who desires can secure any of the vacant timber lands in the United States which have in the past been withheld from entry. It will solve quite a number of difficult problems relating to timber lands in a number of Western states, and it allows any applicant to secure 160 acres of the valuable pine lands still standing in Minnesota.

PICTURESQUE B. & O.

Bishop Perry's Impressions of his Trip to New York via Washington.

A lengthy article from the pen of William Stevens Perry, Bishop of Iowa, was recently published in the Iowa Churchman, descriptive of his journey from Chicago to New York via Washington. Among other things he says: "One travelling eastward from Chicago, via the Picturesque Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, finds rest and comfort in the Vestibuled Pullman limited trains on which travel is no longer irksome but luxurious. There are two of these trains daily from Chicago, one leaving at 10:10 a. m., and the other at 2:55 p. m. It was on the morning train that we began our pleasant journey across the plains and over the Alleghanies for New York. We had the enjoyable anticipation of going via Washington, for the Baltimore and Ohio alone, of all the many routes between the seaboard and the lakes, passes directly to and through the Capitol city.

"It was night when we crossed the Ohio river and began the ascent of the Alleghanies, on the summit of which are the twin resorts, Deer Park and Oakland. The last named is a pretty village shut in by towering mountains. A pretty church shows that the visitors at Deer Park take their religion with them into the country. The handsome cottages grouped about the hotel, the fine walks and drives in every direction, the salubrity of the air, and the coolness which is obtained when all the world below this elevation is feeling the oppressiveness of the heated term make this an ideal spot for summering. At the base of the mountains we entered the Potomac valley, which was debatable ground during the civil war. The streams and fields we cross, the ravines we thread as we speed on to Washington, have their historic associations with that internecine strife that pitted the Blue against the Gray. Across the mountains and down the Potomac we were greeted by a constant succession of most magnificent views which have gained for the Baltimore and Ohio the sobriquet of 'Picturesque B. & O.'

"Our route from Washington to New York was with the Royal Blue Line of the Baltimore and Ohio, which is composed of the staunchest and finest Coaches, Parlor and Sleeping cars ever built by the Pullman company, vestibuled from end to end, and protected by Pullman's improved anti-telescoping device. All the cars are heated by steam and lighted by Pintsch gas. They are the fastest trains in the world, placing New York and Washington

A TICKET NAMED.

THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION HELD AT ST. PAUL.

Knute Nelson, the Farmer-Lawyer, Chosen for Governor by Acclamation—David M. Clough, of Minneapolis, Gets Second Place—Other Nominees.

THE TICKET.

Governor—KNUTE NELSON.
Lieutenant Governor—D. M. CLOUGH.
Secretary of State—F. P. BROWN.
Treasurer—JOSEPH BOBLETER.
Attorney General—H. W. CHILDS.
Supreme Judges—C. E. VANDERBURG,
D. A. DICKINSON.
WILLIAM MITCHELL.

ST. PAUL, July 29.—The Republican state convention met in the People's church, St. Paul, and nominated a full state ticket. The proceedings were marked by the utmost good feeling and harmony, there being very little friction or bitterness. For governor, ex-Congressman Knute Nelson, the farmer-lawyer of Alexandria, had everything his own way from the start to the finish, being nominated on the first ballot by acclamation.

Hon. D. M. Clough, a prominent and wealthy lumberman of Minneapolis, received the unanimous nomination for the office of lieutenant governor. For secretary of state the Hon. F. P. Brown, the present incumbent, was renominated. Joseph Bobleter, present state treasurer, was also honored by a renomination, and Assistant Attorney General Childs, of St. Paul, was nominated for the office of attorney general.

IN DETAIL.

Routine Report of the Proceedings of the Convention.

At 11:45 Chairman Joel P. Heatwole, of the state central committee, accompanied by Secretary Tams Bixby, Rev. Dr. S. G. Smith and Major E. D. Libby, came on the platform and the first applause greeted their appearance. In calling the convention to order Mr. Heatwole said:

The convention will come to order and prayer will be offered by Dr. Smith of the People's church.

The reverend gentleman invoked aid from the powers greater than man in a most eloquent and fervid prayer, the entire audience standing.

At the conclusion of the prayer Mr. Heatwole said:

Gentlemen of the Convention—You have assembled here as representatives of a great party from a great state. It is a privilege to greet you as belonging to a party which believes in protection to American industries and in a dollar worth one hundred cents. I have no doubt but that in the espousal of these principles of our party we shall carry the state by from 80,000 to 40,000 in November.

L. P. Hunt, of Mankato, nominated Hon. Mark H. Dunnell and he was elected by acclamation.

A. B. Clinch, of Anoka county, was chosen temporary secretary, and F. J. Chipman, of St. Louis, assistant secretary. Motions were then made and carried that the committees on credentials, resolutions and permanent organization consist of one member from each judicial district and one at large.

A recess until 2 o'clock was then taken.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Committees Slow to Report—Speeches by prominent Republicans.

When Chairman Dunnell rapped for order at 2:15 not more than half the delegates were in their seats.

Speechmaking occupied the time till 4:15 when the committee on credentials, through J. D. Jones, chairman, submitted a report. The reading of the report was waived, with the exception of Atkin county, the only contested case before the committee. The report of the committee recommended that the regular and contesting delegation be seated, with half a vote each. It was adopted.

Hon. Thomas Simpson, chairman of the committee on resolutions, then read the resolutions, which were adopted.

BY ACCLAMATION.

No Opposition to the Nomination of Knute Nelson.

The temporary officers of the convention were made permanent immediately after the report of the credentials committee, and at 4:25 Senator Tawney placed in nomination Hon. Knute Nelson, of Alexandria, for governor. His nomination was seconded by Frank Davis, of Minneapolis. Rev. S. G. Smith, of St. Paul, said the Ramsey county delegation came to the convention pledged to the support of ex-Governor McGill, but, in the interest of harmony, would not present his name. The field being clear Mr. Nelson was nominated by acclamation, followed by uproarious applause. Mr. Nelson came before the convention and read an indorsement of the "force" bill and denounced both the Democratic and People's parties as calamity howlers. David M. Clough, of Minneapolis, was nominated for lieutenant governor by acclamation. The first real fight of the convention came at 6 o'clock, when candidates were named for secretary of state. Seven candidates were placed in nomination, the first ballot resulting in 329 votes for Fred P. Brown, of Blue Earth City; 205 for Warren J. Ives, of Marshall; 100 for Albert Berg, of Chisago; 25 for W. E. Joubert, of Big Stone; 15 for E. J. Osborne, of Minneapolis; 11 for H. E. Gibbons, of Le Sueur and 20 for George P. Johnson, of Watonwan.

On the second ballot an attempt was made to combine the opposition to Brown on Ives, but without success, Brown securing 387 1-2 votes, 80 more than a majority of the convention. A recess was then taken to 8:30.

THE EVENING SESSION.

Balance of the State Ticket Named by the Convention.

The evening session opened shortly after 9 o'clock. Nominations for treasurer being in order Joseph Bobleter, Theodore Sander, Albert Scheffer and Julius Ackerman were nominated. Bobleter was elected on the first ballot.

There were six candidates for attorney general—Dan W. Bruckart, Frank Wilson of Red Wing, Assistant Attorney General Childs, Hon. Nathan Kingsley of Mower county, William Hodgson of Hastings, and W. F. Sawyer of Owatonna. Childs was nominated on the second ballot.

Ex-Governor Yale then moved that Justices of the Supreme Court Dickinson, Vanderburgh and Mitchell be renominated by this convention. F. P. Lane moved that a committee of thirteen be appointed to confer with a similar committee from the Democratic state convention as to the nomination of supreme court justices. After an exciting discussion during which several suggestions as to naming candidates were voted down, Messrs Dickinson, Vanderburgh and Mitchell were nominated.

The convention adjourned at 1:30 a.m.

THE PLATFORM.

How Minnesota Republicans Stand on the Important Questions of the Day.

The Republicans of Minnesota, through their delegates in convention assembled, do affirm and declare as follows:

First—We indorse and approve the platform of the Republican national convention adopted at Minneapolis June 10, 1892.

Second—We indorse the wise, pure, firm and intensely American administration of President Harrison.

Third—From its very infancy and for upwards of a third of a century our state has been managed and guided by men and principles of the Republican party. During that period the state has grown from a mere outpost of scattered settlements to a commonwealth of 1,5 0,000 souls, prosperous and aggressive, and equal in moral, intellectual and commercial vigor to the best of the older states. Such a people so prosperous and so growing have not been badly governed. Our state administrations have been clean, able and loyal to the best interests of the people. The administration of Governor William R. Merriam has been in no way inferior to those of his predecessors, and may justly be regarded as a model of faithfulness to a great public trust.

Fourth—Recognizing that in some states force and fraud are used to defeat the expression of the people, the Republicans of Minnesota are in favor of all wise means to secure to every citizen a free ballot and a fair count.

Fifth—Trusts and combinations to control and unduly enhance the price of commodities are a great evil, the outgrowth of human cupidity, and exists in all civilized communities, regardless of tariff laws. We are opposed to the same and are in favor of all proper legislation to eradicate and repress the evil. In this connection we refer with pride to the establishment and maintenance at the state prison at Stillwater of the manufacture of binding twine, which has been the means of protecting and defending our farmers against one of the great trusts and monopolies.

Sixth—We believe in protecting the laboring men by all necessary and judicious legislation, and to this end we favor the enactment of suitable laws to protect the health, life and limb of all employes of transportation, mining and manufacturing companies while engaged in the service of such companies; (2) the establishment of some form of board or tribunals of conciliation and arbitration for the peaceful settlement of all disputes and disagreements between capital and labor and such questions as pertain to the safety and physical and moral well being of the laborer; (3) the exclusion from our shores by suitable laws and regulations of all paupers, criminals, contract labor and other dangerous classes; and, (4) the preservation of the public domain for actual bona fide settlers under the homestead law.

Seventh—Whenever the civil power, through its proper officers, is unable to preserve the peace and to properly protect life and property, and a resort to force becomes necessary, we believe that such forces, whether constabulary or military, should be resorted to and used only by the state. We regard the employment of armed forces by other than the proper authorities of the state as un-American and tending to promote lawlessness and a breach of the peace.

Eighth—The farmers of the state, who constitute the chief element of our productive, wealth-creating population, are entitled to the cheapest and best facilities for storing, shipping and marketing their products, and to this end we favor such laws as will give them cheap, safe and easily obtainable elevator and warehouse facilities, and will furnish them promptly and without discrimination, at fair and reasonable rates, proper transportation facilities to all accessible markets.

Ninth—Railroad, telegraph and telephone companies and all other corporations or individuals charged with and performing any public service or employment are amenable to public control, and we favor the enactment and enforcement of such laws as will compel them to render the best and most approved service at a fair, just and reasonable rate without discriminating as to persons or places.

Tenth—Realizing the importance to the people of good public highways, we are in favor of the enactment of laws for the systematic improvement and maintenance of the same.

Eleventh—The debt of this nation to the men who preserved it cannot be computed from the standpoint of dollars and cents. A nation's gratitude is theirs, and in proof thereof the Republican party of Minnesota, not grudgingly, but heartily, cordially and earnestly, favors a system of pensions so liberal as to properly provide for the living and tenderly protect from want the widows and orphans of the dead. And we rejoice that the nation's growth and great prosperity of the government they served warrants us in making this pledge.

Twelfth—This convention approves and readopts the resolution passed by the last Republican state convention, urging upon congress the passage of the Washburn-Hatch anti-option bill.

Thirteenth—The Republicans of the state are heartily in favor of the protection of its forests so far as consistent with its general interest.

Fourteenth—Whereas the Republicans of Minnesota, recognizing the conspicuous ability and fidelity of Senator Cushman K. Davis, have manifested substantial unanimity in demanding his re-election to the position he has so ably filled; and,

Whereas, notable precedents are on record for the nomination by state conventions of men who are evidently the popular choice for United States senator, thus making them the recognized candidates of the party for that high office; Therefore,

Resolved, That this convention hereby presents the name of Cushman K. Davis as the chosen nominee and candidate of the Republican party of the State of Minnesota for reelection to the United States senate by the legislature of 1893.

Harvest Hands in Demand.

HURON, S. D., Aug. 2.—About thirty harvest hands have reached here from Iowa and Nebraska and report that others are coming. Parties are here from Potter, Faulkland and Hand counties to secure harvest help. Dr. Smith, of Ree Heights, says 400 men in excess of those already there, will be needed to gather the crops in Hand county, while other counties will require an equal and in many instances greater number. The demand for help is increasing daily, and the rapidly ripening grain causes no little alarm because of the scarcity of help.

THE FIGHT BEGUN.

Wisconsin's Apportionment Law Attacked by Republicans.

MADISON, Wis., Aug. 1.—The Republican attack upon the apportionment law enacted at the special session of the legislature has been began. The petition, signed by John C. Spooner, George W. Bird, C. E. Estabrook and George Green, as attorneys, was heard by the attorney general. The application to the attorney general is for him to move the supreme court Aug. 9, the first day of the August term, for leave to bring suit in that court in the name of the attorney general against the secretary of state to enjoin him from putting the new apportionment law into effect. It is sought to enjoin the secretary of state in the contemplated raid to prevent the notice of the general election including the new districts as created by the new law. The second respect in which it is sought to restrain the secretary of state is to forbid him filling nomination papers received from legislative districts greater than one county as created by the new law. The third is to restrain him from certifying to the county clerks of the counties embraced in joint districts the list of nominations. The petition sets forth in detail the alleged violation of the rule of equity of representation required by the constitution in legislative apportionments as held by the supreme court of Wisconsin in the first gerrymander case and was recently emphasized by the supreme court of Michigan. Under the constitution it appears that in more than half of the senate and assembly districts this rule has been violated, and to such an extent, it is claimed, as to show an entire abandonment of that rule. The differences in senate districts reach all the way from a few thousand to 38,000, as, for example the Seventeenth senate district, composed of Rock and Green counties, contains 69,052 and the Fourth district in Milwaukee county only 30,232, a difference of 38,820.

RAILWAY FEDERATION.

A Strong Probability That It Will Be Completed Within a Week.

ST. LOUIS, July 30.—A morning paper says: The coming week will in all probability witness the formation of the most powerful labor organization in America, with St. Louis as its birthplace. This organization is no more nor less than the federation of the five orders of railway employes, and insures th active co-operation of in the nei borhood of 125,000 railroad men, erating the transportation departmen every road in the United States Canada. The orders that will be cluded in the federation are Brotherhood of Locomotive Firem the Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, Switchmen's Mutual Aid, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginee The strength of the federation can imagined when it is known that ther are 30,000 members of the conductors order, 25,000 firemen 25,000 engineers, 20,000 trainmen, 21,000 switchmen that will be included in the membership of the organization. The initial steps toward forming this stupendous aggregation of railway employes have already been taken and are heartily sanctioned by the members of the several orders that will be numbered in its fold.

AN UNPLEASANT PREDICAMENT.

The Queen Would Like to Avoid the Necessity of Calling Him.

LONDON, Aug. 1—Land and Water, an unusually well informed politicosociety journal, says that when the Duke of Devonshire visited the queen last week her majesty said that she relied upon his advice to assist her in avoiding the necessity for sending for Mr. Gladstone to form a new government. The duke, it is reported, said in reply to her majesty that there was but one alternative for her to adopt. She must either call upon Mr. Gladstone to form a ministry or must abdicate the throne.

ALICE MITCHELL INSANE.

The Murderer of Freda Ward Will Be Confined in an Asylum.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Aug. 1.—The Mitchell case has been brought to a close, when the jury after being out five minutes returned a verdict finding Alice Mitchell to be insane and recommending for the peace of the state that she be confined in an insane asylum.

Rustlers to Be Released.

LARAMIE, Wy., July 30.—There are the best of reasons for believing that all the prisoners detained here who were concerned in the Johnson county invasion, with the exception of about eight, will never be tried on the charge of murdering Nate Champion. The cases against thirty-five of the men will probably be nolle prossed, and only the organizers and leaders of the expedition will be called before the bar. These thirty-five will comprise mostly the hired army.

Heaviest Death Rate for Twenty Years.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—During the twenty-four hours ended at noon there had been 286 deaths reported. This is the heaviest death rate for a single for twenty years. The number deaths for the week just past is 1, the heaviest since July 6, 1886, w 1,581 deaths were reported for the w ending that day. Out of the 1,400 ployes of the sugar refineries of W iamsburg, Brooklyn, the past six da of dreadful heat, almost 500 men we prostrated and fourteen succumbed.

Ten Thousand Lives Were Lost.

VICTORIA, B. C., Aug. 1.—The steamship Empress of Japan brings additional details of the volcanic eruptions of Gunong Kroo, on Great Sangier Island, June 7. The town of Toroena was buried by ashes, and the enormous cocoanut plantations covering the hills on each side of Toroena were destroyed. One captain, who was there with a ship at the time, estimates that 10,000 lives were lost.

POLK COUNTY HOSPITAL.

A Few Remarks About an Excellent Institution Which is Little Known.

To Make It Self-Supporting It Should Be Advertised Throughout the Country.

The Rules With Regard to Admission Might Be Judiciously Amended.

On the east bank of the Red Lake river in the northwestern part of the city of Crookston, stands the Polk County Hospital. The building was purchased last January by the board of county commissioners, and was formally opened to the public March 12th. The hospital is a neat 3-story building surrounded with pleasant grounds, planted with trees, flowers, etc. On the first floor is a reception room, a sitting room, the matron's room and the kitchen and dining room. On the 2d floor are the rooms for the hospital help and rooms for private patients. On this floor also is the bath room, the operating room and a large clothes closet. On the 3d floor are the hospital wards—three in number—in each of which are a number of the regulation single iron bedsteads. The rooms are all airy and pleasant, and are kept as clean as a new pin. The institution is in charge of Mrs. Streeter, who has two assistants—a janitor and a domestic. The board made an excellent selection when they secured Mrs. Streeter, for a lady better fitted for the position would be hard to find. She understands thoroughly the care and nursing of patients and the administering of medicines, and her kindly disposition and pleasant manners make the sufferings of the patients seem lighter. All those who have had occasion to be inmates of the county hospital speak in the highest terms of the treatment given them by Mrs. Streeter.

There has been considerable criticism of the action of the commissioners in purchasing a county hospital building, but it is one of the best investments that Polk county ever made. A hospital is a necessity in every city, and a well-regulated one is one of the greatest blessings which a county or city can give to its people. But like every other new institution the Polk county hospital is perhaps not as well regulated as it will be later on. There has been quite a number of charity patients admitted, but so little is known of the institution throughout the country that only three private patients have found their way into it this year.

If it was better advertised and the rules with regard to getting in were less stringent, the institution could be made not only self-supporting, but a paying investment.

For the guidance of those who may hereafter wish to avail themselves of hospital treatment we publish the following rules of the institution:

1. Persons afflicted with contagious diseases shall not be admitted to the Hospital.

2. The price of board and nursing of private patients has been fixed by the Board of County commissioners at $6.00 per week, payable in advance to the County Treasurer.

3. Charity patients will be admitted on an order signed by proper authorities of the town, village or city from which they are sent, and such town, village or city will be charged at the rate of $6.00 per week for the board, nursing and physician attending such patients.

4. Patients shall conduct themselves respectfully towards the matron and nurses of the Hospital and no trunks will be allowed in the wards.

5. Patients are forbidden to use profane or indecent language, to smoke or use tobacco or use intoxicating liquors without physician's orders. No spitting on the floors allowed. Card playing is prohibited.

6. No liquors, provisions or medicines of any kind shall be brought to the patients from outside without special permission of the matron. Liquors and extra diet must not be given by the patients to other patients.

7. Patients must take a full bath when entering the Hospital, and thereafter at least once a week unless otherwise ordered by the physician, but never sooner than two hours after eating.

8. Patients are expected to bring sufficient clothing to make frequent changes. All laundry work must be done outside the Hospital at expense of patient.

9. Patients are strictly prohibited from visiting one another without permission of the matron.

10. No patient is allowed to leave the Hospital at any time without permission of the matron.

11. No male patient shall go into a female ward and no female patient shall go into a male ward, without permission of the matron.

12. Loud talking across wards or halls, whistling or unnecessary noise of any kind, defacing of walls, etc., are strictly prohibited.

13. Patients are expected to be clean in their habits and orderly in their conduct at all times.

14. Visitors are admitted between the hours of 10 a. m. and 4 p. m.

15. Patients who do not conform to the foregoing regulations shall be immediately reported by the matron to the chairman of the Hospital Committee.

16. Complaints by the patients of any ill-treatment by the matron or any of the nurses, inmates or others, or any irregularity in their diet, or lack of proper attention shall be made to the chairman of the Hospital Committee.

17. All patients, whether private or charity, before being admitted must be examined by the Hospital Physician.

If a person wishes to be admitted for a short time only, it is hardly worth the trouble of unwinding the red tape necessary for admittance. You must first find the hospital physician—Dr. Watts—and be examined by him and obtain a certificate that you have no contageous disease. Then you must find the chairman of the hospital board—Mr. Kirsch—and get from him an order to the matron of the institution to admit you. If you want to enter as a private patient and pay your board and nursing you have still another individual to find—the county treasurer—and you must pay him two weeks' board and get a receipt. As the offices of the three individuals mentioned are located in different parts of the city, it can be easily seen that it takes some time and trouble to find the required officers.

As the hospital physician does not receive a salary, but simply gets a physician's fees when called, and is in no way responsible for hospital patients, it should not be necessary to have an order from him. If a patient has a certificate from his attending physician that he has no contageous disease, and has sufficient money to pay for his treatment, these should be all that was necessary to gain him admittance. Of course if a person wishes to be admitted as a county charge it is necessary to have a certain amount of red tape in connection.

Even our physicians know but little about the institution, and those who have tried to get patients admitted have had so much trouble in doing so that they do not now care to make an effort on behalf of any one. This is all wrong. Every physician should be posted regarding the hospital, and any reputable physician should be able to get a patient admitted at any time. The matron should have more latitude and be allowed to take private patients on presentation of a physician's certificate and the necessary fees.

Weather-Crop Bulletin.

The following is the weather-crop bulletin for the week ending Aug. 1st, 1892, compiled by the Minnesota weather service, in connection with the U. S. department of agriculture:

In the northwestern part of the state the weather has been most favorable, and the cool days and small rainfall have allowed wheat to fill better than heretofore and promoted hay and barley cutting. Hay an immense crop.

Some reports figure that harvest will begin August 15.

In the west central counties conditions have been beneficial and have advanced small grains. Wheat as promising as last year. Barley all out. Haying advancing rapidly. Oats filling well. Stearns county reports small grain over two weeks late and corn backward.

The storm of July 26th and 27th was felt in Chippewa, Kandiyohi, Meeker, Wright, southern Mille Lacs, Anoka, Hennepin, Renville, Redwood, McLeod, Nicollet, Blue Earth, Scott, Freeborn, Dakota, Rice, Goodhue, Dodge, Mower, Wabasha, Olmsted, Winona, Fillmore and Houston counties. Hay was more or less hurt, and grain badly lodged. In most cases it will recover, while in others the loss is severe, especially in Hennepin, Scott and Dakota counties.

In the southwestern counties the weather has been all that could be desired and grain will be ready to harvest in a week or ten days. Early sown barley and oats ripe now. Corn growing fast. Flax looks good. Little damage from rust reported.

The Soldiers' Home.

That Minnesota has a home for her sick and indigent veterans of the war of the rebellion, which for comfort for the old vets and for beauty of location is second to none in the United States, is an accepted fact by all who have ever been there to see it. Located upon the high bluffs of the Mississippi river, about midway between the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, with Minnehaha creek and falls on the one side and the beautiful park almost surrounding it, no lovelier spot could have been selected in the state than this, and art has done much to supplement the works of nature and as far as the grounds are concerned much more is yet to be accomplished before it will be all that it can be made. It was our pleasure on Sunday last to spend an hour or so at this sylvan retreat and a pleasant time we had. Upon arrival we inquired for Jacob Myers and soon found Jake reading in his cosy room, and after a chat we were invited to inspect the premises, which now consist of three large sized buildings for the purposes of the institution and one that contains the electric light plant. The old boys sleep in rooms containing from six to twelve cot bedsteads, which rooms are heated by steam, lighted by electricity and kept scrupulously neat and clean. Comrade Myers invited us to dine in a large and commodious dining hall, containing at present 8 tables, capable of seating 150 people. Here was spread as fine a dinner as one could wish to see, consisting of roast meats, vegetables of all kinds, without a hint of the storied army bean nor yet the festive hard-tack to molest [or make us afraid. Verily, we thought, the old boys are living in clover here, and if one has no other earthly home, with all the sacred ties that such a home should contain, this is indeed a lovely spot in which to end one's days, and our state has done nobly in supplying one of the best in the land. There are several reading rooms liberally supplied with newspapers, books and magazines; here you can find almost every newspaper published in the state and every prominent paper published in the United States, so the old boys do not lack for reading matter suited to almost every taste. There is in process of erection another large building that is to be completed by December, and it is the intention to keep up with the demand as fast as the means will permit. There are at present about 150 inmates, with about 100 more away on furlough. When Mrs. Gen. John A. Logan was in Minneapolis recently she drove out to the home and shook hands with all of the old boys in blue, spoke a kind word to those in the hospital and passed an hour or so looking over the institution. She pronounced it one of the finest she had seen in the United States and she thought the location was the very finest. There yet remains considerable to be done to complete the improvements, and the state should not be niggardly in its appropriations for this noble purpose, but should push the work to completion as rapidly as possible while yet the old boys are alive to enjoy it. Comrade Myers is orderly sergeant, has business enough to prevent ennui, and seems comfortable, but he tells us that he is anxious to get away and get to work for himself, and says as soon as he can secure the means he intends to go to Seattle, where he can secure a good job at any time.

You Should Brace up.

Whenever you feel that your general health is running down. It is good advice to "brace up" but not on "tanglefoot," "forty rod," "bitters" of innumerable names and composed of the Lord knows what, and it is not much better to fill your system with nauseating drugs even on a physician's prescription. A more agreeable tonic is a relaxation from the cares of business. If it is winter you can journey to Florida, the Gulf coast, or Southern California. In summer the lovely lakes of Minnesota or the grand mountain scenery and salubrious air of Colorado or Montana will give health and happiness. To reach any of these take "The Burlington Route"—buy your tickets over the Chicago, Burlington & Northern R.R. For full information on these matters address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C. Fifty Kinds of Electric Fishes.

According to the statements of the English naturalist, Professor Stirling, there are in existence today upward of fifty species of fishes having more or less specialized organs, the function of which is the generation of electric discharges. The fishes differ widely, sometimes strikingly, from each other, belonging mostly to different families, and occasionally even to different orders of the "Pisces." In structure they closely resemble the other species of the genera to which they severally belong, differing from them, with an occasional exception, mainly in the possession of organs for electric generation.

The well known "electric rays," for example, of which Nicholson mentions three and Gunther six, are the most prominent. These rays are found in the Atlantic and Indian oceans and the Mediterranean sea, and are seen in the English channel, or even farther north; while other electric fishes are still more cosmopolitan, though most of them inhabit limited areas and warm waters.—Electricity.

A Phrase That Is Not English.

"I will give a prize of $100 to any one who can prove that the expression 'don't you know,' or, as it is often rendered, 'doncherknow,' was ever used in England by a real Englishman," declared a person of the British persuasion the other day.

"The phrase had its origin in Philadelphia, where it is much in vogue, because certain dudes there believe it is English. No Englishman ever says 'Don't you know.' The expression he does use is 'You know,' such as 'I'm going up to London, you know, to get me new trousers, you know.'

"It may be a startler for certain young men about town, who by dint of great practice are able to interject 'doncherknow' at about every ten words in their conversation. I'm sorry to hurt their feelings."—New York Herald.

A COSTLY STRIKE.

MONETARY LOSS BY THE HOMESTEAD TROUBLES.

The Actual Outlay Has Already Amounted to Over a Million Dollars—Cost of the State Militia and Loss in Wages Foots Up to Half That Sum.

PITTSBURG, July 30.—The great lockout at Homestead is just one month old and has already cost over $1,000,000, besides the sacrifice of half a score of human lives and serious injuries to many times that number. Of the loss in cash, the military has cost in round figures $320,000, the workmen have lost in wages $180,000, and Carnegies have lost and spent as much more in getting new workmen. The workmen at Beaver Falls, Duquesne and the Union mills, in Pittsburg, have lost about $100,000 by their sympathy strike, and the firm is out $100,000 by the idleness of these plants. Added to this will be the county expenses for deputy sheriffs and murder trials, the expense to the city in hunting anarchists and to the nation for the congressional investigations. Another item of no mean significance is the loss to workmen and manufacturers in plants indirectly affected, which have been closed down for want of material. The locked out workmen have not as yet been deprived of the necessaries of life, and if the fight should last several weeks yet there is no danger of the workmen's families coming to actual want. Subscriptions have been coming in liberally and the relief work has been carried on judiciously and well.

RETURNING TO WORK.

Superintendent Potter Says the Backbone of the Strike Is Broken.

HOMESTEAD, Aug. 2.—Homestead striking steel workers are considerably agitated. They have satisfied themselves of the correctness of Superintendent Potter's statement that a number of former employes returned to work during the day. This evidence of weakening on the part of the men, who have all along claimed their loyalty to the association, weakens that organization and the streets are filled with strikers discussing the situation. Provost Marshal Mechling, fearing the break in the ranks of the strikers would lead to trouble, doubled the guard around the mill and in the streets adjacent thereto.

That the backbone of the strike has been broken is acknowledged by everyone save the members of the advisory committee and the more radical unionists. Superintendent Potter said to a United Press reporter: "Altogether sixty of our former employes have returned to work and we have been informed that many more will make application for their old places. Twenty-seven of our old men came in during the day. Twenty-four of them found their places still open but the others, I am sorry to say, were disappointed. But while they cannot step into the positions they gave up a month ago, these men will be given work. I feel very sorry for the majority of the strikers who were led into the present trouble by those in whom they had such implicit confidence, but when we announced that none of our own men would be discharged to make room for those who refused to return to work within the time specified, we meant exactly what we said."

Denied by the Advisory Board.

The advisory board of the strikers met and upon adjournment the secretary gave the following official statement to the United Press: "But two Homestead men went to the Homestead mill during the day. One was Edward Lyon, brother of United States District Attorney Lyon, of Pittsburg, and the other was Charles Gettle, a member of the Homestead school board, who will be deposed. There are less than 400 men in the mills. One hundred are tramps."

GIVEN A HEARING.

Frick's Assailant Appears in Court—Bail Fixed at $24,000.

PITTSBURG, July 30.—Would-be Assassin Berkman was given a preliminary hearing in the county jail office during the afternoon and was admitted to bail aggregating $24,000, which was not furnished and the guilty anarchist was remanded for court. Police Judge Grip and Alderman McMasters presided at the hearing. Judge Grip examined witnesses on the charge of felonious assault preferred by Superintendent of Police O'Mara and held the prisoner in $10,000. Alderman McMasters examined witnesses on three different charges—entry of a building with intent to commit a felony, one charge of felonious assault and another charge of carrying concealed weapons. The elevator man of the Chronicle-Telegraph building and Vice Chairman Leashman of the Carnegie company were the only witnesses examined. In reply to questions the prisoner said he intended to kill Frick, not to torture him. He did not want to harm Mr. Leashman.

Anarchists Held.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—Judge Gripp has held Knold and Bauer, the anarchists, in $2,000 bail on the conspiracy charge and refused bail on the accessory to murder charge. The hearing of Mollick's case is now in progress. The hearing of Mollick was not continued. He will be heard on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Frick Sits Up.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—Mr. Frick passed a very comfortable night; was out of his bed in the morning; ate a hearty breakfast, and no doubt will visit his office early in the week. It is said that no more bulletins of his condition will be issued by the attending surgeon.

More Militia Break Camp.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—Battery B and the Sheridan troop of cavalry have arrived in Pittsburg from Homestead. There had been no previous intimation that they would break camp.

officers, Brewster, "the swell of the subs," keeping close to Winifred Berrien, and claiming more and more of the glances of her big dark eyes. Down at the gate, the moonlight glinting on his polished saber, the officer of the day is exchanging a few low toned words with Major Berrien. Rolfe, who with silent and dogged resolution has taken his place at Miss Guthrie's side as she came down the stairs and escorted her to the doctor's, has turned from there and gone slowly across the parade to his own quarters on the other side. Everybody seems to see and know what has happened, and many half whispered comments are being made, not all in sympathy with the willowed lover. Everybody respects Rolfe, yet among the younger officers are several who feel no warmth of friendship for him, and, as between man and man, garrison girls can only side with the youngsters. Their story of their slight differences is sometimes told again and again; the elders' seldom, for theirs would hardly be believed.

Little by little the chat and laughter subside.

"Oh, why doesn't she come back?" pouts Miss Berrien. "The ambulances will be here in less than half an hour, and we won't see anything of her." A chorus of girlish voices echoes Winifred's views. Mrs. Berrien and Mrs. Parker at this moment come forth from the house and look expectantly up the road.

"How long they are!" says Winnie again. "What can keep them, mamma?"

"Packing, I doubt not, my child."

"But the wagon's gone, trunks and all. It can't be that."

"Still, I would not fret about it, Winnie. Has she not promised to come next spring and pay us a long visit?"

"Yes, but who knows where we may all be next spring, or what may happen meantime? Every paper we get is full of stories of the ghost dances among the Sioux, and if there should be another Indian war"——

"Nonsense, Winifred! Don't think of such a thing. After all this regiment has had to suffer in Indian battle, you don't suppose we, of all others, would be sent from here to a winter campaign in the northern department? We've seen the last of such troubles, God be thanked!"

Major Berrien, his interview with the officer of the day ended, has just started to rejoin the group on the veranda when he hears his wife's pious words. He whirls around sharply.

"Oh, captain, there's one thing I forgot to tell you." And the saber of the officer of the day clanks against his leg as Captain Porter faces about. The younger officers go on with their blithe chat; but Mrs. Berrien has known her lord twenty long years, and no sooner has the officer of the day departed than she hastens to join him.

"Dick," she falters, "surely you do not believe that there is any chance of the Twelfth going, even if there should be trouble? Dick, tell me."

"Berengaria, beloved inquisitor," he begins, "I didn't even know there was a row anywhere."

But she rebukes him by a single glance.

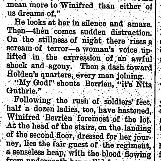
"Tell me, Dick," she persists, and clings to his arm. "You don't think, after all we've been through, that, now that we are so happily settled here, there is a possibility of such a thing? It isn't only for myself now. It's—it would mean more to Winifred than either of us dreams of."

He looks at her in silence and amaze. Then—then comes sudden distraction. On the stillness of night there rises a scream of terror—a woman's voice uplifted in the expression of an awful shock and agony. Then a dash toward Holden's quarters, every man joining.

"My God!" shouts Berrien, "it's Nita Guthrie."

Following the rush of soldiers' feet, half a dozen ladies, too, have hastened, Winifred Berrien foremost of the lot. At the head of the stairs, on the landing of the second floor, dressed for her journey, lies the fair guest of the regiment, a senseless heap, with the blood flowing from underneath her pallid face.

CHAPTER II.



When did you shave off your beard, sergeant?

Indian summer was over and done. For three days the wind had been blowing hard from the northwest, and the air was as clear as an Arizona sky, the distant outlines sharp as the tooth of the prairie blast. Colonel Farquhar had [illegible] without saying why, returned [illegible] the post. Captain Rolfe had "cut" the club, once a favorite resort, and was much in Dr. Holden's company—Holden, who was lonely enough now that his wife and little ones were gone. Throughout the garrison there was one leading topic for conversation and conjecture—Miss Guthrie's strange adventure the night of her intended departure and her equally strange conduct thereafter. She had remained senseless but a few moments.

Gentle hands had raised and borne her to the bed in the room she was evidently just about entering when suddenly halted by some mysterious cause. Here, when restored to consciousness, an almost hysterical attack of laughing and weeping had followed upon her prostration. She insisted on attempting to rise and go to the train, as originally planned, but this Holden positively forbade. He had succeeded in stanching the flow of the blood from a jagged cut near the temple, and could suggest ready theory as to the cause thereof—in falling she had probably struck the edge of the little wooden post at the top of the balusters—but beyond this explanation there was absolutely nothing. Nita Guthrie would only account for her sudden terror by the half nervous, half laughing statement that she thought she saw a ghost, had played the coward and turned to run.

But to the trained physician it was evident she had received a severe shock. Despite her pleadings Dr. Holden had refused to allow her to attempt the journey until three days had elapsed, during which time, though she laughed at him and laughed at herself, her condition continued so nervous and excitable that he would not permit visitors to see her. This was pretty hard treatment, thought her many lady friends at the post, but he was wise and they could only obey. When the evening came for the departure a large contingent, ladies and officers both, assembled to say farewell, and Nita, Mrs. Holden, each of the children and even the nurse could have had two or three escorts to the train. But no one had opportunity to say much to the central figure of all this sympathetic interest. Only at the last moment did she appear, and was ushered almost instantly to the waiting carriage by Holden, who had only summoned her when vigilant eyes had reported the headlight of the express visible far up the valley. But then down at the dark platform of the station faithful, sad faced Rolfe was waiting, and in the minute or two that intervened before the huge train came glaring, hissing and thundering alongside he managed to have a word or two with her.

Mrs. Vance, had she been present, might have vowed that Nita shrank and clung to Holden's arm, but others who were there saw her extend her gloved hand cordially, saw that Rolfe clung to it an instant—charitable others who could only wave adieu, for the party was hurried aboard, and away went the express, the tail lights of the rear sleeper disappearing in the dripping gloom around the bend, for, as though in sympathy with the mourning of the post, a drizzling rain had begun to fall just after retreat. Rolfe, gazing after them to the last, wore that look seen on the face of many another man many another time. There can be few sensations more dismal than that of watching the disappearing lights of the train that bears away one's best beloved, especially in the eyes of him who stands rejected.

"Let me drive you home, Rolfe," said Holden kindly. "Two of a kind," was his mental addition. And Rolfe turned slowly away, neither man saying another word until once more they stood at the gate of the now deserted home.

"Come in and have a pipe."

"Thanks, not—now, doctor." A long wistful pause, then—"Well, good night."

"Good night, old man. Come when you will; I'll be lonely now." And the doctor stood and gazed after him long and earnestly as the captain strode into the darkness out over the parade.

Within the days that followed, when he had leisure to think it all over, Holden felt his perplexities increase. Up to the very last Nita had persisted in her statement that nothing had happened to warrant the absurd exhibition she had made of herself. "I was overwrought, nervous, unstrung," she said. "I had not been feeling quite well. I had run up to the room for my gloves, which I had left upon the table. I had not reached the door, and it was just the waving of those white curtains in the draft from the side window. I must have thought I saw a ghost, and, like a fool, I screamed and tripped, and—voila tout."

But Holden had known her for six years and felt well assured she was not of the stuff that is easily stricken with terror. With every confidence in her veracity in general he did not in the least believe her now. The more he studied the matter he felt that she was hiding something from them one and all, even from Jennie, whom she dearly loved and whom ordinarily she frankly trusted. It was evident that Jennie, too, believed, as did her husband, the doctor, that there was something behind it all. But Jennie was gone, and, except possibly Rolfe, there was no one to aid him in his search after the truth. Rolfe's [illegible] the gloom that [illegible] incredible. Rolfe evidently wanted to know Holden's suspicions or surmises, and again and again led up to the subject, [illegible] much as he esteemed him Rolfe was hardly the man to make a confidant of now. Was he not Nita's avowed though rejected lover?

Of course, no time had been lost in making investigation on the night of the occurrence. Even while the doctor and others were raising the unconscious girl from the floor, half a dozen officers were scouring the premises for signs of intruders and had found absolutely nothing. The room occupied by Miss Guthrie in the doctor's house was immediately to the left at the head of the stairs. The hall was broad, the landing roomy. It was one of the oldest sets of quarters at the post, and an oddity in its way. Entering the door of the rear room on the east, three windows appeared, two opening at the back and one at the side. The two at the back looked out over the roof of the rear porch. It was perfectly practicable for any one with a ladder to have clambered to this roof, and, had the blinds been open, peered in the windows at the occupant. But there was no ladder. What was more, the blinds were tight shut and bolted on the inside. The shades within were drawn down, and the lace curtains looped over each.

Between them stood a long, old fashioned mirror above the toilet table, draped with lace curtains very much as were the windows themselves. No one from without could have been visible to any one within. No one within could have been seen by any one without. Moreover, the Holdens' cook—an indomitable Irishwoman—was on the back porch at the moment of Miss Guthrie's fright saying good night to Corporal Murphy, who had long been Kathleen's devoted admirer, and both stood ready to swear that nobody was on that roof. The rear windows thus disposed of, the doctor had turned his attention to the window at the side, and here there was possibility of explanation.

As has been said, the Holdens' house was one of the oldest at the old frontier fort, but so solidly and substantially had it been built that, when others were condemned and ordered replaced along the row, the authorities had decided to retain "Bayard Hall." It was originally a double set, with hallway in common, intended for the use of four bachelor officers, each to have his two rooms, there being four rooms on the first and four on the second floor, while the kitchen and servants' rooms were placed in a wooden addition at the rear. The ground fell away rapidly from the front piazza, so that while the first floor front was but a few steps higher than the walk, the rear porch was a full story above the ground, giving abundant space for storerooms, etc., under that part of the house, and necessitating a flight of a dozen steps to reach the porch or the kitchen doorway. Around the front and sides of the second story there ran originally a broad gallery, but this was before the days of the war of the rebellion, during which the post was little used, and when, after certain repairs and alterations, the house was declared assignable as family quarters, the old wooden gallery had been condemned and torn down. Nevertheless, the beams which were its support on the east were found solid and firm.

They projected through the wall of rough hewn stone, and an old time quartermaster, selecting the house for his own use, had thrown a light gallery out upon them. It made such a convenient place for flower pots, shrubs, bathtubs and things of that description, said he. Furthermore it was a place where he could go in the warm evenings and smoke and sip his toddy with his chosen associates, and not have every garrison gabbler crowding in to disturb their chat and absorb his precious Monongahela. The gallery had no roof, was only five feet wide and was inaccessible except through this one window, which the unsociable major had had cut down level with the floor. "Robbers' Roost" the disdainful subalterns used to call it in the days when bluff old Blitz had occupied the quarters and barred out all but his chums, and by the same name was it known when Holden moved in with his wife and olive branches and took up his abode there a few years before the opening of this story.

When the Eleventh marched out and the Twelfth came in, Colonel Farquhar, finding the doctor in possession, decided that the Holdens should not be disturbed—that there was abundant room for others in the new quarters. The Holdens entertained a great deal. Pleasant people were visiting them month after month, and everybody in the Twelfth blessed them for the brightness and gayety their presence lent to the garrison. A sterling fellow was Holden, one of the best men in one of the very best corps, personally and professionally, in our little army; and as for his wife, an accomplished society woman, a St. Louis belle, still in the heydey of youthful womanhood, everybody in the garrison delighted in her friendship and kindliness. There was no more popular parlor than Holden's, and night after night the young officers gathered there. But "Robbers' Roost" had fallen into disuse. The glass door was generally shut, and the venetian blinds with which old Blitz had decorated it were ordinarily closed except when this, one of their two guest chambers, was occupied. Shades and lace curtains similar to those at the rear windows draped it within, so that from the interior this side door presented almost the same appearance as the windows themselves, and it stood directly opposite the hall door.

But Miss Guthrie had become enthusiastic over the lovely view down the Pawnee valley from that side gallery. She was frequently to be seen there. She had gone out for one farewell look as the valley lay flooded in the light of the full moon, and this was immediately after changing her dress. She was exclaiming over its beauty as arrayed for her journey she came running down the stairs to join her hostess and the excited children in the parlor. She suddenly missed her gloves, remembered that she had left them in her room, [illegible] Holden at the instant was in his own room, the rear room on the opposite side of the house, and was changing his best uniform into something more suitable for a run down to the railway.

This had delayed him a second or two, so that Brewster and Randolph, two of the most active of the junior officers, were foremost, at his heels as he flew up the stairs. His first care was for Nita, but the youngsters had bounded into the room and out on the gallery, as though expecting to overtake some intruder there. The side door was wide open, the shade up, the lace curtains drawn apart. If any one had been in the room escape to the gallery was easy enough, but from there there was practically none except by a leap of fifteen or twenty feet to the hard ground below. No one had run out, either front or back, for Murphy and the Irish cook were at the rear on the east side, the rushing swarm of officers at the front. If any one had hidden there escape unobserved was well nigh impossible. No one was found—no trace of any one. Indeed, when Nita was permitted to talk she vowed that no one had been there. She herself had left the blinds, door and curtains open as she came in from the moonlit gallery, had turned out her lamp and descended the stairs. The gallery doorway could not be seen from where she fell, and as all was darkness in the room itself, how could she have seen any one?

Out on the gallery, of course, any one would have been revealed, thanks to the brilliancy of the full moon, almost as in the broad glare of day; but one had to be at the hall door or in the square room itself in order to see the gallery at all, and Nita declared, as before, that she had not reached the door. What she fancied was a ghost, bathed in a pale, cold light, was probably the white curtains of the rear windows. But the light—whence came that?

The possibility of any one having been in the room was not entertained. Prompt and thorough search had been made in every nook and corner of the the upper story. The rooms of the nurse and children were on the westward side of the hall, and the nurse was in one of them, putting on her hat, at the very moment. The front room on the east was unoccupied. Nita had chosen the other because of that gallery and its lovely view. Then there was the rear slope of the main roof above the gallery. That, thought Holden, might have offered a way of escape, because it was out of sight from the parade.

But Brewster and Randolph had both essayed to reach the eaves, and even when standing on the railing could barely touch them with the tips of their fingers. Then, again, a sentry walked along the edge of the slope leading to the river bottom south of the long row of officers' quarters and close behind the rear fence, but he was at the eventful moment well down the row beyond Hazlett's house, whereas Dr. Holden's was at the eastern end of the line. The moon shone full against the back fence, said the sentry, and he was sure he would have seen anybody who ran out of the gate of the doctor's yard, and the first who appeared were the searching officers, Corporal Murphy with them. Several men had then come running from the direction of the laundresses' quarters to the west, and after them Sergeant Ellis. Indeed, it was Ellis who first suggested a search of the roof by means of a ladder. He was sergeant in charge of the fire apparatus kept in that long, low building at the east end, and had the keys of the door.

It was by his aid that some of the junior officers made a thorough examination of the roof and the front porch. No more signs there than had hitherto been found. No, the sentry on the south post was confident that no man came out of Holden's yard until he got to the gate, whither he had run the instant he heard the cry. He thought it might be a lamp explosion or a fire, and he was watching with eager eyes. He had been on post nearly two hours when the alarm came, and, except Corporal Murphy and the quartermaster's men who took the trunks, he had not seen or heard a man about the premises. Kathleen, the nursemaid, and the children had been home all the evening, and they had neither seen nor heard anybody.

Captain Rolfe, unable to sleep, and making the rounds on his own account about one o'clock, found the sentry of the third relief gazing curiously in at the open back gate, and questioned him as to what excited his attention.

"Nothing, sir," was the prompt reply of the trooper, as he threw his carbine to the position of "arms port." "I was simply wondering how any man could have ventured in there this bright night and expected to get out unseen, especially early in the evening, when men are passing to and fro all the time."

"What made you think any one had been there?" asked the captain quietly.

"Everybody has heard by this time that there was a search made, and that the young lady had seen something to frighten her. Besides, Sergeant Ellis spoke of it to me an hour ago."

"What was the sergeant doing on your post at midnight?"

"Why, sir, the captain remembers Sergeant Ellis is in charge of the firehouse and sleeps there. He came out a little before twelve and said he'd lost his pet pipe while he was hunting around with Lieutenant Brewster after he brought the ladder, and I let him pass in, sir. He said he'd been working there long after taps, and it would be all right. He found the pipe, sir, right at the edge of the wood pile, yonder. He showed it to me as he came out."

Captain Rolfe was silent a moment. Ordinarily none of the enlisted men had any right to be away from quarters after the "lights out" signal, but this case was unusual. Furthermore, Ellis was a man superior in intelligence, a sergeant of more than a year's standing, and one who had been selected for this special duty for the very reason that, holding himself much aloof from the average run of [illegible] he could be [illegible] to his duties as custodian of the fire house.

FARM AND GARDEN

TWO GARDEN FOES.

The Squash Vine Borer and Squash Bug That Attack Vines.

In fighting the squash vine borer the first aim should be to repel the moth and prevent her from depositing her eggs on the plants. Perhaps this may be success- lly accomplished by placing corncobs eared with coal tar, turpentine, kerosene or carbolic acid near the roots of the plants. Greiner, in "How to Make the Garden Pay," says:

LAYERED SQUASH VINE.

If we have not been successful in keeping the moth off we should hunt up and destroy the larvæ (borers) when they first begin to tunnel through the main stock near the surface of the soil. They give the preference to pumpkins, squashes and similar members of the gourd family, but also attack melon and cucumber vines, riddling the stem near the ground and often cutting off all communication between top and root. Discover their location and dig them out with the point of a sharp knife. With squash and other plants which readily strike root from the joints it is the easiest thing in the world to practically prevent all injury. All you have to do is to cover the first joints firmly with fresh soil as soon as the vines begin to run. The plants, as shown in picture from the work quoted, can then be made entirely independent of their original roots.

In July patches of dark brown eggs ay be found on the under side of the aves of pumpkins, squashes, etc., while e squash bugs are hidden under rubish, clods of soil, stones, etc., near the lants. Few things seem to be repulsive nough for them to keep or drive them off the plants, but plaster flavored with kerosene or carbolic acid may be tried. It may at least tend to lesson their numbers. Trapping is yet the only sure remedy. Place pieces of shingles, small es or rubbish of some sort about the and examine them for bugs every ning, dispatching them by shaking a dish containing some kerosene or hing them with home made tweezers isting of a simple piece of band iron bent as here shown. The bug is lsive and has a most disagreeable , but should be fought with per- ncy.

Sowing Wheat Early.

is not the size of the wheat plant, t its vigor and healthy growth that sures its vitality through the winter. On rich soil it is often better to defer sowing until late in September. There is less of leaf to draw on the root during winter, or to be transplanted if the root should chance to be lifted up by frost. As for the idea that a large growth of leaf keeps the ground from deep freezing, it is absurd, for every winter frost penetrates always as deep as the furrow, and often much deeper. The small wheat plant has not struck its roots deeply. When the surface soil expands it lifts these roots with it.

Early sown wheat, especially when sown in a dry time, has roots that strike down deeply. These are snapped whenever a surface thaw occurs, while the roots are held below and the surfaces freezes again. The top is then greatly disproportioned to the root. It is a good plan when wheat is getting a large fall growth to turn in sheep or young calves to crop the leaves. They lessen liability to injury by decreasing the top in case the root is thrown out. Besides this the tramping of the soil is beneficial. It compacts it around the roots, and thus compacted the soil is less absorptive of water, from which comes the chief danger from winter freezing and thawing.—American Cultivator.

Harvesting Potatoes.

The harvesting of the potato crop should not be undertaken until growth has entirely ceased. The general date at which early or late varieties are ready for digging is pretty well known, but it is of course regulated more or less by the meteorological conditions of the season. The raising of the tubers should always be delayed to the latest limit, if the maximum weight is desired, but frequently growers dig their crops too soon and consequently lose a benefit which is sometimes important. When all the lateral foliage of the plant is faded, and there remains at the top of the stalk a bunch of leaves, it may be concluded for a certainty that the plant is still working and making a quantity of organic matter especially destined for the tubers, which even in a fortnight sensibly increases the weight and richness, but as soon as this bunch is faded there is no gain, and the digging of the crop should begin.

Ivy Poisoning.

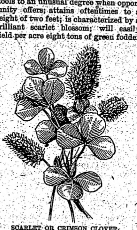
many persons are poisoned every by ivy that it is well to learn how listinguish the plant at a glance and id it. Orchard and Garden tells how istinguish it from the woodbine or ginia creeper, which is harmless, but en confounded with the poison ivy. e woodbine has five leaves, the poison y only three. The latter also has aves of a lighter, more vivid green id more glossy. It climbs on fences nd stone walls, which it covers thickly, ut often branches out more like a tree than a vine. Many sufferers from ivy poisoning have been cured by bathing the poisoned parts in a strong lye made from wood ashes, while a few doses of olive oil, taken immediately, will often give relief.

SCARLET CLOVER.

How It Is Regarded at the Delaware Experiment Station.

The cultivation of scarlet clover, or crimson clover as it is more usually named, is receiving much attention in Delaware, and the experiment station of that state has issued a bulletin on the subject from which it appears that many persons entertain erroneous ideas in regard to the plant.

As described in a station bulletin scarlet clover is an annual. About the first week in June it can be expected to mature a crop of seed from sowings made during the preceding July, August and September. If pastured in the early spring it renews its growth, in part at least, and matures at the usual time. A May sowing attempted once at the station gave a very heavy growth during the following fall, but no blossoms appeared, and the plants were destroyed during the winter by a fungus harbored under the excessive forage. It is a rank grower at one stage of its development; stools to an unusual degree when opportunity offers; attains oftentimes to a height of two feet; is characterized by a brilliant scarlet blossom; will easily yield per acre eight tons of green fodder if cut between the 5th and 10th of May; roots to a depth of four feet even in unfavorable soils, and for silage hay or to plow down for green manure compares well under favorable conditions with any leguminous crop.



SCARLET OR CRIMSON CLOVER.

In comparison with ordinary red clover its most marked peculiarities are (1) its ability to flourish on relatively poor soils; (2) its development during the fall, winter and spring. Growing at a time of the year when most of our foul weeds are in seed, it escapes one danger and, provided with an unusually well developed root system, it finds sufficient food when the red clover would be on half rations. As it grows when wheat and even rye seem dormant, it cannot be seeded with winter grain. One or the other crop would be destroyed. As it is in blossom on or about May 1 it can be used for many other purposes than those usually served by red clover, particularly for soiling and for plowing down in place of rye.

European writers mention five varieties of this clover differing essentially from each other in their relative powers to withstand winter weather. It is said the Delaware type of scarlet clover has stood low temperatures when seeded upon any proper soil in that state.

A Model Wagon Rack.

The wagon rack illustrated in the accompanying cut was built by the students of the North Carolina Agricultural college last season. The report upon it is that it can be placed on any farm wagon by lengthening out the reach to suit the length of the rack. It has been found suitable for the convenient and easy loading of hay, grain or corn fodder.

The list of materials, which cost $7.46 in Raleigh, is as follows: Two sills 2 by 6 inches by 14 feet dressed on two sides, four pieces 1½ by 3 inches by 3½ feet, four cross pieces 3 by 4 inches by 6½ feet, two boards 1 by 9 inches by 13 5-6 feet, two boards 1 by 4½ inches by 13 5-6 feet, four side pieces 1 by 4 inches by 8 2-3 feet, six bows 1 by 3 by 6 1-6 feet. The two ladders take four pieces 1½ by 3 inches by 6⅓ feet, two pieces 1½ by 2 inches by 2¼ feet, two pieces 1½ by 2 inches by 2¾ feet, two rounds 3 7-12 feet long, two stakes at the hind corners 1¼ by 1½ by 20 inches, twelve oak pins ⅜ by 8 inches. There are two blocks needed under the front crosspiece 4 by 4 by 2¾ inches, four under the second crosspiece 1½ by 2¾ by 4 inches. The bolts needed are two carriage bolts ⅝ by 14 inches, six ⅝ by 10 inches, four ⅝ by 7 inches, sixteen ⅜ by 5 inches, four ¼ by 8½ inches, twenty ¼ by 2½ inches, eight screws of ⅝ inch wire, 2 inches long, and fourteen washers.

WEAVING WAS AN ART

IN THE DAYS OF HOMESPUN WOMEN USED TO WORK HARD.

Our Grandmothers Used to Spend Much Time Spinning, Weaving, Knitting, Netting and Embroidering—They Manufactured All Their Own Cloth.

In the days of homespun four ounces of lint, cotton or a half pound of lock wool was a day's stint in spinning, though a clever spinner could easily do twice as much. Wool was often colored before spinning—dyed black or red, then carded with white. The resultant thread, steel or red mixed, was wonderfully soft and harmonious in color.

Old silk carefully raveled, then carded with white wool or cotton, made the silk mixed that was such a favorite for the long stockings worn with knee breeches, as well as for homespun gowns. They were woven in checks, stripes and cloudings. One of the prettiest was dice cloth—a kind of basket weave—of alternate white and black or gray threads, thirteen to the group. It was troublesome to weave—a thread too many made a balk in the pattern. Children and servants had simple checks in blue or copperas and white. Linseys for winter wear were gorgeous in green and scarlet and black and blue.

Dyeing was part of the home work, as well as weaving and spinning. From walnut hulls, bark and root came twenty shades of brown. Green walnuts and sumach berries gave a beautiful fast black that did not stain the wearer. Hickory bark or peach leaves gave a glowing yellow; swamp maple, a blackish purple; sugar maple, a light leather tint, and oak bark, set with copperas, a handsome grayish color. In fact, a skilled dyer could get twenty colors from the woods and fields.

Except for flannels, carpets and blankets the warp was usually of flax or cotton. A very pretty carpet had half the warp of coarse wool doubled—a strand of green and one of brown. In weaving when the woof came uppermost a very coarse wool thread was shot in. When the cotton came up a very fine thread caught and held it almost invisibly. Beaten up thick the effect was that of a mossy, clouded Turkey fabric. Other carpets were woven in stripes or plain, like webbing, the woolen woof threads passing over and under the cotton warp two at a time.

Size was estimated by the number of threads that, laid side by side, made cloth the regulation yard wide. The coarsest was 400. From that it went up and up with hardly a limit except that of the spinners' skill and patience. There was scarcely anything they couldn't weave on the looms—jersey and serge, and cotton and linsey, house linen, bed linen, blankets and counterpanes. The counterpane was homespun high water mark. Woolen ones had usually the figure in colors skipped up on a white or blue ground. Those of cotton were left white and bleached till they dazzled the eyes. Of some easy patterns a clever woman could weave eight yards in a day.

Of honeycomb, huckaback and diamond draper three yards was a good day's work. Fancy patterns were more tedious. The crown of skill and patience was knotted cloth. The weave was perfectly plain, but at intervals of an inch a big soft cord was woven in and pulled up in little knots all along its length. Over the body of the cloth they formed regular diamonds. For the center they made an elaborate arabesque design. Down one side of the spread the maker generally drew them up to shape her initials, with either the date of making in roman letters or her [illegible]band's name opposite, to balance [illegible].

There was room, and to spare. Beds in those days stood four feet from the floor. Counterpanes were three yards by four without the fringe, which was either woven with dates and initials in the deep open heading or knitted in open lozenge pattern to which deep tassels were attached. It fell over a valance, also homespun, and was either fringed or edged with netted points at the bottom.

Weaving was not the sum of housewifery in that era. The good dames knew as much of embroidery as their favored great-granddaughters. One of them has left behind her a monumental piece of work, in which can be found no less than nineteen different stitches, many of them among the rarest and most difficult known.

The netting needle and stirrup filled up many a day. The bed was the piece de resistance in furnishing then. It was a tall four poster, and, besides counterpane and valance, had netted curtains and netted points, edging the long pillow and bolster cases. Window curtains were netted, too, besides edgings and fringes for all kinds of household articles. In particular the "toilets" that fell over the high square bureaus had often a netted fall half a yard deep around them. In addition, caps, ruffles, purses and fichus were netted. The latter were called dress handkerchiefs, and folded high about the throat over the low cut gowns. On them the netter lavished her choicest art.

Sometimes the mesh was as fine almost as bobbinet. Netted capes were high in favor, but the square with long ends was accounted better for young women. Sometimes they had fringe or tassels about the edge, or even a ruffle of the net with a big pattern run in. The handsomest finish was embroidery. For that the net was tacked smooth over cloth, the figures were wrought through both, then the under fabrics were cut away, leaving something closely approaching old rose point.

The women who practiced these arts made tatting, knit lace, stockings, mittens, tufted gloves, overshoes, comforters, garters, galluses and many things besides. Before their works follow them it might be well if some collector should gather up and keep safe for later [illegible]

We have noticed in passing Charlie Vine's meat market that he always has a crowd waiting for their choice meats, so we asked Charlie "How's trade?" "Well," said he, "I can't complain. I am killing four beeves, two to three hogs, and as many sheep per day to supply my customers, and I can see no reason to complain of such business.

Reports in all eastern papers show the mortality to be very great from the effects of heat in eastern cities. While we have had extremely hot weather here we have heard of no one being overcome by it. As a general thing, during our hot spells a fine breeze prevails, which helps out wonderfully and probably helps in no small degree to prevent sunstroke.

S. M. McKee went down to Detroit lake Wednesday evening of last week, returning on Saturday evening with Mrs. McKee. Mac says he is putting up several hundreds of tons of hay this season and that his timothy hay is very heavy. Says he has some on old ground that will turn over a ton to the acre, which is good for old-ground timothy in any country.

An interesting letter from Tilden to the JOURNAL this week has to be left out because the writer did not see fit to sign his name to it. This is an invariable rule in every well-regulated printing office. It is not always absolutely necessary that the name should appear in print, but it is always absolutely necessary that the editor of this paper should know the writer of every communication intended for publication in its columns. We have had to speak about this matter so often that it is a wonder to us that any JOURNAL reader should make this error.

C. O. Christianson returned on Sunday morning—one day later than he had intended to be. It seems that on Saturday, with three others, he took a carriage and went to Fort Snelling. While at the fort the carriage broke down and the party was obliged to walk to Minnehaha and take an electric car to Minneapolis, and the result was that C. O. reached the Union depot just five minutes too late. For about ten minutes C. O. put a great deal of emphasis into his language in the vain attempt to relieve his surcharged feelings. The next day soon after dinner he moved into the Union depot and went into camp, so as to be all ready for the 8:35 train for home. He got it.

Miss Dollie Bunnell is visiting friends in Grand Forks this week.

Don't forget the lecture by John G. Woolly in the Methodist church Aug. 11.

Mrs. E. Hammond, mother of the junior member of the JOURNAL firm, arrived last week. She has been visiting a sister in Canada.

Miss Minnie Schmidt was married to Mr. Charles Barholtz, at the residence of A. C. Schmidt, Esq., on Wednesday. Mr. Barholtz is a prosperous farmer living near Thief River Falls, where the couple will reside.

The rooms in the Marlette block until recently occupied by Mrs. Bailey as a millinery store are now occupied by the Crookston Hay and Commission Co., which company is composed of Casper Sands and the three Silvers who will carry on a general produce business.

The Minneapolis Exposition, which opens August 31st and closes Sept. 24th, is expected to far excel anything of the kind held thus far. The exhibits will be larger than usual, and the new features which will be added will make it instructive as well as interesting. In the way of entertainment there will be more and better variety than heretofore, which we will have occasion to enumerate later on.

Fertile Journal:—The Fierce-Thorne Theatre Co. was a disappointment to some of our citizens. They used old bills, of five or six different companies, and when they arrived there was but one man a woman and one little girl. When it comes to sharp practices theatre companies are "in it," and hardly ever get left. The house must have netted them at least $50. We have no fault to find with the acting, but there was not enough of them to perform what was advertised. The next troupe that comes along will be apt to get left.

James Novotny was in from the town of Tabor on Tuesday and dropped in to chat awhile and set that subscription ahead a year. He has just finished shipping his wheat which he threshed recently and finds it so much damaged that he will lose heavily on it—hardly paying the expense of raising, where, could he have sold last fall he would have made a splendid thing of it. He estimates that the wheat in Polk county will yield only about one-half crop this year, what he has seen along the west side at least.

James E. Lytle, agent for the Western Reversible Road machine made a trial of his machine on Tuesday morning on Loring avenue, grading that street from Main to Broadway in a very short time. The machine was drawn by a 16 horse power traction engine, but can be drawn by eight horses for all ordinary country road work. The road where the trial was made was exceedingly hard and the machine several times stopped the engine. It is so constructed that the shovel can be reversed at will thus making it possible to use it on only one side of a road if it is necessary. It is warranted to complete one mile of road in a day with eight horses and two men.

WHAT THEY SAY.

F. T. Haseltine: How's business with me? Good. I am taking orders now for fall delivery of trees, and am having a splendid trade through Minnesota and North Dakota.

Agent Sharkey: The N. P. trains were stopped at Pembina Monday by order of North Dakota, on account of the small pox epidemic in Manitoba. Passengers are quarantined at the line and only the express transferred.

L. Ellington: We had a delightful boatride on Devil's Lake on Saturday. We visited Fort Totten, Dana's Grove, and other points of interest around the lake. The crops out there are looking very well, and as far advanced as could be expected.

Policeman Robinson In Trouble.

On Wednesday night of last week officer Robinson arrested one of the laborers on the gravel train who was in a drunk and disorderly condition. The officer had to call a dray to take him to the lockup, and on the way he struck him a couple of times with his club in order to make him manageable. The next evening two or three hundred laborers gathered on the streets and talked about taking vengeance on the officer, but as the crowd lacked a leader nothing was done except to procure a warrant for Robinson's arrest. Next morning Robinson walked into court and gave himself up and his hearing is set for Friday.

Lost.

Sunday evening, July 31, on the wagon road between Mentor and Crookston, a silver open face watch. Finder will be rewarded by leaving it at the JOURNAL office.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Manager Columbus has been very successful in booking good attractions here for this fall. The next attraction on the boards is "The Miller-Calhoun Opera Co." The following is taken from the Duluth Evening Herald of June 25, and speaks well for the above named attraction, which will appear here three nights, Aug. 11, 12 and 13:

ADMIRABLY PRESENTED.

"THE BEGGAR STUDENT" AROUSES THE AUDIENCE'S ENTHUSIASM.

"The Beggar Student" was admirably presented by the Calhoun opera company last night at the Lyceum, and the audience appreciated the fact. Although it was the opening night with this opera everything passed off smoothly and there were no hitches of any consequence. Charles J. Campbell was in excellent voice, as he always is, and his work was especially good. His solo in the last act thoroughly aroused the audience and there was a perfect storm of applause. Miss Lotta Gilman's solo in the first act was equally well received and was admirably sung. Julia Calhoun as Bronislava did some good acting and kept the audience in good humor. It would be indeed difficult to find a more finished performance of this part. Gertie Lodge had a better opportunity to appear to advantage in this opera than any of the others and made an excellent Countess Palmethca. Douglas Flint's work as General Ollendorf was all that could be asked, and he was well received. George Mitchell as the Polish nobleman was good. Tom Martin, as the jailor, had but little to do, but did that well. The Warner sisters were greeted with the usual burst of applause when they appeared. The chorus work was strong, and the march in the last act was cleverly carried through and received a double encore. "The Beggar Student" is being sung at the matinee this afternoon and will be repeated to-night.

Margaret Mather's season, which just closed at the Grand opera house, New York, is said to be one of the most successful and satisfactory she ever played. Her new production, "The Egyptian," proved a winner from the start and her work in "Nance Oldfield" was received with most flattering demonstrations of approval. For next year she promises her two greatest productions, "The Egyptian" and "Joan of Arc," and will group with them enough of her former repetory to make the season one long to be remembered.

"The Hustler" will soon inaugurate active rehearsals for its ensuing season's tour. Already several of its participants are actively engaged in preparing "special acts" for the coming campaign. Manager Thos. H. Davis claims that "The Hustler" will continue to coin money after its few present competitors are dead and buried.

A Much Dreaded Fly.

The man eating fly of Central America inhabits the low lying coast regions, and is much dreaded by the natives for the fearful results which follow its sting. Naturalists call it Lucilia hominivora. The average specimen is about a third of an inch long. It has a big head, with the eyes on top. Its cheeks are a golden yellow, its abdomen dark blue with purple bands, its legs black, its wings unusually big, and they produce a continuous and loud buzzing when in motion.

The person bitten by this fly gets a disease called myiasis. It generally begins with an itching of the nose, then that organ swells and bleeds; next it becomes ulcerated, and in these ulcers may be found the larvæ of the fly. The whole face becomes swollen, erysipelas sets in, followed by meningitis and death. One man I know shot himself after he had been bitten rather than face the tortures he knew were certain to come. It is difficult to exterminate them, but injections of chloroform sometimes do good, but as often fail. One man I heard of was cured by lemon juice injected into his blood.—Interview in New York Tribune.

REVIEW OF WORK

WHICH HAS BEEN DONE BY THE FIFTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

Of the Two Thousand Bills Placed on the House Calendar Four Hundred and Fifty Have Passed—Important Measures Acted Upon in Each Branch.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—After a session of eight months the first session of the Fifty-second congress is about to end and a review of its work may prove interesting. The house devoted the first two months to the discussion and adoption of a code of rules, after which regular business was taken up. Bills to the number of 9,687 have been introduced in the house and referred to committees. Of this number 2,115 have been reported and placed on the calendar and about 450 have passed the house. The most important measures considered by the house, excepting the general appropriation bills, were the silver bills; the tariff measures reported from the ways and means committee; the Chinese exclusion act; the "intermediate" and army nurse pension bill; the bill to enforce reciprocal commercial relations with Canada; the bill increasing the pay of the life saving crew; to establish lineal promotion in the army; for the better control of national banks in regard to loaning money to directors and officers, and to add the name of the secretary of agriculture to the cabinet officers who may act as president in certain contingencies. The Bland silver bill failed in the house, as did the free coinage bill which passed the senate. The several tariff bills passed by the house failed in the senate, as did also the bills providing for the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as states.

Of the 3,492 bills introduced in the senate 1,012 were reported upon by committees and 800 of them passed. Among the most important measures passed by the senate and not accepted by the house were the following: To facilitate the settlement of claims for arrears of pay and bounty; for the construction of revenue cutters (two each) for service on the great lakes and the Pacific coast; the "pure food" bill; to increase the rate of pension for certain cases of deafness; to fix the price of lands entered under the desert land laws; to authorize the secretary of war to cause a survey to be made for the ship canal from Philadelphia across New Jersey to New York bay and the better enforcement of the immigration laws. A large number of public building and claim bills passed by the senate also failed in the house. Four hundred and three bills have passed both houses and been sent to the president for signature. There are twenty of these bills still under consideration by the executive; one has been returned to the house by its request without signing; two have been vetoed—the bill to amend the organizing of circuit courts of appeals so as to give them jurisdiction of certain Indian cases, and the bill referring the McGarrahan claim to the court of private land claims.

Investigations were a feature of this congress especially in the house and committees devoted much time to them. The pension office and its management received the attention of a special committee which reported mismanagement of the bureau generally under the administration of Commissioner Raum and recommended to the house that the president be asked to dismiss that official. The committee on public lands looked into the management of the Yellowstone national park and reported a bill to rectify the condition of affairs there. The report also criticised Russell B. Harrison, the president's son, for his connection with leases there. The committee appointed to investigate the census office began their work late in the session and finally postponed it until next session.

In both branches of congress a large number of important bills which had been referred to committees and reported back will retain their places on the calendar in the second session.

AGREED TO POSTPONE.

A Democratic Caucus Held to Take Action on the Present House Deadlock.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—A Democratic caucus was held in the house during the evening to endeavor to affect an agreement by which the present deadlock on the world's fair appropriation clause in the sundry civil bill could be broken and a speedy adjournment be brought about. There were about 100 members present. A resolution was offered by Mr. Mutchler, of Pennsylvania, which in effect was that there should be a vote on a separate world's fair bill making an appropriation of $5,000,000 in aid of the world's fair in December next, after six hours debate, and that only three amendments thereto shall be in order. The resolution further provided that the house should insist on the disagreement to the senate amendment to the sundry civil bill and that the Dockery subcommittee of the committee on appropriations should be continued during the recess with power to visit Chicago and inquire into the financial condition of the fair and report at the opening of the next session of congress as to the necessity for government aid.

Iams Begins Suit.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—Ex-Private Iams has begun the various suits against those whom he claims have wronged him and injured his good name and has made informations against Colonel Hawkins, Lieutenant Colonel Streator and Assistant Surgeon Grim and others unknown, charging them with aggravated assault and battery, and assault and battery. Warrants were issued and placed in the hands of constables. A civil action will also be brought for damages and Iams' attorneys feel confident that he will get heavy damages and also of convicting the defendants of the charges made.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—In the house bills were passed setting apart lands in Oklahoma Territory for school purposes, forbidding railroads to charge more than 8 cents per mile on passenger fare in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and permitting the people of the Territory of Utah to make an exhibit at the world's fair. The conference report on the deficiency bill was agreed to. The appropriation for the French spoliation claims, amounting to $737,765, was omitted. The appropriations in the bill amounted to $5,900,319, being $323,589 less than as passed by the senate and $1,081,087 more than as passed by the house. The conference report on the sundry civil bill was offered by Mr. Holman, all the items in dispute being agreed to except those relating to the world's fair appropriatio the appropriation for the national commission and the employment of Pinkerton detectives at the G. A. R. encampment in Washington next September. It was agreed that a vote on these items should be taken at noon tomorrow.

Debate on the tariff took up nearly all day in the senate. The conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill was agreed to.

Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—The house, after much filibustering, voted to concur in the senate appropriation of $5,000,000 for the world's fair. The vote stood—ayes 117, nays 105. Mr. Holman moved to reconsider, and Mr. Bingham moved to lay the motion on the table. Filibustering was then begun again and continued throughout the session.

The senate spent the day discussing the anti-option bill.

Thursday.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The house passed a resolution to adjourn Saturday, 121 to 51. The regular order was then taken up. Mr. Bingham's motion to lay on the table the motion of Mr. Holman to reconsider the vote by which the house decided to recede from its disagreement to the senate amendment on the world's fair. The opponents of the appropriation began to filibuster by moving to adjourn to various days. This was kept up all the afternoon.

In the senate Mr. Washburn moved to lay on the table Mr. Wolcott's motion to defer the anti-option bill till December. Mr. Washburn's motion was carried—32 to 13. The consideration of the anti-option bill was resumed.

Friday.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The house listened for an hour to a controversy over a statement in Mr. Watson's book to the effect that members had been drunk on the floor of the house. Mr. Watson refused to retract it, saying that it was true and he defied the members to contradict it. The outcome was that Messrs. Boatner, Wolverton, Buchanan, of Virginia, Grout and Simpson were appointed a committee to investigate the charges. Watson furnished the committee with a list of witnesses and the investigation will begin at once.

After the morning hour expired the fi bustering over the world's fair approp tion was continued.

The senate's time was taken up speechmaking. Mr. Allison, to wh committee was referred the house journment resolution, said the commi would not report until after the sun civil bill had been disposed of.

Saturday.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—Filibusteri began in the house as soon as the world fair amendments to the sundry civil were reached. After it had continu some time, Mr. Holman as a privileg question reported from the committee on appropriations a joint resolution extending until Aug. 4 the appropriations carried by the sundry civil bill of last year. The resolution was not received. The house then adjourned out of respect of the memory of Representative Craig.

The senate passed a resolution extending the appropriations of the sundry ci bill till Wednesday. Senator Washbu n moved to postpone the anti-option bill till December. Carried.

Monday.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The house passed the resolution extending the sundry civil appropriations four days; also the bill changing the date of dedication of the world's fair buildings from Oct. 12 to Oct. 21.

The senate spent the day in debate on the tariff.

A Resume of the Condition of the Society at the Present Time.

At a meeting of the Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association held Friday evening, Aug. 5th, in the city hall, Secretary Wyatt submitted a report of the business of the association since its organization. The financial statement of the secretary will be of interest:

The society has made a good showing for the time it has been organized and the support it has had. But as only 136 shares at $10 apiece have been sold, the association is not in the condition it should be. The debt of the association was reduced $908 by the July meeting. The value of each share of stock at present is $19.92, and if the present indebtedness of $1,369.27 was liquidated each share would then be worth $29.89.

Some permanent improvements have been made on the grounds of the society this summer which represent a large outlay of money. A grand stand capable of seating 500 people has been erected, the track has been graded according to the rules and regulations of the American Trotting association, and 20 new stables have been built.

More stock will be put on the market until the present indebtedness is wiped out. Aside from the profits which will accrue to the stockholders, the race meetings of the society are beneficial to the city, both as a means of advertising it throughout the country and bringing large numbers of strangers here, and also by the amount of money which is spent in the city on those occasions.

Regarding the next race meeting we quote from Secretary Wyatt's report:

On July 3, 1891, representatives of the associations throughout northern Minnesota and North Dakota met at the hotel Columbia at Fargo, N. D., and formed what is now termed the No. 1 Hard Racing Circuit comprising Litchfield, Benson, Morris, Breckenridge, Fergus Falls, Fargo, Crookston and Grand Forks. Races commence Sept. 19, and reach Crookston October 10. This association has become a member of the No. 1 Hard Racing Circuit, and your directors have accepted October 10, 11 and 12 as the dates of fall meeting, with a program as follows:

MONDAY, OCTOBER 10.	Purse
2:29 trot	$ 200 00

GOOD ENOUGH.

That Staunch Old Republican War Horse, J. G. McGrew, Strikes from the Shoulder.

Read What He Says.

CROOKSTON, Minn., Aug. 6, 1892.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—The several political parties have now placed before the people of this state their candidates for the various state offices and the platform upon which the campaign is to be conducted, and each elector must decide as to which candidate he will support. Though one may favor a reduction of the tariff, he may very positively also favor the enactment and enforcement of strong sumptuary laws, and, therefore, find it impossible to support the Democratic nominees. He may also favor parts of the People's party platform, yet think that the sub-treasury and land loan schemes are both utterly impracticable, and therefore decline to support the nominees of that party in the present campaign, though he voted for Mr. Owen two years ago. Then, as there is no hope of the Prohibition party succeeding, it will be only throwing his vote away for the sake of principle if he should vote that ticket; and he must therefore turn to the Republican party and inquire what claims it has for his support. In doing this one is met at the outset with the fact that in this campaign the old money influence has disappeared, and the nominations were made by the people, and not by corporations or by the old political bosses. Mr. Nelson was pre-eminently the choice of the country, having gone into the convention with votes enough to nominate him without the aid of either St. Paul or Minneapolis; in fact, in opposition to both of these powerful political strongholds. In addition to this, he is unquestionably the best fitted for the position of any of the candidates that are making the race for the gubernatorial chair, and when elected will be less hampered, perhaps, than any other governor we have ever had.

For these reasons, I shall give him one vote on November 8th, if permitted to attend the polls on that day, and I am of the opinion that a great many others will do so, who voted for Mr. Owen two years ago.

The Chimes of Normandy.

Duluth News, July 2:—The Calhoun Opera company scored a most pronounced success last evening at the Lyceum in "The Chimes of Normandy." Take it all in all, it was probably the best presentation yet given here by this excellent company. It was gratifying to note, too, that there was a better house than has been the rule the past few evenings. It was still far from what the company deserve, for it is a splendid organization, its members are all artists of the first class, and the operas are all put on in good shape. No better summer opera company has ever visited the northwest. Certainly it is superior to any that has appeared in Duluth. The "Chimes" will never grow old and the music loving public will always go to hear it. There have been many presentations of it in Duluth, but none better than last night's. Tom Martin, as Gaspard, made the greatest hit of the evening. In make up and acting he was a perfect Gaspard. Miss Gilman, Miss Calhoun and Messrs. Campbell, Flint, Mitchell and Mansfield all won frequent and deserved applause, and gave finished renditions of their parts both musically and dramatically. The Misses Warner again made good their claim as among the prettiest and best dancers on the stage. Their work last night was especially attractive. This afternoon "Boccaccio" will be given at the matinee and this evening the "Chimes" will be repeated. Both deserve the largest houses.

Polk County Review:—Messrs. Kirsch, Johnson, and De Mers, Polk County Commissioners, were in our city on Friday last week, conferring with our city aldermen in regard to the Red Lake River bridge which was condemned the week before. They in connection with our aldermen let the contract to Jas. McIlraith to build a new abutment and lower the bridge eight feet, for the sum of eight hundred dollars. The county will pay $500 and the city $300. The commissioners were reasonable and granted all that was asked for, and James will give us a good job.

To New York Via Washington.

One of the most delightful routes between Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati in the west and the chief cities of the east is over the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. to New York, by way of Washington. The trip possesses many peculiar charms, especially to one whose journeyings have never taken him to the borders of the sunny Southland. The ride through the Monongahela Valley, over the Alleghany mountains, and then along the historic Potomac, awakens a keen interest in the lover of the picturesque. Much of the ground traversed has unique historic associations. A large part of this region was debatable land during the civil war. Across these fields and down these dusty roads once marched now the Blue and now the Gray. These valleys once rang with cheers, now for the Stars and Stripes, and now for the Stars and Bars. These mountainous heights more than once echoed with the sounds of deadly onflict. Here General Lee invaded aryland and Pennsylvania, only to repulsed at Gettysburg. Here onewall Jackson directed his rces on that "grand hunting exrsion" by which he corraled the ederal forces in Harper's Ferry. nd here at Harper's Ferry was ohn Brown's old brick fort. To ne who remembers when these names were first written in blood, what an excitement of feeling their mention arouses, as do also the names, Antietam, Sharpsburg, South Mountain, Shenandoah, Harper's Ferry, Ball's Bluff.

Soon after Harper's Ferry is passed there is seen dimly the white marble shaft of Washington's Monument, and then a great white dome, and then other pinnacles and spires, and then Washington is reached.

Even the most cursory glance at the city is sure to be profoundly impressive. A half hour's drive through the city will reveal those features which have given the city its reputation and made it, in one sense, the Mecca of all patriotic citizens of this country.

New York is about five hours' ride from Washington, via the famous Royal Blue Line. The road touches at Baltimore, Wilmington and Philadelphia. This is one of the finest sections of railroad in the world, the speed of the trains often being over sixty miles an hour.—Northwestern Congregationalist.

How the Northwest Grows.

Kalispell, in the Flathead valley of Montana, now a year old, has 1,500 people. Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, has grown to a place of 500 population in six months. Steamers on Kootenai river run from there to the Nelson, Ainsworth and Kalso mines. What splendid agricultural, lumbering and mining resources await development in Western Montana, Northern Idaho and Eastern Washington, along the Pacific extension of the Great Northern. Through train service begins August 14th, between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Spokane, Washington. The extension opens up 65 new stations and is the short line between the East and Spokane. ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS.

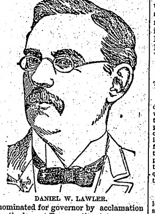
Detailed Report of the Doings of the Democratic State Convention.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 4.—A St. Paul man heads the Minnesota Democratic state ticket. Hon. Dan W. Lawler was nominated for governor by acclamation by the largest Democratic state convention ever held in Minnesota.



DANIEL W. LAWLER.

The convention opened at 12:20 with 789 delegates in their seats and not a single contest. Ramsey and Hennepin counties (St. Paul and Minneapolis) had 212 votes. Alfred Jacques, a member of the law firm of Jacques & Hudson, of Duluth, was chosen for temporary chairman, and J. A. Johnson, of St. Peter, and B. J. Mullaney, of Minneapolis, both active newspaper men, were made secretaries.

Mr. Jacques delivered a very brief speech and talked tariff reform right through, closing with an appeal for harmony.

Committees on credentials, resolutions and permanent organization were then appointed, each committee consisting of five delegates at large and one from each judicial district.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

It was 4 p. m. when the convention got to work again and it was decided that each congressional district delegation should choose one candidate for the electoral ticket and four at large should be chosen by the convention.

The Watonwan and Hennepin county delegations then tried to have nominations made for judges of supreme court but McCafferty, of Ramsey county, worked through, after considerable lively skirmishing, a motion to proceed with nominations for governor.

The call of counties was begun by Secretary Johnson and Aitken county gave way to Ramsey.

The Hennepin county delegation wanted a recess to consult and fifteen minutes was given them. When they returned Judge Flandreau, of St. Paul, placed Hon. D. W. Lawler in nomination. The nomination was seconded by Cy Wellington, of St. Paul, and members of several other delegations.

Lawler's nomination was then made by acclamation, on motion of Winston, of Hennepin, and when a rising vote was proposed, every delegate got on his feet and cheered.

Lawler Accepts.

A committee of three escorted Mr. Lawler to the platform and he was introduced to the convention by P. B. Winston, of Hennepin county. He made a short speech of acceptance.

After the platform was adopted, a resolution was offered that the new state central committee be formed by selecting one member from each judicial district and five at large. Several amendments were voted down and finally, on motion of D'Autremont, of St. Louis county, it was decided that the new committee should consist of one member from each judicial district, one each from Hennepin and Ramsey counties and five at large, to be selected by the convention.

The convention adjourned until 8 p. m. before this matter was settled, but it was the first thing taken up in the evening.

THE EVENING SESSION.

After disposing of the plan of formation of the new state central committee, nominations for lieutenant governor were called.

J. Adam Bede, a young Democrat, as he explained, from the "unsalted city of [illegible]" jumped on the platform [illegible] Carlton county [illegible] Lawler [illegible] acclamation and Bede's speech did the business. He started out by saying that he represented the young Democrats of the northern part of the state, where Republicans claimed there was nothing but icebergs and the aurora borealis, but where Democrats were increasing faster than Jacob's cattle.

Bede Let Himself Loose.

Mr. Bede then let himself loose and set the convention wild with his flowery ovations to Democracy and scathing rebukes to Republicans. When Bede finished his speech three cheers were given him as he vanished in the gloom of the poorly lighted room.

Tried to Endorse People's Party Man.

An attempt was made to endorse H. B. Martin, of Hennepin county, for secretary of state. Martin is the nominee of the People's party for that office. The attempt fell flat, and Peter Nelson, of Goodhue county, a life-long Democrat, was nominated by acclamation. Different delegations said that if Mr. Martin would promise to support the Democratic ticket, and work for it and vote for it, he would receive their votes, but Martin said nothing and laid low.

German Editor for Treasurer.

Joseph Leicht, of Winona, was nominated for treasurer by acclamation and very many speakers congratulated the convention and the Democracy of Minnesota in placing the German editor on the state ticket.

For attorney general three men were placed in nomination, but J. C. Nethaway, of Washington county, was chosen unanimously. The other two men named for the office were W. L. Breckenridge, of Olmsted county, and J. L. Macdonald, of Ramsey.

Straight Democrats for Justices.

A long struggle was brought upon the convention when nominations came up for justices of the supreme court, but all ended in harmony, and the following named gentlemen were placed in nomination by acclamation: Daniel Buck, Blue Earth county; Thomas Canty, Hennepin county; William Mitchell, Winona county.

THE PLATFORM.

The Planks Upon Which the Democracy of Minnesota Stands.

The Democrats of Minnesota gathered in delegate convention mingle their rejoicing with that of their fellows in the nation that the earnest voice of the rank and file of the party was heard and obeyed by the national convention and found expression in the nomination of the able and courageous Cleveland for our leader and in the bold explicit declaration that Republican protection is a fraud in proof of which we point to Homestead, where the militia of a state is keeping peace in a quarrel over the spoils between the real and the supposed beneficiaries of protection.

Elevator Combinations Denounced.

We denounce the rapacious and conscienceless combination which has grown up in the state with the connivance of Republican legislatures. Our grain markets have been monopolized and our farmers robbed of the fruit of their hard labors. We reaffirm our belief that this combination rests upon the fact that the railroads of this state have abjured one of their primary functions, the provision of suitable means for handling grain, and have given the same over to the control of private persons, and we again declare our belief that the remedy, simple but efficacious, lies in legislation requiring the roads to resume this proper function, thus giving to every station a free and open market.

To Relieve the Burdens of Labor.

We recognize the great conspicuous fact that the property of our government rests upon labor, and that all legislation should be shaped so far as possible to relieve it from all unjust and oppressive burdens, and to secure to it its just share of the benefits of our general property.

State Interference in Education.

We are opposed to state interference with paternal rights and the rights of conscience in the education of children as an infringement of the fundamental Democratic doctrine that the largest individual liberty consistent with the rights of others insures the highest type of American citizenship and best government.

Change in State Tax Laws Favored.

We again call the attention of the voters to the manifest injustice and inequality of our tax laws under which wealth easily evades its share of the public burdens and compels moderate accumulations to bear the part it shirks. And we again invite the coming legislature to a serious consideration of the subject to the end that a just, evenly bearing system may be adopted.

The Democratic party has always been and is today the consistent opponent of all legislation the result of which is to create law-made wealth which impoverishes the poor and those of moderate means in order to enrich the few. We condemn all use of the taxing powers for this purpose. We call the attention of the people of this state to the fact that the mineral wealth at the northern part of this state is not bearing its just share of the public burdens. The non-resident millionaires who own iron mines whose value is, at a moderate estimate, $20,000,000, under our present statues pay less than $9,000 per annum in taxes. In exchange for the votes of 2,000 employes, coerced into voting the Republican ticket, the Republican party has covenanted to perpetuate this system and to deliver to these men the government of one of the counties of this state.

We demand that this condition of things be rectified. We denounce all bounties and exemptions and demand that all taxes to be raised in this state shall be as nearly equal as may be, and that all property on which taxes are to be levied shall have a cash valuation and be equalized and uniform.

And we call upon all good citizens without distinction of party to join with us in defeating the proposed constitutional amendment known as chapter 2 of the general laws of 1891, to be voted upon this fall, which seeks to perpetuate this unjust system of taxation; and while it pretends to levy taxes upon sleeping car and other similar corporations, it repeals the existing constitutional tax of 3 per cent. upon the gross earnings of our railroads, now realizing for the state a revenue of $75,000 and annually increasing, and places the rate of taxation upon the earnings of such railroads at the caprice of the legislature. We especially call attention to, and denounce the form of ballot for this proposed amendment to be voted on at the coming election, which is known as "Senate File No. 124," as being especially designed to mislead the voters, and we call upon all honest citizens to assist in rebuking such trickery.

Resolved, That we are in favor of a radical change in the laws of this state, and demand such legislation as will provide for intelligent and economical supervision of the building and maintenance of our country roads.

Resolved, That for the better security of our government, we recommend an amendment to the federal constitution extending the presidential term to six years and making a president ineligible for re-election.

We favor also the election of president and vice president and senators of the United States by a direct vote of the people. [illegible]

Believing the contract system in force in the state penitentiary to be wrong in principle, prejudicial to the interests of the state, the welfare of the convicts, and an injustice [illegible]

AT WORK AGAIN.

STRIKERS AT DUQUESNE GIVE UP THE FIGHT.

With the Exception of a Few Blacklisted Men All the Old Force Returned—Four Hundred Non-Union Workmen at Homestead Go Out—Strikers Jubilant.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 8.—The Duquesne rioters had a hearing before Alderman Reilly at 8 p. m. Quite a crowd of Duquesne workmen were present to hear the case. Mr. E. V. Breck appeared for the commonwealth and Mr. S. W. Brennan and J. R. McQuaid for the defense. O. P. Griffith, a coal and iron policeman at the Duquesne iron works and the informant in these cases, was the first witness and testified that he heard the crowd about the gate and heard them threaten the men who tried to enter the mill. Many of the men had clubs. William Mislagel, the master mechanic of the Duquesne mills, swore he had come to the mill at 6:30 and was stopped by five men, who dragged him away from the mills and told him that if he went in he would wish he had not. Hugh Boyce, a carpenter at the works, was stopped by the men but went in despite the threats that were made against him. A number of other witnesses were examined and the prosecution closed its case. Attorney Brennan for the defense suggested that Snyder and McLean, two of the men on trial, should be let go as they had not been in the crowd but only on the steps of a house near by and the remainder be admitted to bail for a court trial.

Mr. Breck understood that Snyder and McLean were arrested on the testimony of Deputy Young, who was not then present and that therefore the court should not free them. He agreed to the remainder being let go on bail. Squire Reilly finally held Ursie, Essler, Bukie, Bennett, Kennedy, Hogan, Nolan, Haas and Coates for court and fixed bail at $1,000. Snyder and McLean were released on parole to appear for a further hearing. All of the men got bail except Ursie, who went to jail.

STRIKERS JUBILANT.

Several Hundred Non-Union Men Desert the Mills at Homestead.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Aug. 8.—It would be hard to find a more jubilant or more hopeful set of men than are the Homestead strikers at present. Not since the beginning of the present conflict have they been so confident of success. Last week many of them were going around attired in their Sunday clothes and despondent looks. They were beginning to feel that the battle was about as good as lost and the leaders experienced no little difficulty in keeping the discouraged ones in line. But it is different now. This sudden change in the situation was brought about by so many of the company's non-unionists deserting their posts. From the time the main entrance to Fort Frick was opened in the morning until it closed in the evening men continued to leave the mills. Those who came out through the main gate were received with open arms by the strikers who conducted them to their headquarters two squares distant. Here were assembled all through the day several hundred idle steel workers and the arrival of each non-union man was the signal for cheers of the most enthusiastic kind. The deserters from the little mill of imprisoned workmen were provided with transportation to their homes, the majority of them being sent to Baltimore and Philadelphia. By 8 o'clock p. m. all who left the works during the day had been started on their homeward journey. Chairman Crawford, of the advisory committee, says that over 150 men had come from the mill to the Amalgamated headquarters during the day and that over 400 have left the company's employ since Saturday.

A VERDICT RENDERED.

The Coroner's Jury at Homestead Finishes Its Labors.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 4.—The inquest into the deaths resulting from the riots at Homestead has been concluded before Coroner McDowell. The jury was out about an hour before the verdict was returned. On the death of Silas Wayne the verdict states that he came to his death while in company of others in unlawful assembly upon the property of the Carnegie, Phipps & Co.'s steel works, Mifflin township, to prevent the landing of two model barges loaded with Pinkerton guards to protect said property, and he being struck from a missile from a cannon which had been taken by said unlawful assemblage to the Pittsburg side of the Monongahela river and discharged by them, striking and instantly killing the said Silas Wayne, and we recommend the said unlawful assembly be certified to the September sessions of the grand jury."

In the cases of three Pinkerton men similar returns were made in each. That of J. Connors states that it was caused from shock and exhaustion due to a gunshot wound in the right arm, he being shot by a ball from an unlawful assemblage.

All Released.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 5.—All the Carnegie and Pinkerton men for whom warrants were issued have waived examination, and have been released on $10,000 bail each.

The Third Victim.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 7.—Another victim has been added to the list of fatalities in the West Side catastrophe. Early in the morning Emil Horn died at the city hospital from the effects of his injuries. [illegible]

THE BIG PARADE.

Thirty Thousand Knights Templar in Line at Denver.

DENVER, Aug. 9.—The immense parade of the Knights Templar this morning was the event of the encampment. Fully 30,000 uniformed Sir Knights were in line and the streets were fairly jammed with spectators. The parade began shortly after 10 a. m. and was not concluded for over six hours. There were nearly 300 bands in line, and the commanderies pride themselves on having the best music obtainable. One of the most attractive features was California Commandery No. 1, which had 100 members in the parade all mounted on black horses. The streets are all paved with asphalt and the rain of yesterday afternoon caused no mud or slush.

An order has been issued by Grand Master Gobin directing that the competitive drill of Wednesday be declared off. This is in the interest of harmony exclusively and was made at the suggestion of prominent Knights. It was a great disappointment to those who had counted on taking part. The exhibition drill will be given Thursday. Boston and Cincinnati are competitors in the contest—for the place of holding the conclave in 1895. It will be a pretty even fight—as both cities are strongly represented.

THE WESTERN CAMPAIGN.

Republican Politics Will Be Run by a Sub-Committe.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—The Herald says the Republican campaign in the West will be directed from Chicago by the following committe, subject to the national executive committee: W. J. Campbell, of Illinois; J. N. Huston, of Indiana; E. Rosewater, of Nebraska; R. G. Evans, of Minnesota; H. C. Payne, of Wisconsin.

The committee will meet the latter part of the next week, probably. The day has not been fixed. Their headquarters will be at the Grand Pacific. Mr. Campbell will be elected chairman. The committee will have supervision over the canvass in Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, three states regarded as doubtful, and all over the West. It is subordinate to the executive committee, but its decisions will be regarded as settling questions pertaining to the West.

The work of the executive committee will be still further subdivided. William O'Brady, the Kentucky member, will have charge of the Southern states; J. H. Manley and Sam Fessenden in New England.

Another meeting of the executive committee will be held Friday or Saturday. The compensation of the officers and employes of the national committee is to be fixed.

LAWLER FOR GOVERNOR.

The Minnesota Democratic Convention Held at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 4.—The Democratic state convention was called to order at 12:20 by Chairman Campbell, of the state central committee. Alfred Jacques, of Duluth, was chosen temporary chairman, and J. A. Johnson, of St. Peter, and B. J. Mullaney, of Minneapolis, secretaries. After appointing the usual committees the convention adjourned until 3 p. m.

At the afternoon session Hon. D. W. Lawler, of St. Paul, was nominated for governor by acclamation; H. H. Hawkins, of Carleton county, lieutenant governor; Peter Nelson, of Goodhue, secretary of state; Joseph Leicht, of Winona, treasurer; J. C. Nethaway, of Washington, attorney general, and Daniel Buck, Thomas Canty and William Mitchell, justices supreme court.

DON DICKINSON CHOSEN.

The Ex-Postmaster General Is Chairman of Democratic Campaign Committee.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Don M. Dickinson was chosen chairman of the Democratic national campaign committee at its meeting during the day. Bradley Smalley was chosen secretary. A strong effort was made to induce Senator Gorman to take the chairmanship, but it failed. William C. Whitney was present by courtesy and was chosen a member of the committee. Mr. Harrity was authorized to appoint the necessary subcommittees and they will be announced at a later date; also necessary assistants at national headquarters.

New York Law Unconstitutional.

ROCHESTER, Aug. 6.—Judge Ramsay has handed down a decision in the case of the Monroe county board of supervisors, declaring the state apportionment act void and unconstitutional. The decision is based mainly upon the ground that the representation in many of the districts is inequitable, and that the constitutional provision in this respect has been plainly disregarded.

Headquarters at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 7.—A meeting of the Republican state central committee was held at the Windsor hotel, and St. Paul was chosen as headquarters for the ensuing campaign. Robert Jamison was confirmed as chairman of the committee and Tams Bixby was unanimously elected secretary.

Judge Crounze Nominated.

OMAHA, Aug. 6.—Judge Lorenzo Crounze was nominated for governor by the Republican convention at Lincoln on the fifth ballot. He received 446 votes, and it took 423 to nominate.

A Little Premature.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Secretary Foster, of the state department, says that the dispatch announcing that discriminating rebates on vessels passing through the Welland canal had been removed was premature. The matter was in the course of adjustment and would no doubt be satisfactorily settled.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—In the absence of any other business the senate discussed the Homestead affair with some warmth and personality, Mr. Hawley of Connecticut, in the course of the debate, taking occasion to remark that Mr. Palmer, of Illinois, needed a guardian. At the close of the discussion a much modified resolution of investigation was adopted, providing for a special committee of seven to investigate the employment of armed bodies of men for private purposes in connection with differences between workmen and employers.

The business in the house was confined principally to the taking of recesses in order to enable the Democrats to talk over the situation and to formulate some scheme of action. Resolutions revoking all leaves of absence (even those granted on account of sickness) was adopted, and the seargeant-at-arms was directed (personally, if need be) to enforce the attendance of the absentees.

Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—In the senate the vice president announced the appointment of Messrs. Gallinger, Peffer, Hansbrough, Felton, Sanders, White and Hill as the select committee on the Pinkerton detective force, and Messrs. Hawley, Manderson, Quay, Palmer and Vilas as the select committee on the reception of the Grand Army. A number of unimportant bills were passed and after a short executive session the senate at 1:40 adjourned.

The house transacted no business of consequence.

Thursday.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—In the house a resolution extending the sundry civil appropriations to Aug. 10 was passed. The house, after an explanation of the caucus agreement regarding the world's fair appropriation, voted, 131 to 59 to disagree to the senate $5,000,000 appropriation in the sundry civil bill, and sent the bill back to conference. It was voted, 187 to 7, to vote at 1 p. m. on the Durburrow substitute bill, appropriating $2,500,000 for the fair.

The senate also extended the sundry civil appropriations. No other business was transacted.

DIFFERENCES SETTLED.

The Strike of Saw Mill Men at Stevens Point Satisfactorily Arranged.

STEVENS POINT, Wis., Aug. 6.—The strike is at an end and as many of the mills as are prepared to start up will be running in the morning. All differences have been adjusted by giving employes who receive less than $1.50 a day an advance of one shilling. The same increase is given carriage riders in the Bosworth and the Reilly & Week Lumber mills.

W. W. O'Keefe, of Ashland, arrived arrived here during the morning, and after his long address to the workmen, in which he gave some good advice, a committee was appointed and the agreement was arrived at with the mill owners. An organization of the men into a union will be effected before he leaves. The news that the differences between employers and employes are satisfactorily arranged is received with an expression of thankfulness on all sides.

SONS OF VETERANS.

The Annual Convention of the Order in Session at Helena.

HELENA, Mon., Aug. 8.—The doors of the new Auditorium were thrown open during the morning to welcome the third national convention that has assembled within its walls since its completion in June, the occasion being the annual gathering of the Sons of Veterans. The convention proper consists of about 300 members delegated from the different branches of the organization throughout the country, but, as has always been the case at the previous gatherings of the order, several thousand visitors are present, and the new structure was taxed to its utmost to accommodate the crowd. The citizens of Helena have contributed liberally for the entertainment of the visitors and the city is elaborately decorated throughout. The sittings of the convention will continue for four days, and numerous excursions and receptions have been arranged to take place during this period. Russell B. Harrison is present as a delegate from the New York division council of the order and is also chairman of the transportation committee.

CHOLERA'S DEATH LIST.

The Official Record Places the Number of Victims at About 24,000.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 8.—The official list of the deaths from cholera has been published. The number of victims up to August is given as 23,919. The list, however, is admitted to be incomplete and the most conservative places the number at 25,000.

Harrison at Loon Lake.

LOON LAKE, N. Y., Aug. 7.—President Harrison is again with his wife at his quiet summer residence. There is no getting around the fact that Mrs. Harrison is still a very sick woman. That she has improved to a wonderful degree is also certain, but the newspaper reports published saying that she was entirely recovered are without sense and foundation. Your correspondent endeavored to see the president during the morning but the latter was taking a drive with Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Parker. They were gone about an hour.

SENATE AND HOUSE SETTLE DISPUTES AND ADJOURN.

An Appropriation of Two and a Half Millions Made for the World's Fair. Conference Report on the Sundry Civil Bill Adopted by Weary Legislators.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—The first session of the fifty-first congress has adjourned. The dying hours were uneventful and lacking in any excitement, and save for the president and two members of the cabinet and an unusually large crowd of people in the galleries, principally ladies dressed in summer attire, there was nothing to denote that the gavel was about to fall adjourning the two houses until December next. Nearly all the senators and representatives in the city were in their seats when the clock pointed to the hour for adjournment, and on the floors of both houses and around the corridors and clerk's office there was a bustle and excitement incident to the preparation of bills which passed during the evening for the president's signature before the session of congress expired.

Shortly after 8 o'clock, as is customary on such occasions, the president arrived at the capitol and was immediately shown to his room, where he was engaged for some minutes chatting with senators and Vice President Morton. Soon after arriving the world's fair bill appropriating two and a half millions, which was passed by both the senate and house during the afternoon, was presented for his signature, and in a few minutes it became a law. Other bills followed, and for some minutes the president was kept busy affixing his name to various measures, consisting principally, however, of bills of a private nature. An unusually small number were presented to him and he soon completed his task and spent the remainder of his time talking to senators and others who happened in.

CASEY'S MEASURE PASSED.

The Red River Valley Relief Bill Becomes a Law.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—It was a great surprise to everybody when there was no objection in the house to passing the Casey bill granting relief to settlers on the Red River valley lands. A supreme court decision held that the Manitoba, now the Great Northern, was owner of the lands. After negotiations of last summer had been reported Mr. Casey introduced a bill which in a somewhat modified form has passed both houses. Representative Johnson has for several days been trying to get recognition from Speaker Crisp, and after the world's appropriation was out of the way and a number of other matters had been disposed of, the long sought recognition was given, and, strange to say, there was no objections to the bill. When the bill came over to the senate, Senator Pettigrew moved that the amendments be concurred in and this being agreed to the bill was sent to the president. The success of this bill will give a great deal of joy to many settlers in the Red River valley. At 10 o'clock p. m. the president signed the bill and it became a law.

Reed's Opinion of Congress.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—In a long interview of the work of congress published in The Press ex-Speaker Reed charges the Democratic party with extravagance and incompetency and says: "The Republican party expended $462,000,000 the first session of the Fifty-first congress and were roundly abused therefor. The lowest figures any Democrat can now make for his congress is $510,000,000. These figures are undisputed. The moral is undisputable.

CARTER'S VALEDICTORY.

The Retiring Land Commissioner Makes His Final Report.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Commissioner Carter's valedictory report of the operations of the land office for the past fiscal year has been made public. The commissioner says that under the repeal of the timber culture law, approved last year large numbers of cases, long suspended on the mere suspicion of fraud or under technical rulings, have been passed to patent and more than 300,000 additional entries have been considered and proper action taken. The total amount of agricultural patents issued from 1888 to 1891 is 398,128, covering 63,700,000 acres, substantially clearing the docket and leaving the office free to attend to current business. The number of mineral patents issued from 1888 to 1892 was 8,764, clearing the mineral and coal dockets. The acreage of public lands disposed of during the fiscal year was 1,571,000 acres. The miscellaneous tracts aggregated 11,696,000 acres and Indian lands 97,000 more than a year ago and a total in round figures of 13,664,000. There were patented for the benefit of railway companies under congressional grants during the past fiscal year 2,018,000 acres, as against an area patented entries during the previous fiscal year of 3,088,000 acres. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, an area of 408,000 acres was patented to several states under the survey land grant, but during the period covered by the report only 176,000 acres were patented, making a decrease of 232,000. The evils which attached to the system of surveys in former years, by which the government suffered greatly from fraud in deception practiced by filers has been mainly eliminated from the service. The commissioner says the office is in constant receipt of letters complaining bitterly of the burden that they are forced to bear because of the non-surveys of their land and consequent uncertainty of their locations. The area of the vacant public land in the United States is 587,[illegible] acres, of which [illegible] acres [illegible]

NELSON AND CLOUGH.

In presenting the names of Knute Nelson and David Clough for the suffrages of the people, the republican party has answered the demand of the people by selecting representative American citizens. Knute Nelson was born on a farm, where in early boyhood he worked hard to lay the foundation of a practical education, to which he added as fast as circumstances would permit, until the common school branches would no longer suffice, when he entered an academy, working his way through that unaided. When the tocsin of war sounded Knute offered his services to his country as a private and went forth to do his duty there as faithfully as he had ever done in private life. At the close of the war he returned to the peaceful pursuits of life and entered a law office and in due time hung out his shingle and entered upon a career of usefulness which has made him a conspicuous figure in public as well as private life. He served several terms in the Minnesota legislature, six years in the lower house in congress, at the end of which time, so well had he performed his duties that he could have been returned or could have gone to the United States senate had he consented, but he declined and returned to his law practice and his farm at Alexandria, whence he has now been called by the people to be their standard bearer in the present gubernatorial fight. Ever of a quiet, progressive, studious nature, he represents the true American citizen in the highest degree, and he has won the highest regard of all who know him.

David Clough, the republican candidate for Lieut-Governor, is a similar man in many respects. Born of poor parents he, too, was raised upon a farm and rose to his present independent position by sheer force of an indomitable will that has made him the man that he is. As a business man he has no superior in the state. Both of these men are living examples of what any poor boy can accomplish in America, and in their lives they furnish worthy examples for the youth of our state to pattern after. That they will be triumphantly elected and that the government in their hands will be wisely administered there can be no doubt.

THE ALLIANCE OUT OF POLITICS.

At a meeting of the alliance state central committee last week Gen. J. H. Baker refused to be a candidate for governor, and advised the alliance to put no ticket in the field this fall; but to maintain the Alliance as a non-partizan organization. He advised the members of the Alliance to cooperate with whatever party would best promote their interests, and said that while the Alliance was a non-partizan organization it was vastly more powerful than it has been as a political organization. In closing his letter Mr. Baker said:

The most unfortunate step taken by the People's party of Minnesota and sought to be enforced with relentless discipline was making the sub-treasury the only test of party loyalty. To this Procrustian bed must all its followers conform. A bold and reckless scheme, it has no home in the atmosphere of honest political economy. Above all, it is the special child of class legislation. Political charlatans offer it as wine at the banquet, to beget iridescent dreams of easy fortune. To-morrow it will be consigned to the lumber room of political trash. Its only function in Minnesota has been to drive men of conservative judgment out of the People's party. The utter abandonment of tariff reform of the People's party is the most shameless case of political cowardice in the history of the state. This was the political issue with the Alliance two years ago; to-day it is side-tracked for the sub-treasury, a substitution of the fox for the lion. These were plain and practical questions on which we could all have united. That we did not do so is no crime of ours. The responsibility lies with those who have perverted the Alliance into a partisan political machine dominated by "bosses," like the [illegible] of political parties. Our action was a revolt against such treason and a rebuke to such selfishness.

In accordance with Gen. Baker's suggestion the Alliance committee passed a resolution permitting each member to affiliate with whatever party he chose. The committee then settled all their accounts, and gave up their headquarters at the Merchants hotel, St. Paul, as their decision to retire from politics made a headquarters unnecessary. In retiring from the political field the Alliance has acted wisely and well. As a non-partizan organization the Alliance can accomplish more for the betterment of the condition of the farmer by using their influence upon the old parties, than they can by forming a third party.

HOW HE LOVES THE PEOPLE.

While Mr. Donnelly is becoming rich at the expense of his followers who raise campaign funds and also pay him $80 per night for his lectures it is amusing to read in some of his organs about his "sacrifices for the welfare of the people," his "great generosity," his "constant labors for the down-trodden and oppressed," and all such rot. People who take any stock in such nonsense should read the following, which is a sample of how Donnelly labors for the people:

ABERDEEN, S. D., Aug. 4.—The independents are not feeling very good over the recent visit of Ignatius Donnelly to Randell, this county. Donnelly worked his mouth for an hour or so, telling the farmers what poor creatures they were and how they were set upon and robbed by all other classes. When he took his seat, a brother arose and said the audience must immediately shell out the sum of $80—$60 for Mr. Donnelly's services and $20 for his expenses. After much grumbling, a good-sized roll was put together and Mr. Donnelly was paid off.

THE democratic state convention, which met at Minneapolis on the 3d inst., nominated the following ticket: Governor, D. W. Lawler; Lieutenant-Governor, H. H. Hawkins; Secretary of State, Peter Nelson; Treasurer, Joseph Leicht; Attorney-General, J. C. Nethaway; Supreme Court Judges, Wm. Mitchell, Daniel Buck and Thos. Canty. The head of the ticket, Mr. Daniel W. Lawler, is one of the brightest young attorneys of St. Paul, and will draw to his standard the young democracy of the Twin cities, but he cannot hope to get the suffrage of the masses. Mr. Nelson's record through four years of service during the war has endeared him in the hearts of the soldiers; his early struggles as a pioneer and farmer put him in touch with the yeomanry of the state, and his six years in congress and several terms in the state legislature gives him an experience which everybody must recognize as being invaluable to the office of chief executive of a great commonwealth. Against such a man as Mr. Nelson what hope can the democrats have for their young, untried, inexperienced candidate?

Warren Sheaf: The republican state convention nominated Knute Nelson for Governor, and by so doing it ratified the choice that had already been made by the people. His nomination was unanimous by acclamation. Every section of the state—north, south, east and west,—demanded Nelson. He is pre-eminently the people's candidate for this high office. They have called him from the peaceful retirement of his Alexandria farm to again merge in the turmoil of public life and to take charge of the affairs of the state. His party has called him to become its leader in the compaign that is now on. And Mr. Nelson is not an untried man. In every public office which he has held he has proven his ability, integrity and devotion to the true interests of the people. Knute Nelson is a striking example of what a poor boy can accomplish in a country, that, according to the people's party, "has been brought to the verge of material ruin," and where plutocracy rules the day, Knute Nelson, "the little Norwegian giant," will be the next governor of Minnesota.

THE Douglas County News, published at Alexandria, Minn., the home of Mr. Nelson, in commenting on the latter's nomination for governor on the republican ticket, says: "This is a fitting tribute to the ability and worth of our talented townsman, and shows the high esteem in which he is held by people in all parts of the state. To us, his neighbors, who have learned to know and esteem Mr. Nelson for his worth, his ability, his kindliness of heart, it is pleasing to see that he is so fully and justly appreciated in other parts of the state."

ACCORDING to Dun's Commercial Agency, sugar has fallen 35.8 per cent, coffee 24.3 per cent, and all necessaries an average of 18 per cent, since the McKinley bill.

GOVERNOR BURKE, of North Dakota, was almost unanimously nominated for governor on the Republican ticket. He has made a good executive, and it is only an act of justice to give him another term.

THE Thief River Falls Press is now enlarged to a 5-column quarto, and presents a clean face to its readers. Under the management of Mussey & Ware the Press will now take rank among the best weeklies of the state.

EDITOR STEVENS of the Warren Register announces himself an independent candidate for county attorney of Marshall county. He is a good lawyer, a public-spirited citizen, a fluent talker, and an honest man, and the people of Marshall county will make no mistake if they elect him.

Two Stories of Lucky Miners.

A few of the many stories that are told of miners' luck will enable the reader to understand how and why the heads of whole communities may be turned in mining regions. Jim Whitlatch, the discoverer of the Whitlatch-Union mine, near Helena, led a typical western miner's life. The mine in question is now owned in England and has produced $20,000,000 in gold. After Jim Whitlatch had sold the property for $1,500,000 he went to New York "to make as much money as Vanderbilt." He was a rare treat to Wall street, which fattened on him, and in one year let him go with only the clothes on his back. He returned to Montana, began "prospecting" again and discovered a mine for which he got $250,000. He went to Chicago to rival Mr. Potter Palmer in wealth and returned just as he did from New York—"flat strapped," as he would have expressed it. He made still another fortune and went to San Francisco, where he died a poor man.

Another Lewis and Clarke county mine—the Drum Lummon—provides another such story. It was discovered by an Irish immigrant named Thomas Cruse. Although he owned it, he could not get a sack of flour on credit. He sold it to an English syndicate for $1,500,000. But he remains one of the wealthy men of Helena.—Julian Ralph in Harper's.

How Opium Is Gathered.

It is a sort of garden cultivation, the poppy plants being grown in little squares or beds intersected by tiny water channels for irrigation wherever this is possible. The growth of the plants is carefully tended, and at length the time comes when they burst out into flower, and the fields look like a sheet of silver as the white petals of the flowers glisten in the morning dew.

These beautiful petals are the first produce of the crop, for the women and children of the cultivators' families come forth and pick them off one by one and carefully dry them, so that they may serve afterward as the covering of the manufactured cakes of opium. Then the poppies, with their bare capsule heads, remain standing in the open field until it is considered that they are ripe for lancing. The cultivators then come forth in the evening, and, with an implement not unlike the knives of a cupping instrument, they scarify the capsule on its sides with deep incisions, so that the juice may exude.

In the early morning the cultivators reappear with a scraping knife and their earthenware pots, and they scrape off the exuded juice and collect it in their pots. And this is crude opium.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Life Lost in War.

Dr. Engel, German statistician, gives the following as the approximate cost of the principal wars of the last thirty years: Crimean war, $2,000,000,000; Italian war of 1859, $300,000,000; Prusso-Danish war of 1864, $35,000,000; war of the rebellion—north, $5,100,000,000; south, $2,800,000,000; Prusso-Austrian war of 1866, $330,000,000, Russo-Turkish war, $125,000,000; South African wars, $8,770,000; African war, $12,250,000; Servo-Bulgarian, $176,000,000. All these wars were murderous in the extreme.

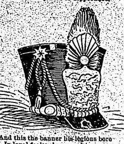
The Crimean war, in which few battles were fought, cost 750,000 lives, only 50,000 less than were killed or died of their wounds, north and south, during the war of the rebellion. These figures, it must be remembered, are German, and might not agree precisely with the American estimates. The Mexican and Chinese expeditions cost $200,000,000 and 65,000 lives. There were 250,000 killed and mortally wounded during the Russia-Turkey war, and 45,000 each in the Italian war of 1859 and the war between Prussia and Austria.—San Francisco Post.

Regarded It as a Real Body.

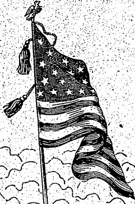
Two old country dames, whom we came across in the churchyard of an ancient country town, were curiously regarding a monumental stone, surmounted by the recumbent figure of a woman several sizes larger than life. "And so they brought the poor young woman here, and laid her a-top o' that there grave, did they?" [illegible]

THE FAMILY HATS.

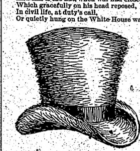
This is the hat the grandsire wore
On the bloody field of Tippecanoe;



And this the banner his legions bore
In loyal fealty, brave and true.

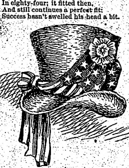


And this is the hat, when war had closed,
Which gracefully on his head reposed,
In civil life, at duty's call,
Or quietly hung on the White House wall.



This is the hat the grandson wore
From sixty-one to sixty-four,
Midst shot and shell
And rebel yell,
Till the cruel war was o'er.

And this, the hat that fell to Ben
In eighty-four; it fitted then,
And still continues a perfect fit;
Success hasn't swelled his head a bit.



'Tis the people's pride, and the people's will
Is—"Ben shall wear it four years still."

I believe it would be suicidal for the party to nominate Mr. Cleveland.—James W. Ridgway, District Attorney, County of Kings, New York.

A Limit to Election Frauds.

To concede the right of one party or faction to rule in the south by force and fraud means a concession of the same right to any other party or faction in other portions of the country. But the American people will not concede such a right. Thoughtful, intelligent citizens realize that the perpetuity of the government depends upon the freedom and equality of the people. While the nation may be able to stand the strain of election frauds to a limited extent, it could not survive the influence of this evil should it become widespread.—Hutchinson (Kan.) News.

Democrats Against the World's Fair.

The World's fair appropriation was defeated by the Democratic house and by the Democrats of the house. Not a Republican vote was recorded against it. What is the Democratic grudge against the World's fair? Is it thought that the great exhibition will show too much of the fruits of protection?—Wheeling Intelligencer.

Why They Like Steve.

SIX OF A KIND!

The Destruction of Protection the Sole Aim of the Democratic Party.

I.

[From the Confederate Constitution.]

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties and excise for revenue only, * * * but no duties or taxes on importations from foreign nations shall be laid to promote or foster any branch of industry.

II.

[Speech of Senator McDuffie, of South Carolina.]

In a free competition for the market of the United States the wages of manufacturing labor in the northern states must be reduced at least as low as the wages of labor in England. The natural price of the manufacturing labor of the northern states is precisely the same as the manufacturing labor of England, and not a cent more.

III.

[Speech of Congressman Lewis, of Alabama.]

The average price of farm labor in the southern states is not more than twenty-five cents a day; in the north, fifty cents a day. But for the operation of the tariff laws this state of things would have been reversed.

IV.

[Southern Confederate Committee to Lord John Russell.]

The principal cause which led the southern states to secede from the northern was not slavery, but the high prices which, for the sake of protection, the south was obliged to pay for manufactured goods.

V.

[John Quincy Adams' Report of House Committee on Manufactures.]

The interest of the south is identified with that of the foreign rival and competitor of the northern manufacturer, and against him and for his ruin the southern planter and British manufacturer are colleagued.

VI.

[Democratic National Platform, 1892.]

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the federal government has no constitutional power to enforce and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only.—New York Press.

Cleveland is the candidate of the mugwump assassins of the regular Democracy of New York.—Charles R. De Freest, Secretary Democratic State Committee, New York.

No Jingoism About Harrison.

The charge of jingoism which had been raised against President Harrison for his manly and determined protest against the unjust discrimination exercised by the Canadians against the United States on merchandise carried through the Canadian canals has fallen completely to the ground since the house of representatives has unanimously approved of the president's attitude. There appears to be little doubt that the Dominion officials will at once take steps to overthrow the objectionable discrimination, but if they do not do so the Canadian roads must suffer quite heavily on all east bound freight not billed to a United States destination.—Boston Advertiser.

The Democratic party cannot carry New York with Cleveland. I do not see how we Democrats can nominate him.—Richard Croker, Boss of Tammany Hall.

Not a Successful Method.

It cannot be said that the mass meeting method of notifying presidential candidates is a success. The concurrent testimony of all the newspaper accounts of the Madison square affair is that the speeches, with the exception of that of Mr. White, of California, whose lung power is tumultuous, were not heard by a hundred people out of the many thousands. It was simply a great unruly crush of people attracted by a free show, and it was neither instructive nor impressive. It is not likely that it will be repeated four years hence. The old plan is the best.—Baltimore American.

If Cleveland is nominated New York and the election are lost.—George L. Converse, ex-Congressman, Ohio.

An Elusive Rainbow.

The Democratic rainbow is shooting about in such a fashion this year that it had better be called an aurora borealis. First it hovers over Illinois, then over Kansas and next is heard from in Minnesota, Michigan or Wisconsin. The fact that it does not stay long in one place leads to the belief that not much confidence can be placed in its visits in any place.—Springfield (Ills.) State Journal.

Harrison's Fearless Conduct.

A weak or partisan president who was a candidate for re-election would seek to strengthen himself with the politicians by filling vacancies from their ranks. The fact that General Harrison has disregarded the politicians in making important appointments should commend him strongly to the plain people, who are interested in good government.—Buffalo Express.

And Republicans Have the Orators.

There has seldom been a campaign in which the mind of the "floating vote" was so bewildered and in which the influence of oratory can do so much in supplementing the efforts of the newspapers. It may yet turn out to be a very lively campaign.—Pueblo (Colo.) Chieftain.

They Can't Retract the Truth.

It is a significant fact that not one of the Democratic politicians who opposed Cleveland's nomination has yet retracted the least of the reasons given for believing that his election was impossible.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

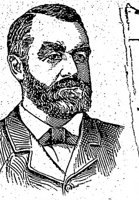
Two of a Kind.

Chairman Harrity's method of beheading Republican officials while postmaster of Philadelphia makes his selection to conduct "Headsman" Stevenson's campaign quite appropriate.—Philadelphia [illegible]

MICHIGAN'S NEXT GOVERNOR.

Hon. John T. Rich, Whom the Republicans Have Nominated.

John T. Rich will be the next governor of Michigan. He has been nominated by the Republicans, and as this is a presidential year and every Republican in Michigan, as elsewhere, will put his shoulder to the wheel and work for the success of the party Mr. Rich is all but elected already.



JOHN T. RICH.

Mr. Rich is a good, solid citizen. He is six feet in height and weighs 200 pounds. He was born in Conneautville, Crawford county, Pa., April 23, 1841. He was brought up on a farm which his father bought near Elba, Lapeer county, Mich., when the future governor was but five years of age. He has never known any other home up to the present day. He has served as school commissioner, member of the legislature, railroad commissioner, president of the State Fair association, state senator and member of congress, so that with all this preliminary training he is certain to make a good governor for the Wolverine State.

Cleveland was defeated by Harrison in New York in 1888, and the Democrats must put up some other candidate to run against Harrison this time if they hope to carry New York.—Colonel John R. Fellows, Congressman, New York.

Enticing but Vanishing Rainbows.

This plan of campaign is conspicuously lacking in novelty and brilliancy. It has been tried before, and it brought ridicule on its promoters and operators. It didn't win. On election day the r bows disappeared. Conditions are vitally different from those of four y ago. The rainbows are brighter more enticing, that's all. But they rainbows just the same. The north is not going into the Democratic col this year. This is a presidential c paign. Important issues are at st The people will vote on those issues w intelligence and circumspection. T will not be fooled into an indorsem of free trade.—Detroit Tribune.

I am going home to pray. If the Democrats nominate Cleveland they will not stand the ghost of a show.—A. J. Streeter, Illinois.

Michael Doran's Socks.

Come, gather 'round me, children, and a story
I will tell,
Of a distressing circumstance that to an Irishman befell;
His name was Michael Doran, and in Washington, D. C.,
He drove a bobtail horse car, and drove it skillfully.

Now Michael was a stalwart youth as ever you would meet,
But by a fate unfortunate he suffered from cold feet;
And as in driving bobtail horse cars you can't accumulate much rocks,
He asked his aged mother for to knit for him
some socks.

In far off Ballyshannon lived that aged mother
dear,
And of her son's predicament no sooner did she hear,
Than she straightway took her needle and worked by night and day,
And made for him a dozen pairs out of the best sheep's gray.

But how to get the socks to Mike, Mike's mother didn't know;
To be of use, of course, they must across the ocean go.
She worried until a cousin, a brave broth of a lad,
Said, "I'll go to Ameriky, an I'll take the socks, bedad."

True to his word, he crossed the brine a-carrying Mike's socks,
But in New York a customs man, as sharp as any fox,
He opened up the bundle and, seeing what was there,
He made the cousin settle for the tariff on each pair.

The cousin went to Washington and told his tale to Mike,
And when the driver heard it he straight for home did pike;
He wrote to Bill McKinley, and asked of him quite plain,
How he would have to go to work to get the tariff back again.

Then, like a politician, and in a manner far
From what would be expected in the driver of a car,
He didn't mail the letter, but he gave it to the press,
This screed to Bill McKinley a-calling for redress.

The Democrats they picked it up and cried a great hurrah,
And over Mike's foot covering they built a man of straw;
They yipped and yelled and shouted, in ones
and twos and flocks,
And made a campaign issue out of Mich
Doran's socks.

And that's the way this car driver achi
immortal fame;
That's how glory gathered 'round brave Mic
Doran's name;
He paid a righteous duty on his socks, a d
pair,
And then he squealed and seemed to think duty wasn't fair.

Of course on Mike the duty it seemed to co
quite rough,
But suppose a foreign maker had been sendi
[illegible]
If there hadn't been a duty and the socks
come in free,
Where would our own sockmakers in the glori ous U. S. be?

They'd have to cut down wages to compete with labor cheap,
And the fellows on the other side would all the profit reap;
So when you come to look at it, this fact the stuffing knocks
Out of the Democratic scare and Michael Do ran's socks.

STILL A CANDIDATE.

Hon. W. R. Merriam Expects to Succeed Senator C. K. Davis.

Gov. William R. Merriam is still a candidate for the United States Senate, says the Minneapolis Evening Journal.

"In spite of the fact that two Republican state conventions have indorsed Senator Davis for re-election; in spite of the fact that county after county has pledged itself to him in convention assembled, and in spite of the fact that Senator Davis seems to be in line for a substantial indorsement in the form of a re-election, Gov. Merriam is as active a candidate for Senator Davis' seat in the upper house of congress as he was three months ago. The governor himself seconded Bob Evans' motion pledging the May 5 convention to Davis, but that does not deter him from casting anchor to the windward, and aided by the machine wing of the party he will be the next senator from the state of Minnesota if finesse and good management can bring it about.

"The policy as mapped out in the Merriam camp is a simple one in its general plans and speculations, but is very complicated in its details. The idea is said to be this: Trade off the legislative ticket all over the state so that neither the Republicans or the Democrats will have a majority on joint ballot, thus giving the People's party, or the Alliance under the leadership of Donnelly, the balance of power. Davis will be voted for by the Republicans, Wilson, Doran or some other Democrat will be the choice of the Democrats, while Donnelly will be backed by the third party men in both houses. Then after ballot on ballot has been taken, each party presenting a united front to the enemy, and the choice of a United States senator is as apparently unsettled as ever, let Donnelly talk "compromise" and throw his strength to Merriam; the Republicans seeing that with the support of the People's party the Governor can be elected, will, it is hoped, rally to him, and Gov. Merriam will succeed Cush Davis in the United States senate.

"This is the plan of campaign as mapped out by one of the two shrewdest politicians in the state. It is not mere talk heard on street corners, it is not a surmise based on a chat with the first politician who rubs elbows with you in the corridor of the Merchants' hotel, but the fact that Gov. Merriam is still a senatorial possibility, and the further fact that he hopes to have his measure for a toga taken in the manner outlined above, are plain, unvarnished truths, which have been whispered about on the inside for the last two weeks.

"That Senator Davis is by no means sure that a certificate of election is already in his hand is evident, else he would not take so active a part in the coming Minnesota campaign as the telegraphic reports published from time to time in these columns from Washington would indicate. Senator Davis will stump the state for the Republican party in general, and himself in particular this fall, and, if reports are true, will pay especial attention to his fences in the country. He wants to show the people of what stuff Minnesota's senior senator is made, and at the same time get the lay of the land. It is figured out that the Republicans must elect 25 members of the lower house, besides carrying the legislative districts which were placed in the Republican column two years ago in order to have a majority on joint ballot.

"Gov. Merriam has a good many friends in the senate; in the first place there's Donnelly, who, if his actions in the past are any criterions as to the future, will prove himself a friend in need when the proper time comes. Then there's J. S. O'Brien, who, though a Democrat, is regarded as being more or less affiliated with the Merriam wing of the Republican party. It was never stated as a bald and convincing fact that the Governor played a part in the upsetting of Searle and the elevation of O'Brien to represent the Twenty-third legislative district in the senate for four years; but it was said that several close friends of his excellency had a hand in shaping the result of the Searle-O'Brien contest of two years ago. The fact that the deposed statesman was notoriously anti-Merriam may have had something to do with the rumors which were whispered about the legislative corridors after the elections committee had presented its report; but you cannot prevent politicians from talking and saying mean things—if thumbs are turned down on their favorites.

"Stick a pin here. Gov. William R. Merriam is still a candidate for the United States senate."

That may be all very true, and while we have no doubt that Gov. Merriam has senatorial aspirations we are inclined to the opinion that the Evening Journal is off in its diagnosis of the case. What's the matter with Merriam trying to succeed W. D. Washburn?

The 26th Annual Encampment.

The 26th annual National Encampment that begins on Tuesday, Sept. 20th, 1892, at Washington, D. C., will probably be one of the most important events of the kind that ever occurred. Aside from the interest to every old soldier naturally clustering around the place where it is to be held, is the fact that year by year fewer and fewer of the old boys are able to attend these reunions and the facilities offered the old comrades for meeting will be greater this year than ever before devised. In fact one of the most interesting events of the encampment will be the re-unions as mapped out by Captain John McElroy. The hospitality of Washington will engage a great deal of the veterans' attention, but the principal source of pleasure and the one dominant attraction that will draw them to this encampment will be that of again meeting those with whom they marched and fought, and when the old fellows do find each other there will be no separating them; the bond which unites veterans who have fought and bled together comes next to being the most enduring of all.

The scheme involves a classification of the entire Grand Army into thirty-two corps or sub-organizations, which will be one for each of the twenty-five infantry corps, one for the cavalry of the army of the Potomac, one for the cavalry of the military division of the Mississippi, one for the colored troops of the military division of the Mississippi, one for the artillery of the Army of the Potomac, one for the sailors and marines, one for the ex-prisoners of war, and one for the engineers.

CORPS HEADQUARTERS.

For each of these corps headquarters will be established, and in these several buildings rosters will be kept. As the men arrive in the city they will report at the headquarters of the corps to which they belonged, and their names will go down on the roster. Then there will be sub-divisions of each corps in charge of an active sub-committee, and just as soon as a man lets the officer in charge of corps headquarters know what command he belonged to he can be brought into immediate connection with some of those who were his intimate comrades during the war. All an inquiring veteran will need to do will be to find his corps headquarters and from that point he can easily locate any division, brigade or regiment.

The department commander for the state of Minnesota has issued his orders of which the following extract forms the most important part:

The rate for the round trip from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Washington is fixed by the railroads at $28. The official headquarters special train will leave Minneapolis and St. Paul at 8 p. m. on September 16th, and will run direct to Washington without change of cars. It will leave Chicago via the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad on Saturday, the 17th, at 10 a. m., arriving at Washington early in the afternoon of the 18th. Coaches and the Pullman tourist sleepers will form a select train. The transportation committee will issue the tickets, reserve sleeping car space and attend to all matters concurrent with railroad affairs.

If any comrade elected as delegate to the 26th national encampment will, from any reason, be prevented from attending, he should promptly notify these headquarters of the fact, so that the proper alternate may be notified. This is important, and only just and fair to the comrade who has been elected alternate.

The comrades had better leave their Saratoga trunks behind and bring only satchels which can be carried in the hand. The experience of prior encampments has taught us that heavier baggage stands a very good chance of being "found missing" when wanted.

These headquarters will be closed from Sept. 19th to Sept. 30th, during the attendance of the commander and his staff at the national encampment.

Want of Sleep

Caused by mental worry, misfortune, or by trying vainly to get a night's rest on some roughly built railroad, has sent thousands of people to the insane asylums, there to drag out a miserable existence. To avoid such a melancholy fate, select "The Burlington" when obliged to make a night's journey up or down the Mississippi Valley. The most luxurious of Pullman sleepers accompany all night trains on this line, and the elegance and comfort of their fixings never fail to secure sound sleep. But even in such cosy quarters slumber may be disturbed by a rough track, frequent stops and the irregular speed resulting from heavy grades. The smooth track, absence of grades and even running of "The Burlington" route guarantee the traveler unbroken repose. For tickets by this popular line, maps, timetables and other information, call on your local agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

W. J. Murphy came up from Minneapolis this week to look after the affairs of the Crookston Water-power and Light Co. He informs the JOURNAL that two train-loads of stone of thirty cars each will be used in the construction of the new building. One train has already arrived, and the mason work will be commenced to-day or to-morrow. Mr. Murphy says he finds that Crookston is growing exceedingly this summer. The improvements of the C. W. P. & L. Co. alone will crowd $100,000 pretty close.

The operas to be played at the Grand this week are "Amorita," "Sadi Pasha," "Three Black Cloaks," and "Fatinitza." "Amorita" to-night. Don't miss it.

On Sunday afternoon A. D. Morris and several others were down at the dam amusing themselves by throwing chips into the pond just above the dam to see Dunc's dog get them out again. This worked all right for a time until one chip got too near the dam before the dog got it and in his eagerness to secure the prize the dog got into the current and was carried over the dam. Great efforts were put forth to rescue the dog but without avail, for in a few moments the dog was caught in the undertow and carried under the apron, and that was the last the party saw of him, though they lingered about for an hour or more. On Tuesday afternoon as Albert Halvorson was fishing near the dam his attention was attracted by some movement under the apron and upon investigation he saw that there was a dog beneath it, and after considerable effort he managed to release the dog and the animal crawled out and went up to the store to surprise Dunc.—and to say that Dunc. was surprised does not half express his real feelings, as he had given the dog up for lost without a shadow of doubt. The dog, though rather tired looking, appears to be all right and better than a dozen dead ones.

Hail in Kittson County.

A destructive hail storm passed through Kittson and Marshall counties on the night of the 3d and swept before it thousands of acres of most promising grain. The storm came from the west. Over a thousand acres on the Dennis Ryan farm were demolished and plowing began on the field this morning. The storm passed through the southern part of Kittson county, along the line of the Great Northern Railway, south as far as Stephen, where it took an easterly direction, from which the damage is not known. As far as Stephen the path destroyed is from seven to eight miles wide. The loss to the two counties is very severe. The thermometer at this writing is 104, and great uneasiness is felt here.

How it Feels to Have a Lion Bite You.

Mr. Inverarity, a member of the Bombay bar, says: "So large an animal as a lion coming at full speed against you of course knocks you off your legs. The claws and teeth entering the flesh do not hurt so much as you would think. The only really painful part of the business is the squeeze given by the jaws on the bone. I felt none of the dreamy stupor Livingstone describes, but on the contrary felt as usual. I adopted the course of lying quite still, which I believe is the best thing one can do, as you are quite helpless with a heavy animal on you, and they are inclined to make grabs at everything that moves, and the fewer bites you can get off with the better.

"All the wounds are centers of inflammation and blood poisoning, and the more you get the less chance you have. The power of the lion's jaws may be inferred from the fact that the lioness that seized me, although it had a broken jaw, scored deep grooves in the barrels of my rifle with her teeth. Some claw wounds were mere scratches, which I attribute to the fact that they clutch at the surface of your coat, thinking it is all solid underneath, and so reach the flesh pretty late. In fact, my coat was torn in some places without any corresponding wound beneath.

"I never felt the slightest shock. Tigers and panthers, as a rule, immediately leave any one they seize in a charge, but this lioness, having left me, went a few yards to roar at my men, returned, and stood over me growling, and then bit my arm. I got no bite the first go off, as she was occupied in biting the rifle."—London Times.

Capt. P. J. Russell feels quite discouraged over the unanimous alacrity with which his company don't turn out to drill. If no more interest is manifested than has been recently the guns will be sent back whence they came.

Quite a number from Crookston attended the farmers' picnic at Maple Lake on Saturday last, and those whom we have interviewed do say that they had a very enjoyable time. Two cornet bands and Doc. Fish furnished chin music galore, while A. R. Holston, Arny Grundysen and a few loyal lights expounded the new gospel doctrines according to Jerry Simpson in a highly "protangible" manner.

Franklin Bassett and wife reached Crookston, direct from Japan, on Thursday evening of last week, en route for the home of Mr. Bassett's parents at Glyndon, and stopped in this city until Saturday evening to allow Mrs. B., who has been ill, a much needed opportunity to rest. Mr. Bassett has been in Japan as a missionary for four and one-half years, where he met the lady who is now his wife and about 18 months ago was married. He will rest at his father's home for a while, and then go to Chicago to enter upon a theological course.

Mr. Erwin is one of the level-headed farmers of Polk county and will make an excellent commissioner.

Judge Ira B. Mills was in the city between trains on Monday shaking hands with his many friends. The judge will be an independent candidate for the position that he has already held one term with so much credit to himself and the district, and we have no doubt that he will be elected, as the people cannot afford to turn off a tried and true public servant for an experiment. The office really should cut no figure in politics, and the best man offered should be elected. The people know Judge Mills and we expect to see him re-elected by a large majority.

The Verdict Unanimous.

It pleases the lawyer, and his client too, to have the verdict of the jury unanimous, for it is good for nothing unless all the "twelve men, good and true" join in it. A great jury, composed of the American travelling public, has rendered a unanimous verdict on "The Burlington Route" as a railroad, agreeing that its promises of fast time, sure connections, and first class accomodations are always carried out to the letter. This pleasant verdict has not been obtained without great pains taken to build the best kind of a road, equip it in an elegant manner, secure competent and polite employes, and run it in "A 1 style." Try buying tickets over "The Burlington Route" for your next journey, and you will belong to the "unanimous" ever after. For further information apply to your local ticket agent or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Railroad Arrangements for the Nationa Encampment, G. A. R.

For the National Encampment, G. A. R., at Washington in September next, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad offers an unexcelled service of through limited vestibuled express trains, with Pullman sleeping cars from Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Wheeling, Pittsburgh, and all principal intermediate stations to Washington. The Encampment will be the greatest event in Washington since the grand review of 1865.

No railroad in America is better equipped than the B. & O. to transport large volumes of passenger traffic with dispatch, safety and comfort. Its long experience in transporting crowds to inauguration ceremonies, Knights Templar conclaves, and similar gatherings on an extensive scale, will prove most valuable in carrying the thousands to the encampment.

The B. & O. is the shortest route to Washington from nearly all points east and west. Passengers from Chicago will have the option of travelling via Pittsburgh or via Grafton, both routes crossing the crest of the Alleghenies amid the most picturesque scenery in America. All B. & O. east-bound trains pass Harper's Ferry and traverse the historic valley of the Potomac, whose battle grounds are familiar to every veteran.

Visitors to Washington will be pleased to learn that the B. & O. will sell excursion tickets at greatly reduced rates from Washington to Maryland and Virginia battlefields during the encampment.

The Republican Club.

Although the campaign will not open in earnest for a month yet, the republicans of Crookston believe in being prepared for the fray, which promises to be more of a fight than the one-sided affair of two years ago. The first move in this direction was the reorganizing of the republican club last Saturday evening. McKinnon's hall was secured for the evening, the band was engaged, and Frank Nye of Minneapolis came up to address the meeting and help along the good work. Mr. Nye is one of the brightest attorneys of the Flour City, and his nomination for county attorney of Hennepin county, on the republican ticket is almost assured. He is a good orator as well as lawyer, and his work on the stump this fall will contribute no small amount to the success of the republican ticket.

The meeting was opened by Hon. Halvor Steenerson with a few impromtu remarks. He spoke of the different tickets in the field, or which would be in the field this fall, and the variety of candidates which the voter would have to choose from. But he was confident of the success of the republican party in this state as well as throughout the United States.

At the conclusion of his address he introduced Mr. Nye, who spoke for about an hour. He touched briefly upon the issues between the republican and democratic parties, and said it was the first time these two parties had stood squarely on this issue—protection or free trade. He read a list of important public measures passed by the republican party, which showed that the G. O. P. had done more for this country than all other parties combined. He criticised the present democratic congress—a body which had been elected on a platform of economy in national government, and whose expenses already far exceeded those of the previous congress. They had simply done nothing for the nation as a whole. Hundreds of local or private measures had been passed, but none of national importance.

He eulogized the republican gubernatorial candidate—Hon. Knute Nelson. He spoke of his early struggles as a Minnesota pioneer, and his services in the army, and hoped that no American would refuse to vote for him because of his nationality, for he was as true and loyal an American citizen as the best native born. Mr. Nye was listened to with close attention, and was frequently applauded.

After the speaking the republican club was organized by the re-election of Hugh Robertson as president and G. H. Palmer secretary. The club starts with about 150 members, but as the interest in the campaign awakens, the membership will rapidly increase.

Weather-Crop Bulletin.

The following is the weather-crop bulletin for the week ending Aug. 15, 1892, compiled by the Minnesota weather service, in connection with the U. S. department of agriculture:

The storm of August 12th and 13th, following those of the 6th and 8th, together with the hot weather, has made this a most disastrous week for our state. The area covered by the storm, which struck the western portion of Minnesota between Clay and Pipe Stone counties, extends eastward to Washington county, where the storm disappeared. To the north of this track the weather conditions have been beneficial to crops and harvesting and in the southeast beneficial to corn but temperature too high for wheat. Over the track of the storm the rainfall was from 1 to 4 inches.

The losses are variously estimated in different counties and in different parts of the same county. Clay county estimates loss between 100,000 and 200,000 bushels. Big Stone; the yield will be about two-thirds of last year. Grant; loss will be one-half crop. Douglas; about one-half crop expected. Stevens; crop will be two-thirds of last year. Swift; estimated yield eight bushels to the acre. Stearns; expect two-thirds crop. On light ground will go about 10 bushels to the acre. Kandiyohi; wheat on old land about two-thirds crop, on new land many fields nearly worthless. Hennepin; wheat will run 15 to 20 bushels to the acre. Yellow Medicine; it is impossible to give an accurate estimate of the damage done. In some limited localities the loss is total, in other places a part can be saved. The hail adjusters place the loss in the southeastern portion from 40 to 50 per cent. Lincoln; the county auditor, H. R. Keeler, estimates the damage done by storms of 8th and 12th at $200,000. Lyon; damage to crops 40 to 50 per cent. Renville; hundreds of acres will not yield a half crop. Before the storms the prospects were the best in years.

Increase of Bees by Dividing.

On the subject of increase by dividing Root tells us in Gleanings in Bee Culture, for the benefit of amateurs, that there is much danger in spreading brood. Many times we have cold nights and days, even after we think the weather is settled for warm. The result is the brood is killed and the colony is set back. As a general thing it is best for beginners to let nature take its own course. He says:

We prefer to divide in this way: Put the queen, one-third of the brood and two-thirds of the bees on the new stand. A large part of the bees, not used to the new stand, will return to the old one. The consequence will be that each stand will have about an equal division of bees. The new stand will have one-third the brood, but it has the queen, and therefore the power to go right on with brood rearing, while the old stand, with two-thirds of the brood, will have to wait until they can raise a queen; therefore they ought to have the more brood. We tried this plan of dividing last season and it worked very nicely. As a general thing we secured about an equal division of the bees, and both colonies would increase to about the same strength, both having equal advantage in the first place as near as we can make it.

The stupendous results of the steam engine may all be traced to the boy who sat watching the steam which came from the nose of the teakettle.

fists of his just made my sides crack with delight." He had more sense than they gave him credit for, said the seniors of the regiment after a while, and, barring an early experience, a cadet love affair that he was long ago well over, had never let himself go again—never until the Twelfth came to settle in this happy valley and Winifred Berrien returned from her eastern school. Then he went all of a sudden. Only one man did not see it; that was Berrien. Only one woman couldn't forgive his devotion, and she had no business interfering, being herself otherwise disposed of.

To his credit be it said, Brewster and the lady's husband were about the only men who appeared unaware of this autumnal infatuation. Nevertheless, in those numberless ways in which women can claim and secure the appearance, at least, of attention from men, the dame had managed to monopolize considerable of his spare time up to the week of Miss Berrien's coming, after which it was not he who rode to town, but she who drove out to the post and sent for him to come and talk to her as she leaned back in her stylish victoria and looked up at him from under her tinted lashes. She could have found it in her heart to strangle the lovely girl so darkly, richly beautiful, but her call upon "the ladies" had been returned when she was conspicuously absent from home, and opportunities for meeting were not afforded by the damsel's parents. There were girls at the post who were quick to see how "Antinous" had lost his heart; but these, those at least who were near enough to Winifred to dare allude to the matter at all, were content to archly quote the warning—

Change the name and not the letter.
Marry for worse and not for better.

There was one man with whom Brewster was at odds, a sentiment due to an old difference when both were younger and that was Rolfe. There was one man the gallant major especially liked and swore by, and that was Rolfe. These facts, added to the coincidence that the captain had never forgotten the hot words used by his second lieutenant long years before, made a combination most unfortunate for a fellow so much in love as was Carroll Brewster.

On this particular morning he had striven to hurry matters through on the court—to try three or four cases where the accused were only too ready to plead guilty and "throw themselves on the mercy," etc., and then adjourn on the specious plea of giving the judge advocate time to write up the proceedings. But the president of the tribunal had other views and held him. Brewster knew that Randolph and Hunt and Ridgeway, perhaps others, had taken advantage of the weather and no drill to slip over to Berrien's for a blithe morning hour with the girls. He could imagine that pretty parlor, with its pictures and piano, its attractive curtains and portieres, the group of bright, sweet faces, the animated chat, Winifred herself, in her dark, rich beauty, seated at the piano, with Ridgeway hanging over her, eager to turn the leaves, eager to do anything that might keep him at her side. Confound the fellow! he had money and a handsome old family homestead. What business had he roughing it in the cavalry, with no end of chances of getting his head knocked off, when his doting mother was so eager to have him come home, marry, settle down and take up the management of the property his father had left him two years before? Poor "Curly!" he could only gaze wistfully out across the dripping parade from his seat in the dark courtroom and watch the glinting of the firelight on the Berriens' parlor window. The major loved a broad fireplace and a hickory blaze, and here he had them to his heart's content for the first time in full twenty years of army wanderings. How must that firelight enhance the coziness and comfort of the scene within! How must it be flickering about the dark masses of her lustrous hair at this very moment! How——

"How do you vote, Brewster? Are your wits wool gathering?"

He pulled himself together as best he could, but that was a morning of torment.

And now to think that, after all, he could have no moment at her side this day! To think that Farquhar should have ordered them out for hours of pottering around at saddlebags, nosebags, side lines, lariats, picket pins and all that sort of truck! It was simply barbarous. He curbed his tongue as well as he knew how, for plainly he saw that his chums were mischievously exulting over him, but any one who knew Brewster could see his wrath and discomfiture. The announcement was made just before luncheon was over. The adjutant came bolting in with the order, and shutting his ears to the chorus of expletives.

"What time did you say boots and saddles would sound?" fiercely demanded Randolph.

"In a quarter of an hour; so you've no time to waste saying swear words or asking damn fool questions. And as for you, Curly, you're for guard tomorrow."

Brewster finished his cup of tea in an undignified gulp, quitting the table and the room in three strides. There was just time to scurry over to Berrien's and see her for five minutes before he had to jump back to his quarters and into riding boots, etc. Any pretext would answer—the dance tonight, for instance.

"Get my field rig ready at once and bring my horse up here in ten minutes," he called to his servant, slashed at his natty uniform with a whisk broom and bounded out of the door, only to encounter the man of all others he least cared to see coming in.

"Were you just going, Brewster? There is a matter I want very much to ask you about, and I thought this the time to catch you without fail." The voice was that of Captain Rolfe.

"I am just going out, captain, and I'm hurried, but if you will step in I'll be back in ten minutes."

"Well-l, ordinarily, I would not detain you, and-d, pardon me, if you were going to Major Berrien's, they are all at luncheon. I have just left there."

Brewster flushed in spite of his effort at control. His first impulse was to say he was going over anyhow, if only to leave word, but, since he could not hope to see her, what was the use? It chafed him, however, to note that Rolfe, in that calmly superior way of his, was pressing on into the hall, as much as to say, "it is my will that you give up what you have in view and attend at once to my behest," just as though Brewster were still his second lieutenant, instead of First Lieutenant Brewster, commanding the "Black Horse" troop. It must be confessed that there was about Rolfe an intangible something that ever seemed to give that impression to the juniors. It was one of the things that set their teeth on edge, as they expressed it, and set them against him. Feeling as he did toward the captain and exasperated at the way in which events seemed conspiring against him, Brewster threw open his door.

"Walk in, as I said, captain. Make yourself at home. I wish to go into Haddock's a moment, and will be right back." It wasn't that he had anything to say to Haddock, but Haddock had succeeded him as second lieutenant of Rolfe's troop, and was no fonder of his stern, self willed commander than Curly himself had been. It was simply that he would not yield a moral victory to Rolfe, and that in naming Haddock he knew he gave at least a slight return for the annoyance afforded him by the captain's untimely call.

Giving no sign whatever as Brewster sprang away down the steps the captain passed on into the plainly furnished sitting room. Already McCann was busy hauling out the lieutenant's field boots, breeches and overcoat, whisking off the dust and indulging in Milesian comment as he did so. At sight of Rolfe he abruptly ceased, bustled forward and offered the captain a chair, and a moment later bolted across the hall to perform similar services in overhauling and dusting Mr. Randolph's possessions.

Left to himself, Rolfe wearily turned to the mantel, and without show of interest glanced over the various photographs there displayed. They were mainly of army friends, young fellows in whom he felt slight interest at any time and none at all now. So were those in the basket on the round table. Brewster was popular, if one were to judge by the array of pictures that had been sent to him by their prototypes. Then there was a large, handsome album lying open on the desk near the window. Turning listlessly thither Rolfe gave a shrug of the shoulders, something almost like a shudder, at sight of the photograph which lay uppermost, a cabinet portrait, highly burnished and finished, of an exuberant woman in evening dress. In that neighborhood everybody knew her by sight. He himself had received invitations in her hand to lunch or to dinner. He knew the writing of the note that lay beside the album, first page uppermost. He would have had no eyes at all had he not seen the "Carroll, mon ami," with which it began. With a shiver of disgust he whirled over a page of the album, as though to cover and hide the beguiling face, the betraying words, and then Brewster came bounding back and in. Rolfe's hand was still on the album as he turned to face him.

The eyes of the two men met, and again Brewster flushed hotly. He remembered that only in the morning's mail had the large packet arrived containing this unasked for and unexpected addition to his portrait gallery. He had not opened it until after court—had not more than glanced at the photograph even then, beautiful as it was from an artistic point of view. Then that note, and that idiotic, semisentimental beginning! She had never called him Carroll, but in certain evasive, insinuating, in—well, we have no word for it in all the vocabulary of the United States—in a way he could not but see and could not find a way to object to, she had been lately verging in that direction. It was, "Now, Mr. Carroll Brewster," or "my good friend Carroll," or "Sir Carroll," or in some way Carroll; but here was an out and out Carroll, the first of the kind. A month before he might not have flinched; now he shrank from the mere idea of familiarity of the faintest kind. He had been striving to cut loose from her in every possible way, but hers was a friendship that "clung closer than a brother," and just as sure as shooting Rolfe must have seen that infernal picture, those misleading words. Brewster read it in Rolfe's calm brown eyes, but he would not discuss matters with him, much less stoop to explain.

"You wish to see me, captain. Will you take a seat?"

"No. What I have to ask need occupy but little time, and the call will sound in a moment or two. I am going to ask you a question, and as man to man I want you to answer it." He paused, as though awaiting submissive reply.

"And the question?" asked Brewster, finally and unyielding.

"I was in hopes you would assure me of a readiness to answer. Whatsoever have been the differences between us in the past, you can never accuse me of having pried into your affairs, and the question I wish to ask is one of deep importance to myself, and its answer cannot, I believe, unpleasantly involve you." And still Brewster stood silent, the blue eyes looking straight into the brown. "I will not prolong matters unnecessarily. What I desire to know, Mr. Brewster, is this: Have you or have you not some knowledge of the past history of Sergeant Ellis?"

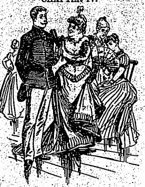
"Pardon me, Captain Rolfe, but I do not see how that can concern you in the least."

"I have stated substantially that it did," was the quiet reply, after a moment's thought. "It concerns me very deeply. I need to know something of his antecedents. I have reason to ask, and I repeat my question."

There was a painful pause. Then Brewster spoke firmly:

"Captain Rolfe, it is a question I refuse to answer."

CHAPTER IV.



"And now, Carroll, will you take me to the carriage?"

That night, despite the long hours in the saddle, the young officers had bidden their lady friends to an informal dance in the hoproom. It was just a week after Nita Guthrie's adventure, and already, except in the thoughts of two or three men, that strange affair was a thing of the past. People had settled down to an acceptance of her own explanation of the cause, not that it was entirely satisfactory, but because no other seemed plausible. Just why a girl should have been rendered nervous and upset because she had had a proposal, Mrs. Vance of course could not understand—"especially," said she, "a girl who was reputed to have had so many offers." It was laughingly remarked by various military benedicts that since the moment when Miss Guthrie's scream of terror had appalled the garrison the dames and damsels of their several households had shown an unwonted degree of timidity in visiting about the post after nightfall, and that much more than the traditional amount of hunting behind curtains and under bedsteads was now going on.

Berrien was especially jocular, and more than ever disposed to tell his cronies in her presence that Berengaria had said this or Berengaria had done that, the this or that being something more than usually absurd or improbable. But in the conversations held of late in the sanctity of Berengaria's boudoir the major had been anything but jocular. There was one incident of that evening that had caused him deep perplexity. He had never for a moment forgotten his wife's allusions to Winifred—Winifred, the apple of his eye. The possibility of her having lost her young heart to, or even having come to feel more than passing interest in, Carroll Brewster was something that troubled him far more than he cared to admit. Like many another father he had gone on fancying his daughter only a child—one to whom the idea of falling in love would not present itself for years to come, and then only on parental intimation that it was expected of her. Personally and officially he had nothing against Brewster. He liked him quite as well as he did any of the junior officers, and he liked most of them very much indeed. It was as soldierly, manly a lot of young fellows as one could ask to see, but in the close comradeship and intimacy of frontier life men get to know one another so thoroughly and so well that the foibles, weaknesses and waywardness of the animal are apt to be far more prominently mentioned in garrison chat than his sterling or lovable traits. Some men, it may be said, have to die before their virtues can be in the least appreciated.

More than once had the major closely interrogated his wife as to the reason of her statement. Had the young fellow dared to speak to Winifred without first asking his permission? Had Winifred dared to fall in love before—but no, that was impossible. "What makes you think she cares for him?" "How do you know?" "Why should she care for him anyhow?" were the impatient questions that rose to his lips. To one and all she had simply replied that she knew because she knew—woman's unanswerable reason. No, Winifred had not told her. They had never exchanged a word upon the subject. No, Mr. Brewster had not spoken, if by that was meant of love or marriage, for Winifred would have told her on the instant. But half a dozen other people had spoken. The whole garrison could see he was deeply in love with her. Every glance, word, gesture, act, told the story with unerring certainty. "Is there a day, is there an hour, when it is possible for him to see her, speak with her, that he is not by her side?" asked Mrs. Berrien. "You must realize it, major, and you must decide what should be done. She likes him well, that I know, for she is ever ready to dance with him or ride with him, and I can see how her eyes brighten and her color rises when his step or his voice is heard on the veranda."

"But, confound it, Bess!"—which was much nearer madam's proper name—"he hasn't anything but his pay."

Mrs. Berrien laughed softly.

"But, Richard, dear, even that detriment has occasionally been overlooked."

"Oh, of course. Exactly. I know. Neither had I. That is what you mean, I suppose. But things were different then."

"Granted again, Dick—very different; so much so that were things as they used to be I would be utterly opposed to her marrying in the army!"

This being just exactly the view the major had not taken, he could only stare at her in astonishment.

"Bess, what on earth do you mean?"

"Just what I say, Richard. I like what I've seen of Mr. Brewster very much, and I don't wonder Winnie fancies him. He is a gentleman; she is a fine soldier; he has a good record; he is well connected; his family is one of the best that you or I know; he has everything in point of fact to recommend him that you had, my liege, and he has none of your bad habits. You used to drink and smoke and play poker, and, Richard, sometimes you used to swear."

"Well, everybody did in those days."

"Exactly, and hardly anybody does today, except perhaps one hears a little odd language when the wind is blowing from the drill ground. But in other respects things are indeed different. You and your cronies sometimes talk about how slow and how indifferent young officers are now as compared with what they were twenty years ago. Dick, if the army were today what it was when I married you I would whisk Winnie out of this garrison and never let her venture inside another. But it isn't. In every possible way that a woman and a mother can see, it is vastly better, and you know it. I can conceive of worse fates for our daughter than that she should marry such a man as Mr. Brewster and into such a society as we have here today. You are eagerly looking forward to your promotion. Do you think being lieutenant colonel will compensate you for leaving such comrades and friends as you have in the Twelfth?"

"I'm hoping to exchange."

"You can't, Dick. Nobody will transfer with you who once gets into the Twelfth. And now as to Winifred. You always liked Mr. Brewster. You rather preferred him until lately. What has changed your view?"

"Nothing, except—why—why, Bess, you must have seen or heard, for one thing, this affair with Mrs. ——, you know."

"As utterly one sided an affair as ever was known," said Mrs. Berrien stoutly. "I believe I can see clear through it. I despise the woman. She has always made a dead set at some one of the officers stationed here, I am told. She was just as absurd about Mr. Martin, of the Eleventh—everybody says so in town—and she picked out Brewster because he was the handsomest of the new lot when our regiment came in. Ask any one you choose, and I think my view will hold good. Ask Captain Rolfe what he thinks, and he and Mr. Brewster are not on friendly terms."

"I have asked Rolfe; I asked him only this evening," replied Berrien, turning redder, "and he begged to be excused from expressing an opinion."

"Why?"

"Well, he wouldn't say, but he had seen something or other that we hadn't, and he doesn't like Brewster. I can't have a man making love to Winnie one minute and that kalsomined creature the next. I wish there were no dance tonight. I want to see Rolfe again. Who takes her?"

"Mr. Brewster, of course. He asked her two days ago, when the affair was first projected. He is in the parlor now, but so are all the others."

The major stepped over to the window and began thrumming with his pudgy fingers upon the pane. All the joviality and gladness seemed gone from his face. The lights were already beginning to twinkle in the quarters across the parade, and darkness, "wafted downward like a feather," was shutting out the long line of shadowy bluffs beyond the stream. Down stairs he could hear the sound of joyous chatter, the deep voices of the men mingling with the rippling, silvery laughter he knew and loved so well. How happy the child seemed! How she loved the regiment and gloried in his profession! How proud she was at school of the photographs he had from time to time sent of his brother officers, and how the other girls, her letters declared, envied her because she was a soldier's daughter and had lived on the wild frontier. He could hear the sound of other girlish voices, too, Winifred's friends from town, but he found that his ear listened only for hers. How blithe and musical and full of hope and gladness it seemed. How lovely she looked as she came down dressed for dinner just as he returned from that odd, constrained talk with Rolfe. Poor Rolfe! he was given over to the blue devils now, sure enough. He and Kenyon and "Pills," the doctor, formed a triumvirate of sympathetic souls, for since Jennie and "the kids" had gone Holden's life seemed to have fallen into the sear and yellow leaf.

Kenyon, as in duty bound, was making the circuit of the garrison returning calls just now, but Rolfe went nowhere except the doctor's. There he could be found almost every evening, for ever since Nita Guthrie's visit the walls of the old house seemed charmed to him. "Begad," said the major, "I'll slip over there tonight myself, while the rest of the folks are dancing. I want to see what it is he is holding back."

For the life of him he could not be repellant in manner to Brewster when he went down stairs. The three young fellows honored with invitations on this particular evening were Brewster, Randolph and Ridgeway. Brewster because he was to be Winifred's escort to the hop, the others because they had made the best of matters and invited the other girls, Ridgeway, be it known, not without inward exasperation. He fancied Miss Kitty Pennoyer as a substitute for Winifred Berrien about as much or as little as one is content with a back seat when he cannot have a box. But it kept him "in touch with the house," so to speak, and gave him opportunities at least of occasional word with the beautiful girl whom he so admired.

He knew he was no match for Brewster so far as physique or reputation was concerned, but then girls had been known to prefer patrimonial estate to personal charms, and he meant at least to try the effect of his solid qualifications as against those which made Brewster so attractive to the sex. He knew the major liked him well enough, and he thought he could count on the good offices of Mrs. Berrien, but he was not so sure about Winifred. When the jovial major appeared he was in readiness to pay his respects at once, and was cordially welcomed by that red

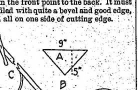
USEFUL GARDEN TOOL.

It Does Thorough Work and Cuts Off Every Weed, Large or Small.

In the cut is depicted a garden implement made and used by a New York correspondent, who describes his handiwork in The New England Homestead as follows:

For easy, fast and thorough work it is far ahead of anything I have seen. It leaves the ground perfectly smooth, and every weed, large or small, is cut off and left on top of the ground to wilt and wither, and not partly buried so that some of them can start to grow again. The cutting blade, A, was made of a piece of crosscut saw, and by making just right will not clog. It is nine inches wide on the back edge and five inches from the front point to the back. It must be filed with quite a bevel and good edge, and all on one side of cutting edge.



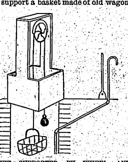
A CULTIVATOR THAT IS DEATH TO WEEDS.

When putting it on the cultivator be sure and set the bevel edge up so it will hold to the ground; also get the cutter so that it will run perfectly level in the ground. You will find you will have the easiest working tool and the worst enemy to weeds you ever dreamed of. The cultivator is adjusted by turning the thumb bolt, B, and can be made to cut deep or shallow, as the wheel arms work on a hinge or bolt a little ahead of the thumb bolt. To adjust the handle to suit people of certain heights and to make the cutter run level there is a slot in the brace at C which will allow the handle to be raised or lowered and also keep the cutter running level.

Keeping Butter in the Well.

Many of the wells throughout the country have been supplied with a pump and the bucket discarded.

The Philadelphia Farm Journal suggests that instead of planking over the well the pipe may enter the ground and slope beyond the curb, where the pump may be placed, and the wheel and weight may support a basket made of old wagon tire. In this may be placed butter and other things that must be kept cool, including the milk from a small dairy. The balance weight must be placed on the rope so that neither it nor the basket will enter the water. This plan is a suggestive one, and will no doubt be improved upon by some of our more ingenious readers in the way of a cold box with a lid and shelves in place of the basket. The plan, however, just as it stands, is valuable, inasmuch as readers who are not especially ingenious may avail themselves of it. This or a similar device is essential on farms not provided with icehouses.



BASKET SUPPORTED BY WHEEL AND WEIGHT.

Chicken Gapes and Dysentery.

To cure the gapes Prairie Farmer advises: "Strip a small quill feather to within half an inch of the end. Dip the end in spirits of turpentine and insert into the windpipe at the base of the tongue. Turn it around once or twice and withdraw. Repeat again next day if relief is not obtained. Feed on soft food well mixed with black pepper, and give skim milk to drink. Keep the fowls in a dry place."

For the dysentery that follows up neglected diarrhea in chicks, a correspondent in the New York World says: "In dysentery the evacuations are colored with blood. Give three drops of laudanum in water every three hours, and a teaspoonful of strong cinnamon tea every hour in place of water. Feed only rice boiled in milk."

How to Break a Sitting Hen.

An old and experienced breeder tells that his plan of curing hens of the desire to set is neither to coop them up nor starve nor duck them in a water butt, nor place them in a coop with a sparred bottom. What he does, and he finds it an unfailing remedy, is to transfer the broody hen to another pen, with a different lord and master. In a short time the desire to set leaves her and she goes on laying within a week or ten days. By adopting this plan he has been saved the nuisance of broody hens.

In the Pigpen.

One may judge of the character of the coming litter to a great extent by the appearance and character of the dam, according to a recent writer. If she is over fat, sluggish and indisposed, the pigs will generally be small and puny, and possess little vitality, and the chances are a large per cent. will die in infancy. Sows that rear less than six pigs out of each litter on an average are unprofitable breeders, and should be [illegible]

THE IDEAL FARM WAGON.

It Is Low, with Open Sides, and May Be Cheaply Built.

Some time ago The Rural New Yorker said: "The wagon of the future must be low down and open at the sides." This hint being in harmony with the ideas of one of The Rural's readers, he proceeded to work it out, and sent the following illustrated description of the outcome to the journal that had suggested it. Here is the picture, about which the originator says:

A WAGON THAT COMMENDS ITSELF.

The front wheels are three feet two inches, the rear four feet high. The axles are of 2-inch round steel bent to right angle cranks at the wheels. The cranks are eight inches and are held in horizontal position by spiral springs adjustably connected with the wagon body, front of wheels, allowing the body to be lowered eight inches, the length of the cranks.

The wagon body rests directly on the axle close to the cranks on boxes in which the axle rolls in response to tension placed on the springs by the load or draft. The sides of the body are fully strengthened against lateral pressure by the fenders, which also furnish additional width, increasing the capacity of the box or body. Truss rods prevent the sagging of the center of the body. The side openings are closed by boards cut to fit and secured in place by springs. To remove the boards, press the springs and raise them.

You will see many advantages at a glance. The spiral springs are very light, carry the load very steadily and act as spring whiffletrees in starting a load. The cranks are perfect equalizers, as when one wheel meets an obstruction the spring at the opposite wheel shares the resistance. The wagon, though light (900 pounds), has carried over 200 loads of from 2,000 to 8,000 pounds. No bolster or reach is needed. It may be cheaply built, and it is certainly a pleasure to use it, for when loaded it is only eighteen inches from the ground. It is wholly of my own construction except the wheels. The woodwork I made and put together during leisure hours, and I also made the patterns for the irons, which a blacksmith made and put together under my supervision.

Degeneration of the Potato.

Except with those who desire to originate new varieties, the potato is propagated from the tubers, and with some sorts this is kept up so continuously it is sometimes said that if favorable conditions of culture and soil were always offered a variety will not run out from natural degeneracy. Whether this be true theoretically or not, experience has shown that under the common methods of culture and selection of seed which have been practiced by farmers, varieties that were once the best known and most valued have degenerated or run out to such an extent that their names are scarcely ever mentioned.

Among some of these old timers may be named the Nashannock and the Long John, the first not surpassed for general excellence nor the latter for great productiveness and long keeping qualities by any of our newer sorts. Later came the Peachblow, to bear the palm for a few years and then retire into comparative obscurity. No better evidence of habitual degeneration in the potato can be adduced than the fact that our prevailing types are seedlings of more modern origin. Another characteristic of the potato plant deserving of mention and difficult to account for is the scarcity of bloom and seed balls in most of the new varieties as compared with those of fifty years ago.

The Asparagus Bed.

"For tidiness in the garden we cut over the asparagus in November and burn the tops, and then spread a liberal dressing of rotted manure over the beds and fork it in enough to cover it," says William Falconer in The Rural New Yorker. He adds: "In the fall the stumps of the 'grass' cannot be pulled out, but in early spring they can be pulled up with very little effort and raked off, and perhaps this is the best way to do in what is simply a family patch, be it in field or garden. But where asparagus is grown as a market crop, as it is in this (Oyster Bay) township, the farmers usually leave the tops alone over winter and in early spring rake them off with a horse rake and burn them up. The rake clears them off the ground perfectly; they part from the crowns readily and without leaving any stumps. The objection to leaving the stumps in the ground is the nuisance they prove to be when cutting the young grass."

Bee Notes.

E. R. Root tells in Bee Gleanings that pure lead, zinc and French ocher, in equal parts, mixed with raw linseed oil, make the ideal paint. All these substances combine perfectly and form a smooth, hard, durable surface of light straw color that will neither peel, crack nor rub off. It is so nearly white that it is not an objectionable color for beehives.

The idea is now advanced that there is a connection between hard winters and good honey seasons.

A beekeeper recommends candy pails as the best and cheapest thing for extracted honey. When the honey granulates they can be shipped anywhere.

A Canadian apiarist is of opinion that bees wear out and die more quickly in windy weather or in windy localities than where the air is still. Hence the importance of [illegible]

WORKING INTERESTS.

THE FALSE ASSUMPTION OF CLEVELAND AND HIS PARTY.

The Laboring People Dress Better, Live More Comfortably and Have More Money in This Country Than Anywhere Else—The Democratic "Remedy."

Mr. Cleveland and his party choose to assume that protection has not increased the earnings of working people nor helped them in any way. Nothing could be further from the truth. Wages are higher here than in any other country, and employment is constant and under the easiest conditions. There is no other land where working people live as comfortably, dress as well, have as much money in savings banks and get on more rapidly than they do in America. The protective system is largely responsible for these results, since it has multiplied industries, maintained a high level of wages in the face of competition from cheap labor countries and employed the toiling masses here instead of favoring the underpaid industrial population of Europe. The assumption that the tariff has not benefited working people is an English theory, and is not grounded upon American statistics or practical experience. But let that go. We want to take Mr. Cleveland and his party on their own ground. They say that protection has increased the burdens of the workingman until he can hardly pay his weekly expenses with his earnings. What remedy have they to propose for what they consider intolerable evils? How do they intend to aid the working masses?

Their remedy is a tariff for revenue only—one that will not protect even incidentally the labor employed in home industries. They propose to help the working masses by placing them on a level with European labor. Industries which are now protected from foreign competition are to be left to shift for themselves and to take their chances. That means that many factories in every manufacturing center will be closed and men and women employed in them thrown out of work, and also that in all that are kept in operation wages will be heavily reduced. That is the Democratic plan for relieving the "misery" of the best paid working population on the face of the earth. They will have less work and will earn smaller wages. Those are the benefits to be conferred upon the working population by the adoption of an English tariff in America.

"Yes, but that is not all," will be the Democratic reply. "The cost of living will be reduced under a tariff for revenue." How can that be? All the main food supplies are either produced in this country or are already imported without payment of duty. Neither bread nor meat, neither sugar, coffee nor tea will be cheaper in consequence of a revenue tariff. Neither municipal taxes nor house rents will be reduced under free trade. Food and shelter will cost as much as now, and these are the main expenses of the workingman. As for clothing, it was never as cheap in America as it is today. "Yes," breaks in the enthusiastic tariff reformer, "but it can and will be cheaper under free trade, when foreign cottons and woolens are imported without restriction." We are not prepared to admit that. Nothing seems plainer to us than a rise in the price of woolens and cottons, if under the operations of free trade American production of these manufactures is largely checked. But let that point be waived. For argument's sake let it be granted that under a revenue tariff the workingman may save half a dollar on his coat. What will that amount to if his wages are cut down one-third or one-half, or if he is thrown out of employment altogether? It will not matter very much to a man that a coat will cost a little less if he cannot afford to buy one at any price.

All this Democratic clamor about high prices of clothing and the cost of living is empty claptrap. The supreme interests of the working millions of America are employment and good wages. Under protection they have both. Under a revenue tariff they will have neither, for there must be less employment and lower wages here if foreign industries with cheap labor behind them are placed on even terms with home industries.—New York Tribune.

You can't elect Cleveland.—De Lancey Nicoll, District Attorney, County of New York.

The Facts in the Case.

The Republican party believes in honest elections, but it is not true that the success of that party means a "force bill." The truth is that only a small minority of the party favors any legislation relating to elections. When this matter was before the Fifty-first congress the most influential Republican newspapers in the country opposed what the Democrats call the force bill, and there are very few Republicans now who are in favor of such legislation.—Omaha Bee.

What the "Force Bill" Is.

People who are at a loss to understand what is meant by the "force bill," about which Democratic organs are raving so ferociously, should read up the proceedings of congresses some years ago. A bill was introduced once to compel honest elections in the south and was killed by a Republican senate. This was the "force bill."—Kansas City Journal.

Very Different in November.

The Democrats certainly gave their candidates a magnificent ovation in New York. It was a deserved tribute, and was paid in a manner which left nothing to be desired. It will be very different in November, however.—Easton (Pa.) Free Press.

AS WILL be seen by the call in this column, the Polk county republican convention is called to meet Wednesday, September 21st, to place in nomination candidates for the various county offices, and also to elect delegates to the republican legislative convention. If the republicans will put good men in the field—men who are in touch with the people—they will be pleasantly surprised at the result of the election.

THE MOORHEAD News says that since Clapp has declined Mr. Comstock does not seem inclined to accept a nomination, and the News urges the convention to select some able man for the position and then turn in and elect him. We do not concur in the idea that almost any good man can win, but we have the opinion that it requires our very best material to make a winning fight this trip. It will not do to put up a man simply for expediency—he must have ample capacity to back him.

IT IS comical, to say the least, to read in our democratic exchanges that "Knute Nelson is the tool of monopolists!" A man who was born of poor parents, who struggled hard in early life to obtain an education and who has had hundreds of opportunities to have made thousands of dollars out of these same monopolists of whom we read, but who, to his credit be it said, is a comparatively poor man to-day, a man whose entire sympathy is with the poorer class and whose efforts in public life have been largely used in their behalf—and this is the man of whom our friends, the enemy, say, "he is a tool of monopolists."

In a speech at East St. Louis on September 25th, 1888, Roger Q. Mills, the great apostle of free trade, says:

"If Grover Cleveland is re-elected President of the United States we will pass a tariff bill that puts raw materials all on the free list; and then we will put our own intelligent and skillful and productive labor in this country upon a plane of equality with the laborers of all other countries."

"Skillful and productive laborers" in this country should study the following comparative wage scale between England and the United States and see how they like the idea of electing Cleveland, for the privilege of being put on an equality:

DAILY COMPARATIVE WAGE SCALE.

England.		United States.
$0 88	Laborers	$1 71
1 02	Carpenters	2 75
1 03	Cabinet Makers	2 41
1 60	Blacksmiths	2 10
1 50	Mechanics	2 71
1 65	Iron Molders	2 65
1 48	Painters	2 42
1 70	Plumbers	2 88
$11 46	Total	$10 50

Nearly $2 to $1 in favor of the American laborer.

Chicago Tribune:—What did the Alliance Representative of the Fifth Minnesota district, Kittel Halvorson, mean by his extraordinary conduct in antagonizing the World's Fair from the very beginning and recording himself as the only man in his delegation willing to vote against the appropriation? Why should this man, representing a state which is solidly in favor of a great National Fair and which will be splendidly represented in its exhibits, deliberately vote against the wishes and interests of certainly the great mass of its people? Why should a man who fought in the Union army to the close of the war array himself with the Southern Brigadiers and Tammany members who fought and plotted against the Union cause? The people of the Fifth district of Minnesota should sit down on this man's unworthy ambition to misrepresent them any longer in Congress. The Scandinavians, who are good friends of the Fair, should tell him that they have no further use for his treacherous, unpatriotic services.

The Chicago Tribune should know that the people of the Fifth district have nothing to do with "sitting on" Kittel, as the district that Kittel is supposed to represent is now the Sixth and Seventh. Moreover, the people of the Sixth district have no opportunity to "sit down on" him, as he refused to be re-nominated for Congress—the most sensible thing he has done yet, so far as we can see. Oh, no! Kittel is not in it this heat. He is on the People's party State ticket for Lieut.-Gov., but not on it very heavy.

This Does Settle It.

The following letter from Attorney-General Clapp to Capt. H. W. Donaldson, chairman of the seventh district committee, just received, settles the question of Clapp's candidacy:

ST. PAUL, Aug. 12, 1892.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson, Hallock, Minn.:

MY DEAR SIR:—When you called upon me with other gentlemen from the Seventh Congressional district in regard to the nomination for congress, I promised to write you at as early a date as possible.

I find it impossible to accept the nomination. Had the suggestion been made earlier it might have been acted upon, but realizing that I would not again be a candidate for the office of attorney general, and believing that this would, at least for the present, take me out of official service, I entered into business engagements with the understanding that after the first of next January all of my time was to be devoted to the work which I have engaged to do, and it is impossible to be relieved from my engagement, except at the sacrifice of good faith on my part.

I appreciate the many obligations I am under to the Republicans of what is now the seventh congressional district, and had it been possible to do so, I would have accepted the nomination providing the convention tendered it; but for the reasons above stated, it is impossible to do so at this time.

In thus declining to be a candidate I trust you and my friends in the district will not feel that I am wanting either in gratitude for favors shown in the past, nor in appreciation of the high compliment paid me at this time. When the campaign opens I will gladly take part in it and from present appearances it would seem as though an earnest effort would insure the election of whoever is honored with the nomination.

I am, very respectfully, yours,
MOSES E. CLAPP.

The Amendments.

On the proposed amendments to the State constitution, the Pioneer Press says:

It is not too early to call public attention to the amendments to the state constitution which are to be voted upon this fall. Personal and party issues so far predominate in a presidential year that large but non-partisan questions like this may, unless some one takes the trouble to give them full and intelligent discussion, be passed upon unwisely and without sufficient information. Then, too, the people of Minnesota will be called upon this year to do something more than ratify the will of a party committee with respect to these amendments. Before the Australian system of voting went into effect when the preparation of ballots was left in the hands of the party [illegible] had the winning power, practically [illegible] any constitutional amendment in which the public was not intensely interested simply by adding the word "yes" or "no" as the case might be to the regular party ticket. Nine-tenths of the voters cast their tickets as printed, without taking thought to trouble themselves by inquiring what amendments they were voting for or against. But now both affirmative and negative words will follow the proposed amendments on the state ballots, and one of them must be scratched out in order that a ballot may count. The people must decide; and, although there are but two amendments to come before them this year, both of them are of a high order of importance.

The first of them has been under some discussion already, since it will do away with special legislation for cities and substitute a general law therefor. But its scope is far wider than that. It is aimed not only against this kind of special legislation, but against many others. And as probably not one voter in a thousand is familiar with its terms we reproduce it here:

In all cases when a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted; and whether a general law could have been made applicable in any case is hereby made a judicial question, and as such shall be judicially determined without any legislative assertion on that question. The legislature shall pass no local or special law regulating the affairs of, or incorporating, erecting or changing the lines of any county, city, village, township, ward or school district, or creating the offices, or prescribing the powers or duties of the officers of, or fixing or relating to the compensation, salary or fees of the same, or the mode of election or appointment thereto; authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, vacating or maintaining roads, highways, streets or alleys; remitting fines, penalties or forfeitures; regulating the powers, duties and practice of justices of the peace, magistrates and constables; changing the names of persons, places, lakes or rivers; for opening or conducting of elections, or fixing or changing the places of voting; authorizing the legitimation of children; changing the law of descent or succession; conferring rights upon minors; declaring any named person of age; giving effect to informal or invalid bills or deeds, or affecting the estates of minors or persons under disability; locating or changing county seats; regulating the management of public schools, the building or repairing of school houses, and the raising of money for such purposes; exempting property from taxation, or regulating the rate of interest on money; creating corporations, or amending, renewing, extending or explaining the charters thereof; granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive privilege, or franchise whatever, or authorizing public taxation for a private purpose. Providing, however, that the inhibitations of local or special laws in this section shall not be construed to prevent the passage of general laws on any of the subjects enumerated.

The legislature may repeal any existing special or local laws, but shall not amend, extend or modify any of the same.

This needs little explanation and no argument to commend it to the voter. It will cut off at one blow most of the special and local bills that have consumed so large a portion of the time of our legislatures, and become an almost intolerable nuisance where the time allotted to legislation is but ninety days biennially. It will also remove the opportunity of three-fourths of the abuses to which legislation is subject, since these nearly all creep in through the medium of special bills. A single measure could scarcely contain a larger or more comprehensive reform than that contemplated by the amendment given above, which should be and probably will be adopted by a nearly or quite unanimous vote by the people of the state. There is no party and no interest in a community which does not suffer from special legislation, and which will not profit by having it prohibited as it has been in many of the older states.

The next amendment is still less generally understood, and will be the subject of more controversy, as it has already supplied a text for misrepresentation. It runs as follows:

And there may be levied and collected annually a tax upon the gross earnings in this state of all railroads, sleeping, parlor and drawing room car companies, or owners, whose cars run in or into this state; on all telegraph and telephone companies, or owners, whose lines are in or extend into this state; on all express companies, or owners, doing business in this state; on all foreign insurance companies doing business in this state; on all domestic insurance companies of this state, or on either or any of such companies. Or in lieu of such tax on the gross earnings of such companies, or either or any of them, an annual license fee or tax imposed on them, or either or any of them; but no tax upon the gross earnings of any corporation shall be construed to prevent the taxation by law, of any real estate owned by said corporation not used in the business of the same. And there may be levied and collected, in lieu of other taxation on mining property, a specific tax on the product of all mines in this state, but no such tax shall be construed to prevent the taxation by law of any real estate belonging to the owners of [illegible]

[illegible] ion or even public knowledge is as yet in any settled state concerning this amendment as a whole. The general principle of it is thoroughly approved by the experience and practice of this state in the matter of railroad taxation. The taxation of gross earnings has been found the only satisfactory method of securing from railroad companies their proper contribution to the public burdens, and it is well settled that no change should be made. This tax has been collected, however, by common consent, and the constitutionality of taxing corporations on their gross earnings has been under review by the supreme court of the United States. A series of decisions by that body go to show that a state may employ this method in dealing even with companies a part of whose business is interstate; and it seems very desirable that there should be a warrant, in the constitution of the state itself, for reaching those other corporations enumerated which now escape their due proportion of taxation. The only doubt that arises is in connection with the clause permitting the taxation of gross earnings of mines. And, inasmuch as this does not exempt any real estate which is not actually in use for mining purposes, as it will bear upon any mining company in proportion to its output and its earnings, we see no reflection upon its substantial fairness. It is true that the capital of these companies—on paper—runs well into the millions; but an attempt to tax that at its face would be futile and absurd. The amendment tends to systematize and consolidate state taxes according to a principle universally recognized as just and practical. Both amendments should be accepted by the people.

Peterson's magazine for September is a star number from beginning to end. It is beautifully and copiously illustrated and the literary portion cannot be too highly praised. "Miss Calline," by Robert C. V. Meyers, is a story that would of itself make a reputation for this rapidly rising young author. "Mr. Englehardt's Nephew," by William Bilbo, and "A Summer Fallow," by Lois Pease, are a couple of tales as unlike as they are good. "Under the Rose," by Miss Kent, is the first instalment of a novelet which promises to be admirable. "The Court of Montenegro," "Home Decoration," "A Sea Change," and "Neath Orchard Boughs" are all illustrated in a way which makes the different stories, articles and poems very attractive, and each and all deserve high praise. The fashion and household departments are thoroughly practical; for these Peterson has always been noticeable. In its literary features the magazine has during the past few years been "forging ahead" rapidly. It ranks among its contributors numbers of the best and most popular authors of the day. It is evident that the literary and artistic element is becoming more and more important in the publishers' eyes. We predict that it will not be long before Peterson will develop into a purely literary periodical, and it will be certain to prove a first-clas one. Terms, two dollars a year; $1.00 for six months. Address, Peterson's Magazine, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Pretty Surprise.

A beautifully illustrated and charmingly bound edition of Longfellow's "Evangeline," the most popular long poem ever published by an American author, and one of the most famous poems in the language, just published, is a pretty surprise for book-lovers. It is in large type, numerous and excellent illustrations, very fine and heavy paper, gilt edges, remarkably handsome cloth binding, with gilt title and ornaments. No illustrated edition has ever before been published at less cost than $1.50, and that is what you might "guess" the price of this to be, but it isn't—it sells for only 19 cents, plus 6 cents for postage, if by mail. This covers only about the actual cost of manufacture by the 100,000, the publisher's object being, not profit, but to show the book-loving millions what he can do. His publications are not sold by dealers, but only direct; catalogue, over 100 pages, a literary curiosity in its way, is sent for a 2-cent stamp. Every home in the land ought to have a copy of this Evangeline, so charmingly beautiful, as a poem, as a collection of artistic illustrations, and as a product of the book-making art. Address, John B. Alden, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

CLEVELAND'S BLUNDERING.

His Managers' Sole Hope Is to Limit, Not to Stop It.

Candidate Cleveland's proneness to blunder seems to be incurable. He blundered into free trade at the close of his administration with all the fervor of a new convert who had just read up the elementary principles of political economy. He has learned something about the subject during the past five years, and is blunderingly at work trying to reconcile his previous crudity with his later information. To prevent his blundering altogether is impossible; to limit it has been the sole hope of his managers.

But since they have taken away his stationery and confined him to oral utterances which leave no record his ingenuity in this direction seems to have been sharpened beyond the hopes of his enemies.

In his speech at the Madison Square garden he blundered into his party's tariff plank and practically called its framers a parcel of Tories for declaring that congress had no constitutional right to pass revenue laws, and that set his managers at their wits' ends to straighten out the situation. Now, according to the correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, he has been blundering again. It seems that he has been talking about the prospects of his party in a manner that exhibits his doubt of its success. "Whether the candidate feels that he is to be betrayed in New York, or whether he has some idea that the current is steadily setting in favor of the Republicans, especially in view of the country's prosperity, cannot be ascertained, but it is certain that the candidate is very doubtful about the result."

Mr. Cleveland's doubts prove that he is not hopelessly bereft of reason. Has he enough left to shut himself up, mouth and all, at Buzzard's Bay till Nov. 8? He cannot win, but he may escape the reputation of a blab.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

If you do not give us the candidate of our choice, or one equally well qualified, you will be disappointed with the result in New York.—Roswell P. Flower, Governor of the State of New York.

Democracy's Raw Recruits.

From the immigrants of least worth and most numerous class the Democratic party obtains at every election its raw recruits to its voting force. Ignorant, vicious, illiterate, unable to read or write, incompetent to comprehend the genius of Republican institutions, they never adapt themselves to the requirements of American citizenship and continue as pests to the community. They are mere voting machines and their votes are in derogation of the public good. They enable Tammany to retain its vicious control in New York and to be the chief factor in the rule of the state, a constant menace to the administration of the general government.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Cleveland cannot carry New York, and anybody who says to the contrary is actuated by prejudiced motives—Frank Rice, Secretary of State, New York.

Ignorant Would Be Tariff Tinkers.

As for any systematic revision of the McKinley law, it has not been attempted. The Democratic party is not capable of the work. Mr. Cleveland is as incompetent to draw a tariff reform bill as he was six years ago, when he confessed he did not know a thing about it. The house has not dared to touch the great sugar question. There is talk about war tax. Is free sugar war taxed? Mr. Springer has figured out that free sugar is very costly. Well, does he propose to impose a tax? No Democrat has answered the question what he cares to do with sugar. Mr. Cleveland has not done it.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Personally I am not inclined to the belief that Cleveland can carry the state of New York.—George W. Plunkitt, State Senator, New York.

Cleveland's Friends Surprised.

The attitude of ex-President Cleveland in fully indorsing the Chicago free trade platform has surprised his Democratic friends in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and New England. They were led to believe that he would straddle this question as the convention committee on resolutions had done. His bold announcement of indorsement of that particular plank is very gratifying to the southern and western Democrats who are for absolute free trade, but the eastern Democrats, many of whom believe in protection, are nonplussed.—Burlington Free Press.

Two "Civil Service Reformers."

Stevenson and Harrity are a precious pair. They are spoilsmen of the extremest rank. Stevenson was the axman under Cleveland's administration, and Harrity as postmaster of Philadelphia was rebuked by the civil service commission for his flagrant violation of the civil service reform law. It was becoming at the notification meeting that no reference was made to civil service reform.—Syracuse Journal.

What Congress Has Done.

When the present congress adjourns it will not require an appallingly long dispatch to tell what it has done. The most important object it has accomplished has been to ruin the Democratic chances of success in the pending presidential contest.—Denver Sun.

Jefferson, the Funmaker.

Joe Jefferson declares that "Cleveland is the greatest man in this country," which goes to show that the distinguished comedian knows how to get himself laughed at off the stage as well as on it. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Cleveland's British Admirers.

It will please his admiring British constituency to learn from Mr. Cleveland's brief letter that he stands squarely upon the free trade platform upon which he has been placed.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE TARIFF IS NOT A TAX.

[Air—"Benny Havens, O."]

The Free Trade, Bourbon parrot cry, "The tariff is a tax,"
Cannot be made to tally with the cold and frozen facts.
Our everyday experience is, things never were so low,
As since the Grand Old Party made the tariff all the go—
Made the tariff all the go, made the tariff all the go,
As since the Grand Old Party made the tariff all the go.

It may be well for England, late "mistress the seas,"
To fight for pauper labor—a political diseas
But Uncle Sam's dominions, now, are not proper place
To flaunt this British doctrine in the Yank workman's face.

Our wage earning boys well know that Bou bon Free Trade means
Conditions here precisely same as foreig daily scenes.
They know that competition with redundan Europe's hordes
Would drag our workmen to the plane of that controlled by lords.

The thirsty Bourbons never were so hungry and so lean;
The equal of their fight for "pap" has never yet been seen;
But Cockran, Sickles, Flower, Hill—all say "Grove" cannot win,
'Tis useless for the boys to part with any of their tin.

Our Yankee nation, though yet young, the bottle has put by.
As one among the nations grand her mission is to try
To elevate her masses all—make men and women free,
Through well paid Labor, Tariff, Schools and Reciprocity.

The Free Trade disciple who lives on Buzzard's bay
Cannot again be president, the tariff boys all say;
And they mean "biz," you better bet, they're in the proper mood,
To send him up Salt river to "innocuous desuetude."

Our Benny is the boy they want, the boy they mean to have,
His term has been a great success, wise, firm, and true and brave;
The business men and laborers, too, will, we are sure, "stand pat"
For Harrison, Protection and our old Gran father's Hat—
Our old Grandfather's Hat, our old Gran father's Hat,
For Harrison, Protection and our old Grand father's Hat.

—Buffalo Express.

Secretary of the National Committee.

L. E. M'COMAS.

The man who has been appointed to the important and responsible post of secretary of the Republican national committee is ex-Congressman Louis E. McComas, of Maryland. Mr. McComas is forty-six years of age and is noted for his affability of manner, as well as what might be called his great "approachability." These are two qualities difficult to find combined in one man, yet they are essential to the best work a position like that to which Mr. McC mas has been appointed. Mr. McComas is an able man and his selection as secretary of the national committee augurs well for the success of the Republican party.

Democrats of Ohio feel that the ex-president cannot carry New York, and to nominate him means inevitable defeat.—Ex-Governor Campbell, Ohio.

Cleveland Criticising His Platform.

Mr. Cleveland's public suggestion that it isn't necessary to base Democratic attacks on the protective tariff "upon questions of constitutional permission or legislative power" is in the nature of criticism on the action of this year's Democratic national convention, which did that very thing. It is also an indication that he has been advised by the members of his campaign cabinet, one or two of whom are pretty good lawyers, that in affirming the unconstitutionality of all protective tariffs the Democratic party has put its foot in it even deeper than usual.—Hartford Courant.

Cleveland and British Interests.

Yes, the issue is clearly expressed in this campaign and cannot be dodged. It is Cleveland and destruction to American industries. It is Cleveland and the promotion of British interests! The man who spends time to ask Cleveland the issue, or what he thinks of protection, or what kind of a tariff he would favor if elected, is four years behind the times and has not sense enough to constitute an intelligent American citizen.—Oswego (N. Y.) Times.

He'll Weep More in November.

There was a weeping time when Calvin S. Brice stepped down from the leadership of the Democratic national committee. The dispatches say he retired "in a flood of tears, loosed by the many kind words said about him." This is only an inkling of the time when there will be weeping and wailing by the full chorus early in November next.—Toledo Commercial.

Harrison's Excellent Appointments.

President Harrison has appointed more good, able men to judicial positions than any president in the country's history. On this point the entire nati is agreed.—Baltimore American.

'Possum Tactics Won't Work.

The Democrats seem to be giving New York, but the Republicans a guarding against 'possum tactics in th state just the same.—St. Louis Glob Democrat.

Why Harrity Declines to Resign.

"Well, that would be a rarity
If I resigned," says Harrity,
"And so I'm going to stick awhile, you bet;

"For on a casual glance
Grover seems to have no chance,
And nothing better out of him I'll get.

"A tip I'll give you straight:
Better never hesitate,
Be sure the bird in hand you safely hold;

"Let nothing get away,
For there may come a day

WITH OUR EXCHANGES.

The Fertile Journal says:—This has been a lively week in Fertile. Farmers from all over the eastern part of the county have been in to secure a supply of binding twine. There has also been a large number of machines hauled away.—Mrs. Taune, of Crookston, is visiting at Norman Hanson's this week.—T. H. Nesseth and Mrs. Henderson were united in marriage by Rev. Oefstedal at the home of the bride's parents, in this town last Saturday afternoon. They will make Fertile their home.

And this from the McIntosh Times: —T. Oen, the watch repairer, who plied his trade in this city for a while not long since, is now quite seriously ill, and was sent to the county hospital last week.—J. P. Foote, the enterprising president of the Citizens bank, has been in the city since Saturday looking over the ground with a view to making improvements that will add materially to the efficiency and stability of the bank.—Jack McLaren, superintendent of construction for the Red River Valley Elevator Co., was in the city Saturday making arrangements to re-build the company's house at this point, a portion of the lumber for which is now on the ground.—A hail storm of no mean proportions passed over this section last Wednesday night and did considerable damage to the crops in some sections. The damage was not general, however, and though some of the grain was cut to the ground the most of it was but slightly damaged and the general crop prospect is still good. The northwest portion of the town of Lessor and a small tract in the immediate vicinity of Fosston suffered the greatest loss. Had the hail been accompanied by wind the loss would have been immense.

The Warren Register says:—Dr. Chapin, of Euclid, was in the city between trains on Thursday of last week, accompanied by his brother, B. Chapin, who made arrangements to take up his residence in Warren soon, and to open a barber shop in the old McCrea store building on the west side, now owned by Eric Franson.—Mr. Aaker, the receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston, came to Warren on Sunday morning, and took a trip into the country during the day. We are indebted to him for a pleasant call on Monday. He returned to Crookston Monday evening.

And the Argyle Banner tells us that:—Miss Fronie Kirsch and her little brother Ralph, of Crookston, are visiting their relatives here.—Frank R. Hamel and family, of Crookston, are visiting their many friends in town this week.—Arcade Lizie, of Crookston, is now the landlord of the Merchants hotel at this place, having rented the house from Mr. Lafferrier. Mr. Lizie has many years of experience in conducting hotels, and will no doubt please his guests.—Johnny Lindquist, at one time the leading dry goods clerk of Olson & Holen, was in town this week shaking hands with friends. Father Time is dealing kindly with Johnny and he is already bearing the fruits of a useful man. Since leaving Argyle he has seen much of the world, having visited the principal places of interest in continental Europe, and returned to this country much improved in health and enriched with experience. He is now located at Crookston and bids fair to enjoy a prosperous future.

Thus saith the Grand Forks Daily Herald:—Four or five of the boys went to Crookston Sunday to see their girls. They rode their wheels over but the exertion was so great that they returned on the train.—Miss Edna O'Keefe gave a party Tuesday evening in honor of Miss Mary Montague, of Crookston, who has been her guest for a few days. Miss Montague returned home last night.

The Fosston Thirteen Towns remarks:—Felix Fournet, of Crookston, was in town yesterday on business. He says that his elegant new block in that city will soon be ready for occupancy.—Miss Inez McGrew left for her home in Crookston on Tuesday after having enjoyed a pleasant visit with friends, and they are sorry that she could not remain longer.—The blueberry crop is not turning out as prodigious as expected, consequently our Indian friends have turned their attention to digging snake root, there being more profit in it.—W. A. Hammond, of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, was in town yesterday and this office is indebted to him for a pleasant call. If any of the business men have occasion to have any dealings with Mr. Hammond they will find that he will hew to the line.—A. D. Stephens, wife and son arrived in the city from Crookston by carriage about 11:30 Wednesday night. Andy declares that he knew the road all the time, and came in over the north road just to let Mrs. Stephens see the beautiful wheat fields by moonlight, but Mrs. Stephens says that Andy acts awfully funny at times, and as one of his spells seemed to be coming over him she took him home on the train yesterday.

That lively and spicy paper, the Thief River Falls Press, tells us that: "A. C. Schmidt, one of Crookston's best citizens and most influential democrats, spent a few days in the city this week.—At their last meeting the school board engaged Mr. Will Marin, of Crookston as principal and Miss Helen Wallin as asistant. It was decided to erect an addition to the east school house and new seats and blackboards were ordered.—As we go to press we learn that Frank Redberg met with an accident in Wright's saw mill which may yet prove quite serious. He was adjusting some blocking under the frame of one of the circular saws when he leaned forward just enough for his head to come in contact with the running saw. He suffers an ugly gash in the top of his head four inches long. The depth and severity of the wound we have been unable to learn owing to the lateness of the hour. Dr. Grundy was called and thinks his patient will come out all right.

The new school house is enclosed and is rapidly being pushed to completion. It will be a neat structure and contain four large schoolrooms.

Ingolf Haslund, who has been cashier of the bank of Fosston since its organization, resigned his position on account of ill health, and left last Thursday for Norway, where he hoped to recuperate and return again to this country. He was taken worse at Minneapolis and died there on Monday morning.

The Lutheran Synod has made a proposition to our citizens to establish a college here if the village will contribute $10,000 to the enterprise. It is fully expected the required amount will be raised. A. D. Stephens, with his usual liberality, heads the list with a contribution of $2,000. The Synod guarantees to start the college with not less than 150 pupils. It is estimated that the college will bring $40,000 a year to the village, which is a substantial advantage, besides the prestige which the college would give the place of its location.

At a meeting of the directors of the Bank of Fosston on August 11 Lewis Lohn was unanimously elected cashier. Mr. Lohn is a prominent business man, an old-timer here, shrewd, energetic and reliable, and will assist the handsome and popular vice-president, A. Kaiser, to look after the interests of the bank hereafter.

Two of our popular townsmen, J. E. Campbell and Samuel Sutor, have purchased the Commercial hotel here and are fitting it up in first-class style. The house is being thoroughly renovated from top to bottom, new furniture, carpets, etc., are being put in, the table has been vastly improved, and under the management of Campbell and Sutor the Commercial will be first-class in every respect.

When completed the residence which Daye Roy is building will be one of the handsomest in the village.

Stephenson & Ekeland's new store will be ready for occupancy in about three weeks.

The frame of the Lutheran church has been erected, and the building will be completed before fall.

Will Morvold is filling the place in the Bank of Fosston made vacant by the resignation of cashier Haslund, until the new cashier, Lewis Lohn, can arrange his affairs to take charge, which will be about Sept. 1st.

Judge Montague, of Crookston, came up Tuesday to get Fosston's donation of $100 to the World's Fair. He got it.

An agricultural society has been organized by our citizens which will be known as the Thirteen Towns Fair Association, and October 5th, 6th and 7th has been fixed as the time for holding the Fair this fall. The following officers have been elected: O. L. Larson, president, P. M. Mark, first vice-president; I. I. Hillestad, second vice-president; Lewis Lohn, treasurer; W. H. Averill, secretary; O. L. Larson, S. N. Sorensen, P. M. Mark, W. J. Hilligoss, Lewis Lohn, I. I. Hillested, W. H. Averill, E. J. Masters and J. E. Campbell, directors. The capital stock is placed at 500 shares of $10.00 each, and already 150 shares have been sold, and work will commence on the grounds and buildings immediately.

Hillested & Lade will be the name of the new firm to succeed Lewis Lohn in the hardware business. They will move into the building now occupied by Stephenson & Ekeland when the latter firm remove to their new building.

Special Correspondence.

This village has voted $4,000 for a school building and a committee has been appointed to secure a site and arrange for the construction of a building this fall.

Ole Bjorgo, our enterprising druggist, is erecting a neat one-story business house, which he will occupy as a drug store.

When completed, Dr. McEachran will have the finest store building in McIntosh. The lower floor has been rented to a Grand Forks gentleman, who will put in a stock of dry goods. The upstairs will be fitted up for offices, some of which the doctor will occupy himself.

Landlord West has had an addition put to his hotel, and now has one of the largest and airiest dining rooms to be found outside the cities.

Through the kindness of Editor Lanman of the Times your correspondent enjoyed a drive through the country north of McIntosh last week. The country for 15 miles in that direction is almost one solid grain field. The grain will average as good as last year, and harvesting has commenced in places. P. O. Mandt has as fine a half section of wheat and oats as a farmer could wish to own.

The State Fair.

OFFICE
MINNESOTA AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY,
HAMLINE, MINNESOTA.

At the close of the summer meeting of the Twin City Jockey Club, which has been in progress at the state fair grounds for some weeks, the State Agricultural society will commence the work of preparation for the thirty-fourth annual fair, which occurs Sept. 5 to 10.

As shown at the races, the new grand stand is a model of beauty and comfort and the track and its surroundings have been materially improved and are now in excellent condition. Liberal purses have been offered by the association for the various races, and they should be thoroughly enjoyed by the large number of visitors who will no doubt attend the fair.

The fair buildings have all been completely refurnished, and are now in condition for the reception of a great variety of exhibits.

The grounds themselves possess great natural beauty, innumerable shade trees having been set out, and a plentiful supply of cold, clear water will enable the tired and dusty multitude to slake its thirst during the gathering at the fair. Pretty fountains and many-shaped flower beds break the expanse of velvety lawn, and well made roads lead to the various points of interest. The transportation facilities this year will be the very finest. Several of the leading roads will run their trains right into the fair grounds, and the city railway company has built a track directly to the entrance, and will put on a large number of additional cars.

The association has been most liberal in the matter of providing entertainment for the edification of the people who come to Hamline, and it is safe to say that no one will go home without having at least enjoyed himself and learned something. Probably the most sensational performance to be seen during the fair will be the curious skycycle managed by Prof. Carl Myers, the æronaut, of New York state. In this vehicle Prof. Myers will mount into the air and in the presence of the astonished multitude will go through many performances which, to say the least, are remarkable. He will sail about the grounds at will and will be assisted by his pretty wife, Carlotta, who makes a decidedly attractive assistant and adds not a little to the entertainment. The program is varied, but the skycycle will be seen each afternoon, and the fair managers say it is unlike any of the so-called balloon ascensions which never ascend.

A number of interesting races, including trotting, running and pacing, have been arranged for each day, and the generous purses will assure the entrance of the best horses in the state. The bicyclists have not been overlooked, and on Saturday, Sept. 10, the last day of the fair, there will be five races open to amateurs of the state. Immediately before the races there will be a parade of gaily decorated wheels, and there are prizes offered for the prettiest "bikes." Handsome medals are hung up for the events, and Colle Bell, the champion bicyclist of the state, has the races in charge. There will be a larger and more diversified exhibit in the main building than ever before, and judging from the entries, the live stock department will be completely filled with horses, cattle, sheep and swine, to say nothing about poultry. The machinery display is being prepared, and visitors will be shown the most approved styles of all the modern farm implements. The farmers' institute will be a leading feature, and tents will be provided for the accomodation of farmers who desire to stay at the grounds during the fair.

STRIKERS LAWLESS

LEHIGH SWITCHMEN AT BUFFALO CAUSE MUCH DAMAGE.

A Number of Cars Burned, Trains Derailed and "Scabs" Assaulted—The Situation Hourly Growing Worse, and No Telling Where It Will End.

BUFFALO, Aug. 14.—The second day of the strike of railroad switchmen was marked with several acts of lawlessness. At 1:45 a. m. somebody—supposed to be the striking switchmen—started three fires simultaneously in different parts of the Lehigh Valley freight yards at East Buffalo. It was a well planned and well executed plot, as the fires were started where the cars were the thickest, no hydrants from which water could be obtained and at a time when the yards were deserted. Eighteen freight cars loaded with merchandise and two passenger coaches, together with the office building, were completely destroyed.

A train of fifteen coal cars which was standing on a coal trestle was started down the incline and crashed into an engine at the bottom, wrecking it and a water crane. Four freight trains on the Lehigh Valley have been derailed in the yards during the night. Eight cars were also wrecked on the Erie. The fire attracted a large number of railroad men to the scene, but there has been no other outbreak up to this hour.

The excitement caused by the night's fires and wreck had nearly calmed down when it was renewed by the boarding of the Lehigh train. As the train stopped a number of men got aboard and drove off over a carload of men. The supposed scabs ran or were driven away. Several were hurt and removed to the hospital. When the incomers were scattered the strikers allowed the train to go on its way.

During the afternoon a train of perishable goods on the Buffalo and Southwestern division of the Erie was boarded by men between Seneca street and the Western New York and Pennsylvania crossing, stalling the train. It was over an hour before the train could be moved into the yards. The violence of the strikers reached its farthest point during the evening, when an attempt was made to throw a train loaded with passengers into the ditch within the yards of the Chekowago. Since late in the afternoon all passenger trains were obliged to make the run from Lancaster to this city over the eastern track, owing to the blockade by the loaded freight trains which had been brought to a standstill by the strikers and left disabled on the track. About 9 o'clock the Hornellsville accommodation train reached the William Street station, into which it was to be backed up to and taken west to make the remainder of the run into the city. Before the train could be brought to a stop, however, and while still moving at a rate of two or three miles per hour, the switch directly opposite the telegraph office was thrown back and the train was sent crashing over the tracks and sideways. The engine stuck to the track but the baggage car was thrown diagonally across the space between the main track and the side track into which the switch opened. The first coach was away over to the side of the baggage car and partly on the side track. The last three coaches did not leave the track and after a delay of half an hour they were backed on to the west bound track and brought into the city. The excitement over the wrecking of the train had not died down when the strikers had a new sensation ready. At about 10 o'clock a fire was started among the cars standing on the Lehigh Valley tracks, just outside the city limits. After the destruction of about twentyfive cars the flames were subdued. The whole police reserve has been ordered on duty and the situation is hourly growing worse.

WORK OF MINERS.

Several Hundred More Convicts Driven from Tennessee Mines.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 15.—The East Tennessee miners are again seeking vengeance. About 8 a. m. 800 men, mostly armed, marched into Inman, a little mining town in Sequatchie valley. The mob of vengeance seekers went to the coal mines and captured the seventeen guards, marched them to the stockades and put them under guard. The 272 convicts who were at work were then taken to Victoria, a little village near by, packed in box cars and started to Nashville. Governor Buchanan, on hearing of the affair, telegraphed the sheriff of Marion county to summon a posse and prevent the burning of stockades. If further trouble ensues the governor says he will order the militia. Trouble is expected at other mines and the whole of East Tennessee is in a state of excitement. All is quiet at Tracy City.

A mob of miners returned to the stockades during the afternoon and with axes destroyed one side of the barricade and all the buildings. When they left a sheriff's posse took charge and will probably prevent further damage.

TROOPS TAKE A HAND.

Two Regiments of Militia Called Out to Preserve Order at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Aug. 15.—The first battalion of the Sixty-fifth regiment left at 1 a. m. for the Cheektowega freight yards. They will be followed in the morning by the second battalion and both battalions of the Seventy-fourth regiment.

A Guest of Hibernians.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., Aug. 15.—General Stevenson was the guest of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in their celebration here. The picnic was held at the grounds of the Bloomington Fair association.

IN THE DEAD HAND.

They tell the tale unsmiling,
Old men, their hours beguiling
As they can:
Each annual November
They sadden who remember
Inkermann.

Yet of that field one story
Shines through the gloom and glory
Of the fight:
Over the cannons' roaring
There sings a lark song soaring
Out of sight.

Aloof, where men lay bleeding,
In fatal pain whose pleading
Made no cry,
Shot pierced and saber smitten,
A young and gallant Briton
Crept to die.

At sunset there they found him
With the red snow around him,
And his hand
Laid on the Book whose healing
All hearts to heaven appealing
Understand.

And 'neath his frozen fingers
Those words whose hope outlingers
Human strife
Glowed like a star's reflection—
"I am the Resurrection
And the Life."

Comrades to burial bore him,
But not death's rending tore him
From his prize,
For to his hand caressing
Still clung the leaf whose blessing
Closed his eyes.

O Christian song supernal,
Words sweetest love eternal
Ever said!
Peace at your call comes flying,
And they who clasp you dying
Are not dead.

—Theron Brown in Youth's Companion.

Great Expectations.

Mother—My daughter, you should decide in favor of one of your admirers or you may lose both.

Daughter—Pa, I can't make up my mind which to accept, Henry or George.

"Then I am to understand that you love them both?"

"Yes, I love them both most devotedly."

"Which of them has the largest income?"

"Henry has seventy-five dollars a month and George has fifty dollars."

"Then I don't see why you hesitate. Accept Henry, of course, and tell George to go about his business."

"Yes, but George has great prospects."

"Humbug! Prospects don't count. Everybody has got great prospects, and twenty-five dollars a month is very handsome interest on such a capital as 'great prospects.' Next time George calls tell him that you can never be more than a sister to him, and get rid of him."—Texas Siftings.

Why Boiled Water Freezes Easily.

Water which is hot of course cannot freeze until it has parted with its heat: but water that has been boiled will, other things being equal, freeze sooner than water which has not been boiled. A slight disturbance of water disposes it to freeze more rapidly, and this is the cause which accelerates the freezing of boiled water. The water that has been boiled has lost the air naturally contained in it, which on exposure to the atmosphere it begins again to attract and absorb. During this process of absorption a motion is necessarily produced among its particles, slight certainly and imperceptible, yet probably sufficient to accelerate its congelation. In unboiled water this disturbance does not exist; indeed water when kept perfectly still can be reduced several degrees below the freezing point without its becoming ice.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Mothers' Ways.

Mrs. Spoots (looking out of the window)—Goodness! Here comes that horrid Mrs. Waggles and all her children. What shall I do?

Aunt Totsie—I know! Johnny, as soon as they get seated you say you don't feel well, do you hear?

Johnny (two minutes later)—I feel awful sick.

Aunt Totsie—Oh, let me see your throat. Mercy on us! I hope you aren't going to have diphtheria.

Mrs. Waggles—I hope not! Come, children! We only dropped in for a moment.—Philadelphia Times.

Italians Eat a Great Deal of Flour.

The Italian peasant probably consumes more flour than the peasant of any other European country, because the manufacture of flower into various forms of macaroni is common in all the poorer Italian households. Italians are peculiarly ingenious also in their treatment of dough, which they make into many curious and appetizing forms.—Yankee Blade.

The English Army on Parade and in Battle

It is stated that when the English army is on dress parade, you can tell to which corps a man belongs from the badge upon the lapel of his coat; but when the army goes into the fight, the lapel is turned over and all distinctions are gone.

A new arrangement for the detection of fire damp consists in pumping the air into a testing room and testing it with a Bunsen burner. If the air contains a dangerous quantity of fire damp it ignites, and, moving a valve, sounds a gong of warning.

THREE DESIGNATIONS

HEBREW, ISRAELITE, JEW; THEIR MEANING AND THEIR USE.

The Etymology and Historical Significance of the Names Applied to the Descendents of Abraham—A Rabbi's Explanation That Is Interesting.

It is not an unfrequent occurrence that I am asked which of the three appellations given to our people, Hebrew, Israelite or Jew, be the more correct or acceptable. I have no doubt that one or the other among you have had similar questions to answer, nor that you experienced some difficulty in shaping your reply. In books, periodicals and daily papers, in public meetings and private conversations, these words are used either indiscriminately or with an apparent doubt as to whether or not one or the other would be preferable, or perhaps objectionable. In order to form a correct opinion it would appear necessary to have some knowledge of the etymology, origin and former usage of these terms.

Hebrew—in our sacred tongue called "Ibri"—is derived from "avar" "to cross," "come over." It was first applied by the ancient inhabitants of Palestine to the family of our ancestor Abraham, who, migrating from Mesopotamia to Palestine, had to cross or pass over the river Euphrates. It was the name by which the Jews were known to foreigners in ancient days. Thus Joseph is spoken of by the Egyptians, and introduced himself to them as an "Ibri" or "Hebrew." Miriam asks Pharaoh's daughter whether she should go and call a "Hebrew" woman. Moses speaks to Pharaoh of the "God of the Hebrews," and the Prophet Jonah tells the heathen mariners, "I am a Hebrew."

The second term, "Israel," "Israelite," is to be traced to the story of Jacob wrestling with a mysterious being at "Peniel," when he was told, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel," that is, "striving with God, victorious in God," or, as Gesendus translates, "soldier (or champion) of God."

Thus the term Israel or Israelite points to the mission of the children of our race—to wrestle with or battle against any forces hostile to their sacred trust, at the same time foreshadowing their final triump and victory.

The name "Israel" became the national name of the twelve tribes collectively. Later, after the division of the kingdom under Jeroboam, the name applied only to the ten seceding tribes forming the northern kingdom, known as the kingdom of Israel, in contradistinction to the southern kingdom, consisting chiefly of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin and Levi. After the destruction of the ten tribe kingdom we find the old name Israel again used to designate the people of the kingdom of Judah, and the name "Israel" collectively, and "Israelite" individually, has to this day remained in common usage.

The third appellation, "Jehudi" or "Jew," originates in the name given by Jacob's wife, Leah, to her fourth son, "Judah" or "Jehudah," meaning praise or thanks to God. For at his birth the mother exclaimed, "This time I will give thanks unto the Lord!" The name was worthily borne by the noble and sturdy son of Jacob, whose record throughout is without stain or blemish. The tribe of Judah, named after him, was the most numerous, enterprising and valiant among all the tribes of Israel. During the march through the desert Judah's place was in the van of the host.

The traditional standard of the tribe was a lion's whelp, with the words, "Arise, O Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered." Later the name "Jehudi," or "Jew," was applied to a member of the kingdom of Judah (after the separation of the kingdom of Israel), even to those not of the tribe of Judah, proof of which we find in the fact that in the book of Esther Mordecai, though of the tribe of Benjamin, is called "Ish Jehudi," a "Jehudi" or "Jew." After the return from the Babylonian captivity all the members of the new state were called Jehudim, Jews or Judeans, the name being extended to the remnants of the people scattered throughout the nations.

So much as to the etymology and historical significance of the names "Hebrew," "Israelite" and "Jew." From it it appears that among the three the first, "Hebrew," is the most ancient and remote. And as in ancient days, by it the Jew was distinguished from foreigners, so today it would appear that in order to point out anything distinctively Jewish the word Hebrew is more properly applied. Thus we speak of a Hebrew language, Hebrew literature, Hebrew melodies, etc. Otherwise the appellations Israelite and Jew, or Israelitish and Jewish, are more frequently employed as more expressive and characteristic in their meaning and important in history.

Of the two the former is a name of honorable distinction, referring to the divine calling of Israel, the spiritual combat of truth against falsehood, of light against darkness, in which our people were enlisted as a nation, in which they were still engaged when, with the fall of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple, they ceased to be a nation, and which will not terminate until, in the fullness of time, God's light and truth will finally triumph.

And with the name "Israelite" that of "Jew" the children of our race will ever proudly bear and cherish. They trace its origin to the noble ancestor, and brave and distinguished tribe, whose name was perpetuated in the kingdom of Judah, loyal and true to its ancestral faith and traditions.

And when the autonomy of Israel as a nation was destroyed its fragments—though scattered broadcast over the earth—were still closely united by the strange spell of that ancient name Jehudi or Jew, by which, individually, we were and still are wont to call each other, and by which we are chiefly recognized by the world.—A Rabbi in Washington Star.

NO BIG ANIMALS.

WHAT VAST AREAS OF LAND IN TORRID COUNTRIES LACK.

Some Districts in Which There Are No Wild Animals of Considerable Size—Islands of the West Indian Archipelago Called a "Gameless Country."

A Russian naturalist, Professor Maclay, who passed several years in the interior of Papua, describes the highland district of the great island as a region as remarkable for its scenery and productiveness as for its salubrious crimate—a perpetual May in the terrace lands, with March and April plateaus here and there in the highest mountains. The area of the whole island exceeds that of Texas, but its population hardly aggregates a million, nine-tenths of the aborigines being lowland settlers, black idlers gorged with the yam roots and wild hog steaks of the coast plain. The uplands, too, abound with game and fish, and the only conceivable reason why the natives should limit their hunting grounds to the sweltering coast jungles is their preference for a climate that enables them to dispense with dry goods the year round.

In the Torres range there are summits towering to the height of 11,000 feet, but the close proximity of the equator has covered the highlands with a luxuriant vegetation. Snow is hardly ever seen, but chill nights—light frost even—occur now and then, and the frizzle haired coast dwellers avoid the mountains as the Indios Mansos of the Mexican lowlands avoid the tierra fria. Papua is a paradise of birds, but the kingdom of mammals is represented only by a few marsupials (ground kangaroos, tree kangaroos and opossums), besides the wild hogs of the river jungles.

A much stranger country in regard to the absence of wild animals is found in the near neighborhood of our own continent. The West Indian archipelago, with its four magnificent islands and countless islets, has been justly termed the "gameless country," a region of more than a hundred thousand square miles, monopolized almost entirely by birds and insects (even reptiles being scarce), as if the archipelago had been somehow overlooked on the last two days of creation, and left to be settled by such creatures as could reach its coasts swimming or flying. There are forests teeming with spontaneous fruit, but no monkeys, no wild hogs, no bears or raccoons. The larger carnivora are not represented by a single species.

No pumas or jaguars (though both are found on the coasts of the neighboring mainland), no panthers, lynx or wildcat. Foxes, wolves and jackals, too, are conspicuous by their absence. The caves of the limestone Sierra would seem to be admirably adapted to marmots and woodchucks, but they are tenanted only by bats. On the fine highland pastures there are no bisons, no deer, no antelopes, and, strange to say, not even rabbits. Sheep, goats, horses, donkeys, cows, hogs and even dogs were introduced after the Spanish conquest, and the only domestic mammal kept by the natives at the time of discovery was a small kind of wolf (prairie wolf) imported from Mexico, and a few species of squirrels, which the Cubans fattened for culinary purposes without knowing anything about a classic precedent—the gliraria (rat kennels) of the ancient Romans, who preferred dormouse on toast to the best Syrian pheasant pies.

Dogs and cats were unknown, and that lack of household pets seems to have driven the aborigines to strange expedients, for in "Ogilvy's Voyages" there is an account of a San Domingo cacique who kept a tame manatee that made its headquarters in an artificial pond and was so well tamed that "when called by its name, Matoom, it would come out of the water and go directly to the cacique's house, where, being fed, it returned to the pond, accompanied by men and boys, who seemed to charm the manatee by their singing, and it often carried two children at a time on its back. Being once, however, struck by a pike in the hands of a Spaniard it would never after come out of the water if a clothed man were near."

Manatees have become rather scarce on the coast of San Domingo, but are often seen near the Island of Pinos, northwest of Cuba, where shoals of the strange creatures may be seen sporting about the reef like the sea lions below the Cliff House. Of all aquatic mammals the manatee, however, can claim the championship in the art of dodging a sudden attack; a leveled harpoon is enough to make them plunge under with a "no you don't" snort, and then pop up again at unexpected times and places, waving their flippers in derision, and ready to disappear for good at the first suspicious motion.

The luxury of the Dominican cacique was therefore not apt to be shared by many of his subjects. Puppies and kittens were never seen in their cabins, and the largest land animal of the island was an overgrown rat, known as the hutia, and measuring about eighteen inches without the tail. Its caudal appendage is a compromise between that of the true rat and the California gopher, whom it resembles in its fondness for grain and in its burrowing mania, one pair owning often as many as four different dens, more or less connected by subterranean tunnels.

With the exception of that shy rodent, Cuba, San Domingo, Jamaica and Costa Rica have no land creatures deserving the name of a game animal, for even the omnivorous appetite of the Haytian darkies draws the line at the musk scented giant rats of the coast forests.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Most Costly Book.

The most costly book in the world is declared to be a Hebrew Bible now in the Vatican. It is said that in 1512 Pope Jules II refused to sell the Bible for its weight in gold, which would amount to $103,000. That is the greatest price ever offered for a book.—New York Sun.

An Old Circus Rider's Mania.

Old Eaton Stone, the circus rider, lives on an eighteen acre farm near this village. He is almost as active as he was years ago, when his daring feats on horseback made him famous all over the world. He is seventy-four years old, but keeps constantly busy. When he has nothing else to do he gets out his oil colors and adds to the unique decoration of the ancient farmhouse in which he resides. Nothing exactly like Mr. Stone's painting is to be found elsewhere, and what he has done in a score of years must have kept him well employed. Almost everything in the house is decorated. Red of the brightest vermillion hue, green which rivals the grass in June, yellow which would do credit to the daffodil and blue of the most lively shade, go into all his scrolls, stars, flowers, stripes and nondescript figures.

The ceiling of the dining room is hidden in wonderful designs traced in vivid colors. There is no attempt at blending or compounding colors. They are laid on as they come from the pots and tubes, and the patterns are original creations. Even the stove has come in for a base line of vivid decoration, and one of the two clocks in the room is completely covered with paint. The picture frames are decorated; the mantel has a generous share of decoration; the oilcloth table covers have added designs the maker never contemplated, and even the chairs have been treated to a display of the old man's handiwork. On the walls, and even on the doors, he has oil paintings and compositions from his brush. They are not high art, but they are very effective and show considerable genius.—Franklin (N. J.) Cor. Boston Herald.

The Muscular Strength of a Trout.

We sat for an hour or more on the east bank of the Beaverkill at Rockland and watched the trout of that celebrated river passing over the dam, which is nearly three feet high, with about a 4-inch volume of water pouring over it. The trout ranged in size from ten to eighteen inches, and during the time we sat there at least twenty managed to get over. In many instances a first attempt failed, owing, however, more to an apparent want of judgment, or perhaps of experience, than from lack of physical ability in the fish to accomplish the feat, the smaller fish as a rule failing to get over in the first effort.

But few of the larger fish made a clean jump into the smooth water above the apron of the dam; most of them passed perpendicularly up the falling waters and with apparent ease. These fish were enabled to swim straight up this downpour of the waters by the great muscular power they possessed; there was no trick, no sleight of hand about it—it was pure strength of body, which is evidently centered in the peduncle or tail and the tail fin.

They actually sculled their bodies up this comparatively dense mass of water. The query naturally arises: If a 10-inch trout can swim up such a fall, what is the capacity of a salmon of forty inches under similar conditions?—American Angler.

Why the Czar Went to Kiel.

There is not another place in the world where the emperor of Russia feels so secure and so easy in his mind as at the court of his father-in-law, King Christian of Denmark. They were sitting together on the day of the golden wedding of the king, when the emperor, in the exuberance of his feelings of comfort, said that he wished he could think of something by which he could give to his beloved father a very great pleasure.

"You could not give me a greater pleasure," replied the king, "than I should feel at your resolve to go and pay a visit to the emperor of Germany." The czar consented, but he would not go to Berlin. Thus the meeting at Kiel was arranged. What all the cleverest moves of the diplomats of Germany had failed to accomplish a wise prayer of old King Christian thus easily brought about.—Chicago Times.

Speaking of Dates.

"Did you ever notice the curious difference in the sexes which is shown in the way a man or a woman fixes a date?" remarked a gentleman to a lady the other day. "You ask a man when such and such a thing happened, and he always answers, 'in the year so and so,' or, 'about 1800 and something;' but the woman invariably says, 'About so many years ago,' or, 'it was so many years after I was married,' or, 'the year after Teddie was born,' and so on."

"Yes," replied his companion, "I have noticed it in myself. I feel that I am getting like the western widow who dated all her farming operations from or before 'the year I planted Jim,' which was her realistic way of referring to her husband's burial."—New York Tribune.

A Ten Thousand Year Clock.

Herr A. Noil, of Berlingen, Germany, has constructed the most marvelous timepiece that was ever evolved from the human mind. Calculations based on two years of solid going prove what the maker claims for his wonderful clock, viz., that it will run for 10,000 years without winding. Hands on the dial point to the time of day, the day, the week, months, seasons and years. It also calculates the changes in the moon and tells when the sun is "fast" or "slow." The clock is the result of five years of patient, arduous labor.—St. Louis Republic.

An Expressman's Trial.

A woman in Biddeford to whom a stove was sent by express requested the driver to get it up two flights of stairs for her. He did so, and then she desired him to set it up and start a fire in it to see if the chimney drew all right. This sent him home in a fainting, almost exhausted condition.—Augusta (Me.) Journal.

Not Two Prices.

Husband—Seems to me you paid two prices for everything you bought this morning.

Wife—Indeed I didn't; I went to the one price store.—New York Weekly.

SHE WAS SHOT.

But the Missile Was Projected by a Harmless Airgun.

"I had a curious experience while passing through New York," said a western lady to some friends on the beach at Newport. "We had taken rooms at the B——k, and unfortunately reached New York just in time for an absolutely torrid 'hot wave.' As I had pressing need for a few days' shopping I kept my husband and brother in town for forty-eight hours, to their great discomfort, and they spent their evenings by the windows of our sitting room in the lightest of attire, drinking iced drinks and trying vainly to keep cool. The night before we left town we retired rather late, after the men had been solacing themselves in their usual fashion.

"'It was so hot that it was some time before I could sleep, and just as I was dozing off I remembered that I had left my rings on the dressing table near the sitting room door, the windows of which were wide open on a little iron balcony. 'A good chance for robbers,' I thought drowsily, but was too lazy to get up to put them in a safer place. Late in the night I was aroused by the report of a pistol, or what sounded like one; and my first impression was that I was shot, for I was literally bathed, head and shoulders, in something that I felt sure for the moment was blood.

"'Henry,' I screamed, 'I have been shot! I am dying.' And I felt so strange and giddy that I was sure my end was approaching. 'Take good care of the children,' I murmured. 'And, oh, Henry, promise me not to marry that horrid Miss M—— that you seem to admire so much!' 'What nonsense, Em!' said my callous spouse, as he struck a light and turned on the gas, 'you have been dreaming.'

"'But I am wet with blood!' I exclaimed indignantly, feeling that after all he wasn't worthy of a tender death bed scene, and that I felt all right again. 'By Jove, you are moist,' he said, putting his hand on my shoulder, 'but it is not blood, whatever it is.' Suddenly he gave a great guffaw of laughter and pointed to the parlor, which was dimly lighted by the gasjet in my room. 'Well, what is it? I don't see anything,' I put in crossly, for by this time I felt thoroughly upset.

"'Oh, it is too delicious,' he gasped. 'You have been shot, you poor little thing, but not by burglars; only by a soda water bottle, and there on the table, where he and my brother Harry had left them, lay a couple of bottles, one pointing as straight for my bed as if it had been aimed at me. Henry had cut the wires confining the cork of one of the bottles and had then concluded not to open it, and I suppose the heat may have helped the effervescence, for the force of the explosion carried both cork and the soda water across the room, hitting me on the shoulder.

"Of course you may imagine how my two men enjoyed my 'shooting affair' and what capital they have made out of it."—New York Tribune.

The Value of Lime Water.

The value of lime water about the house in the summer can scarcely be overestimated. To prepare it is an easy matter, as all that is necessary is to put a layer of unslaked lime in a wide mouthed jar and fill it with cold water. There is no danger of using too much lime, as the water will only take up so much, however much is put in. It takes only a few hours for the water to take up all the lime that is possible. After it has stood say five hours the water may be drained off and more water added until the lime is all absorbed.

Acidity of the stomach is corrected by adding a little lime water to the drinking water. A teaspoonful of lime water added to a glass of milk corrects the tendency which milk has to coagulate in the stomach, forming a hard, indigestible mass. For this reason it should be added to the milk fed the little children, and nursing bottles should be rinsed with it. As a mild disinfectant there is nothing safer or better.

Columbus' Idea of the World.

Columbus believed the solid part of the sphere to be larger than the liquid part, and the distance by the sunset road between the East Indies and western Europe to be less than it is.

But in those two capital errors lay the great incentive to the execution and success of his purpose. Had he known the vast planetary spaces covered by the waters; the continent interposed between his own Europe and the land of diamonds, gold and spices; the difficulty and peril of the passage yet to be braved in the far regions of the antarctic pole in order to sail from our continental Europe to the oriental Indies by the western way, he would perhaps have shrunk back in alarm and dread.—Emilio Castelar in Century.

Why, Indeed?

"Why does a dog run sideways or diagonally?" inquired the purchaser of a fine black Newfoundland pup of a dog fancier the other day. "Well, sir, that's a question I've been asked frequently, and after some investigation I have concluded the reason is that the animal has been brought up that way. Why does a chicken roost on one foot, or an owl keep its eyes wide open all night long, or a rooster crow vigorously at the break of early dawn, or a pig run homeward with straws in its mouth before approaching rain? These are questions that are as difficult to solve as some of the astronomical problems."—Philadelphia Press.

The Eskimo Circus.

The Eskimo are very fond of theatricals. They mimic all sorts of animals wonderfully, and the man who can do this best is considered a great actor. This sort of mimicry is woven into the shape of dramatic entertainments. One performer will be a bear, for example, clad in appropriate skins, while the others hunt him. Commonly the hunt winds up with the death of the bear or seal.—Boston Transcript.

A Shrewd Investment.

The investment of £4,000,000 made by the British government in the Suez canal shares will in a year or two, according to Mr. Goschen, be worth £19,000,000, which proves it to have been an excellent stroke of business as well as of diplomacy.—New York Times.

SENATORS HOLD OVER.

No Elections of Members of the Upper House in Minnesota This Year.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 13.—Attorney General Clapp has rendered an opinion which has a direct bearing on the fall election as regards members of the state senate. The opinion was made at the request of L. A. Reed, chairman of the Republican county convention of Hennepin county, and for the purpose of deciding whether or not members from the odd- mbered districts held over.

giving his opinion the attorney ral claims there will be no election fall for the reason that under legis e enactment all members of the ate hold over, making their terms instead of two years. There had n no question about the senators m even-numbered districts holding r, but there were those who con ded that the terms of the senators in d-numbered districts expired this ll. The senate consists of twenty-six epublicans (three of whom are classed s independent Republicans), thirteen Alliance and fifteen Democratic members. The Republicans must, under the ruling, secure more than a bare majority of the house in order to insure the return of a Republican United States senator.

GLADSTONE VISITS VIC.

The New Premier Lays Before the Queen the Names of His Cabinet.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Mr. Gladstone, accompanied by Sir Algernon Edward West, left Carlton Gardens during the morning for Osborne House, his object being to lay before her majesty the names of those who comprise his cabinet and to carry out the old custom of kissing the hand of the queen. His entire trip was like a triumphal progress. The stations en route were crowded and ovations were tendered the Liberal leader everywhere. Among the crowds were hundreds of workmen, with their wives and children. Mr. Gladstone was greatly cheered and shouts of congratulation were general. At Petersfield there were droves of children arrayed in white who threw flowers in Mr. Gladstone's salon. At Portsmouth the Liberal club met their leader in a body and hundreds of workmen at the government docks left their tasks and joined the cheering throng. A similar scene was witnessed at Cowes, where the royal carriage awaited Mr. Gladstone's arrival.

Mr. Gladstone sent telegrams to his wife from every station along the route informing her of his health and progress. After dining with the queen Mr. Gladstone slept at Osborne, as usual on such occasions.

Salisbury Formally Resigns.

In the house of lords Lord Salisbury formally announced that in consequence of the vote in the house of commons on Mr. Asquith's no confidence amendment to the address in reply to the queen's speech, the government had tendered its resignation to the queen and that her majesty had accepted it. After making this announcement, Lord Salisbury asked the intentions of the incoming ministry. The Earl of Kimberly replied that he was sorry he was unable to give Lord Salisbury any information. The earl added that he was not a minister. He could say nothing until he had consulted his colleagues. The house adjourned until Thursday.

The house of commons will resume business on Thursday next, mainly to issue writs for the re-election of ministers. Most of the members of the house have already left town and intend not to return until the opening of the session in January. Neither Mr. Gladstone nor his leading colleagues will appear in the house on Thursday. The necessary official announcements will be made in their behalf by the senior member of the new government, who is not required to be re-elected. The prorogation of parliament is expected to take place Aug. 22.

Axes and other edged tools of hardened copper have been exhibited by him, which in edge and temper rival the best steel of the present.

CHURCH STATISTICS

SUPERINTENDENT PORTER GIVES OUT INTERESTING FIGURES.

Comparative Growth of the Different Sects During the Past Forty Years. Congressman Warwick, of Ohio, Major McKinley's Successor, Dies at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Superintendent Porter, in an address he prepared for delivery at Asbury Park, makes public the preliminary figures of church statistics of the eleventh census, which are both curious and interesting. There are shown to be in the United States nearly 150 separate and distinct church organizations holding widely different creeds. They vary greatly in practice and represent all possible variations of church policy. Some of the denominations were never numbered before and it required the utmost powers of persuasion to induce them to submit to the process. Sects have been found and enumerated who claim less than 100 communicants. The following table shows the number of churches in the United States today as compared with forty years ago:

Denominations.	1850.	1890.
Congregational	1,076	4,736
Lutheran	1,231	6,559
Methodist	13,338	42,214
Presbyterian	4,835	12,463
Roman Catholic	1,227	8,766
Baptist	9,380	22,41
Episcopal	1,461	5,0.5
All Other	5,007	20,471
Total	38,183	142,256

The value of church property for the same period is as follows:

Denominations.	1850.	1890.
Congregational	$ 7,971,195	$ 43,335,437
Lutheran	2,851,286	34,218,234
Methodist	14,3.6,148	131,018,070
Presbyterian	14,557,089	94,876,283
Roman Catholic	9,256,758	118,331,516
Baptist	11,001,117	69,023,6.6
Episcopal	11,384,210	73,226,081
All Other	15,594,558	68,777,080
Total	$87,410,871	$631,221,303

In point of numbers the Methodists stood first in 1850 and still retain the position. Nearly one-third of all the church edifices belong to them, while Baptists can lay claim to more than one-quarter. Relatively speaking, the Episcopal church retaines the same position to the other denominations as it did in 1850. On the other hand the Roman Catholic church has advanced considerably, from a trifle over 3 per cent. of the total number to over 6 per cent. In point of value, however, the Catholic church has made still greater strides—from an ownership of 10 1-2 per cent. of all the church property to an ownership of 18 3-4 per cent. In this respect the Catholic church now ranks second in importance, being exceeded only by the Methodists. According to the returns of the eleventh census the number of communicants in five principal religious denominations, for which the statistics have been compiled, are as follows:

Congregational	512,771
Lutheran	1,199,515
Methodist	4,255,377
Presbyterians	1,278,815
Roman Catholics	6,250,045
Total	13,496,523

The communicants of the Baptist and Episcopal with those of the others will bring the total up to about 20,000,000 in all. The statistics of the colored denominations likewise show great progress. They have a total membership of 2,879,100, and own church property valued at $13,403,000.

CONGRESSMAN WARWICK DEAD.

McKinley's Successor in the House Dies at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Congressman John G. Warwick, of Ohio, died at 9:20 p. m. Mr. Warwick was serving his first term in congress, having been elected (in consequence of the change in the boundaries of the district) to succeed Major McKinley. He was born in Ireland sixty years ago; came to the United States in 1850 and has been interested in milling, mining and farming. He is chairman of the committee on enrolled bills in the house.

The remains of Congressman Warwick will be taken to Massilon, O., his late home, for interment. The following committee has been selected to accompany the body: Senators Brice of Ohio and Hill of New York; Congressmen Hare and Donovan of Ohio, Caruthers of Kentucky, Hurd of Missouri, and Bynum of Indiana.

MEETING POSTPONED.

Date of National Republican League Convention Changed to Sept. 15.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—J. S. Clarkson, president of the National League of Republican Clubs, has issued the following:

The date of the National Republican League convention called heretofore for Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 1, is hereby postponed until Thursday, Sept. 15. This postponement, which is done with the concurrence and advice of Chairman Carter and the national committee, is made because the earlier date would prevent the attendance of a large number of Republican clubs in the Western states, where the harvests of the various crops will not have been finished by Sept. 1. By the middle of September the party will have perfected its organization in all portions of the country, many new clubs will have been organized, and a much larger number of campaign marching and uniform clubs will be able to attend the national convention. The cooler weather of the latter date will also be more favorable and induce a larger general attendance than a convention held in the closing days of August.

Those Souvenir Halves.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—When the board of directors of the world's fair meets again it may take some action in regard to the disposition it will make of those 5,000,000 souvenir coins. Treasurer Seeberger has received a number of new offers to pay premiums on the desirable half dollars, the largest of them being an offer to pay $7,500,000 for the lot which is worth in currency $2,500,000. This offer, which is the largest yet received came from the Horton company.

TO MEET AT THE HUB.

Boston Chosen as the Meeting Place of the Next Knights Templar Conclave.

DENVER, Aug. 12.—Boston will entertain the triennial Knights Templar conclave in 1895. This was settled during the afternoon, when Boston got 96 votes and Cincinnati 78. The fight has been an interesting one from the start. While Louisville promised for a while to play an important part and to possibly knock the persimmon, her claims were gracefully withdrawn to allow the fight to be waged between the two cities which came early and had earnestly pressed their claims. This, with the election of grand encampment officers, were the important features of the meeting.

The organization of the "Grand Secretarial Guild of Free Masonry for North America," an association of the Masonic grand secretaries and grand recorders of North America for the purpose of systematizing the secretarial labors of Free Masonry has been made permanent. The guild will meet twice every three years—at the triennial convocation of the general grand chapter and triennial conclave of the grand encampment. It may hold a meeting at Chicago next year. The officers until 1894 are John H. Brown, of Kansas, president; Charles E. Meyers, Pennsylvania, first vice president; George C. Connor, Tennessee, second vice president; William R. Bowen, Nebraska, secretary, and Edward C. Parmelee, Colorado, treasurer.

SPOONER FOR GOVERNOR.

He Will Probably Be Nominated by Acclamation at Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 15.—Ex-Senator Spooner will be the Republican nominee for governor. This was the conclusion at least of the gentlemen who attended the conference here. While Mr. Spooner insisted that he was not a candidate and did not want the office, he said that if tendered him he will accept. This leaves his friends free to urge his nomination, and they feel confident now that it will be made by acclamation, as all the candidates have expressed a willingness to withdraw in the event that Mr. Spooner will accept the nomination.

The Republican state convention for the nomination of candidates for state officers will be held in Milwaukee on Wednesday. Already some of the party leaders and delegates have arrived, and more will be in during the day. Secretary Rusk, who a few weeks ago left Washington to rest on his Wisconsin farm, is here from Viroqua. Ex-Senator Spooner is also on hand.

On the nomination for governor will largely depend the makeup of the rest of the ticket. Should it go to ex-Senator Spooner, the candidate for lieutenant governor is likely to be a Milwaukee man, and may be John C. Koch, or State Senator Kempf, although there are other candidates, among them J. B. Treat, of Monroe, who was defeated with the rest of the state ticket in the election of two years ago, and Martin Patterson, ex-mayor of Superior.

OVER A CLIFF.

Frightful Accident Caused by a Cattle Stampede.

BOISE CITY, Ida., Aug. 12.—Hungry prospectors on Tuesday caused the loss of 361 head of fine cattle and the death of two cowboys near Bannock Butte. The prospectors, who are now under arrest, attempted to capture a stray calf which ran into the herd. The prospectors attempted to cut out the calf. A stampede resulted. Two cowboys, Watson and Hancock, succeeded in getting in front of the herd, and attempted to bring the animals to a standstill. Their horrified companions saw them swept off the cliff as the maddened animals, unable to stop, rushed over. Three hundred and sixty-one cattle were forced off the cliff and fell seventy-nine feet. The bodies of the two cowboys were found dreadfully mangled.

BURNED RIVALS OUT.

Confession of a Bartender at Covington, Nebraska.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Aug. 13.—Robert Thompson, a barkeeper who has long been in the employ of Bill Leach, a leading saloon keeper in Covington, Neb., and an alderman, has made confession under oath that he set the incendiary fires which have destroyed so much property in Covington and Stanton during the last two years, and that he did it at the instigation and in the pay of Leach. He says that Leach took this measure of destroying rival saloons and avenging himself upon enemies. The two towns are adjoining, and among the toughest in the West. The town of Stanton was almost entirely destroyed by one of those incendiary fires last year. Leach and Thompson have quarreled about the pay the latter was to receive. It is understood that Thompson is to be permitted to turn state's evidence and that several arrests are to follow.

Would Be a Nice Scheme.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The Mail and Express contains a leading editorial proposing a railroad fare of $1 to Chicago during the world's fair for all workingmen in the United States living within 1,500 miles of Chicago, and showing how the railroads can carry the business with a margin of profit.

King in the Pen.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 12.—H. Clay King, in charge of Sheriff McLendon, of Shelby county, arrived here early in the morning, and was at once placed in the penitentiary. The gathering of the mob at Memphis caused the quick delivery of King to the prison authorities.

Harvest Hands Wanted.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 13.—Urgent demands for harvest hands are coming in from all its stations in South Dakota to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway, and agents of the company are looking everywhere for men, who will be sent out for $5.

Charlie Vine invites JOURNAL readers to call and sample his meats.

W. D. Wilson went down to Fargo on Thursday on a business trip.

Rev. Geo. Morrison of Ada, exchanged pulpits with Rev. O. H. Elmer, on Sunday last.

E. D. Childs expects to commence cutting wheat this week. Says he wants lots of help for harvest.

The oldest inhabitant avers that the summer of '92 shows more hot weather than he ever saw before in Minnesota.

Friday last may be put down as one of the hottest days of the season. A fine shower in the afternoon cooled things down a trifle.

Louis Ellington is up to Thief River Falls this week looking after the affairs of the bank.

V. D. Carruth has received his pension vouchers this week. Last week comrades Charles Jefferson and Louis Fontaine received theirs.

Gordon McGrew showed up in fine condition on Friday. Is training down to fighting weight so as to be in trim for the coming wrestle in the harvest fields.

Fears are expressed lest the extreme hot weather of last week has damaged the wheat beyond repair. Some of it was in that stage that does not require hot weather.

A. D. Morris and wife left last week for a visit to the old home in Goderich, Canada. They go in the hopes that the change will be beneficial to Mrs. Morris, who has been out of health for some time.

A very few have commenced cutting wheat in the county but by next week harvesting will be pretty generally under way. Polk county will not begin to come up to her general average if all reports are true.

Wm. Davis arrived last week on a visit to his father and mother, Capt. and Mrs. E. C. Davis. "Bill" has been an engineer on the Soo road, got laid off for a slight error but expects to be reinstated about September 1st.

Mr. Gulbrandson, a merchant tailor from Wisconsin, has been looking the city over for the past few days with a view to locating. He is very favorably impressed and if he can secure a suitable location will engage in business in the city.

J. C. Congdon of Brainerd arrived on Tuesday morning to look after his farm about three miles east of the city. J. C. says he intends to take in the National Encampment at Washington next month if he has to go on foot to get there. We live in hopes the walking will be good at that time so that we may also get there.

C. G. Rapp returned on Friday morning from a four months' visit to Europe looking very much improved in health for the trip. Says the weather over there, for the most part of the time, has been exceedingly cold and disagreeable and crops are not to be compared with ours. He is glad to get back to free-soil once more and says that he don't want any more of the old country in his.

K. O. Gigstad, of St. Hilaire, lost all his grain in the recent hail storm at that place. Several others up there in the same boat, and all uninsured except one man who had only 15 acres of wheat, but he was wise enough, or lucky enough, or whatever you are a mind to call it, to see an agent of the Minnesota Hail Insurance Co. and insure it and now he will get something out of it, which is very comforting to him but it don't benefit those who did not insure—not a cent's worth. Are you insured?

Wm. Burdick, son of H. C. Burdick, of Fertile, returned last week from the coast where he has been some time looking that country over pretty thoroughly, finally establishing a dray line in Seattle, which business he was fortunate enough to sell out to good advantage a short time since, and he has returned well satisfied that there is no better place to live or do business in than Polk county, Minnesota. Says business is largely overdone and but few making much money out there.

L. C. McKnight was in the city on Tuesday greeting his many friends here. Mr. McKnight has a pleasant home in southern California and thinks he will like that country very well, but says it is no better place to make money than here; his only object in going was in hopes of finding a place where his family could have their health. As to whether he has found that place he has not been there long enough to know. He is here with a view to disposing of some property in Fisher.

N. S. Gervais and bride arrived on Sunday morning and N. S. is receiving the congratulations of his many friends this week.

Mrs. J. Bunnell and Miss Dollie started on Monday evening for a visit with friends at Winona and other places. Expect to be gone about four weeks.

The excursion to Maple lake on Sunday is said to have been a big thing on wheels—several hundred people going from this city. The day was fine and hot, with all of the necessary requisitions for a picnic occasion except a thunder-shower.

"Ay yust kom har from Yimtown, Nord Dakota, vare ay yumped mae yob with Swan Swanson."

Maj. H. E. Stansberry has decided to go to the soldiers' home at Minnehaha, for medical treatment, and on Tuesday morning received notice that his application for admission had received favorable action and he intends to go this week.

Elias Steenerson met with a severe loss on Sunday by the burning of the barn upon his farm, together with fourteen head of horses and his machinery. Loss about $5,000, partially covered by insurance.

"Ay ban Svedish actar faller, en ay skall mek teater en opera huuse Saturday naight. Yo'd batter kom en sae mae."

The black clouds which ominously rolled up from Grand Forks at 11:30 a. m. on Tuesday caused many apprehensions of hail—fortunately unverified. The storm passed to the north of us.

The Calhoun Comic Opera Company that appeared at the Grand on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings of last week was deserving of a far better patronage than they got. Very seldom is it that a company is so universally good, there being hardly a stick in the company, while many are artists of rare merit. Why they were not better patronized we cannot understand. They went from here to Fargo and from there they go for a week's engagment in Minneapolis.

The Message:—We have received many undeserved compliments from patrons of the Message concerning the excellent quality of printing the paper exhibits in its various departments of late. It is a pleasure to the proprietor and editor to be able to secure such a grade of work here. The Message owns no type or presses, nor does it run a printing house We hire the printing done at regular prices and thus far have had our work done by the JOURNAL Printing House, Cooke & Hammond, proprietors, Crookston. For a time we had a part of the Message printed elsewhere, but since June, Cooke & Hammond have done it all, much to our satisfaction. They have good success also in their extensive job departmeut and a growing patronage.

It is an unquestioned and unquestionable fact that no production for many years has possessed so many elements of unusual novelty as "Yon Yonson," which will be seen here on Saturday evening, Aug. 20. The emigrant Swede is a character entirely new to the stage, and for that matter comparatively unfamiliar to that insignificant portion of the United States not embraced in the great Northwest. Mr. Gus Heege, the originator of Scandinavian dialect comedy, in "Yon Yonson" has given theatrical history a character so quaint, so original, so clearly lined that the impersonation cannot fail to stand boldly out among the most celebrated portrayals of the American drama. The scenic and mechanical equipments of "Yon Yonson" are the most effective and elaborate produced in recent years, the great 'log jam' scene in particular being fairly thrilling in its marvelous realism.

The band went down to the residence of N. S. Gervais on Monday evening to serenade the bride and groom.

Dan O'Connor is hustling in the city.

Charlie Misner has re-papered and re-painted his shop and now has things as slick as a whistle.

Gustave Blomdahl of Kittson county, who was brought to the Polk county hospital last week, died on Friday.

J. W. Kelley was in from Mentor on Wednesday. Says he intends to go to the encampment at Washington next month.

John Freeborn returned to civilization last week. Has been away since the week of the National Republican convention.

R. J. Roberts of Milwaukee, is visiting his brother, R. P. Roberts and incidentally looking over the northwest with a view to locating in some of its prosperous cities of towns.

Harry Congdon was over from Grand Forks on Tuesday to spend the day with his father, who came up from Brainerd to look after his farming operations. They hired a rig and spent the day out on the farm.

Isaie Sylveste was united for life to Miss Georgianna Sauve, daughter of Joseph Sauve, of Gentilly, on Tuesday, Rev. Fr. Theillon, officiating. The happy couple will make their home in this city.

J. V. Cherry, Gen. Pass. Agent for the Baltimore & Ohio R. R., wires the JOURNAL that he will be in the city this morning to arrange for transportation via that line to the National Encampment at Washington next month.

Halvor Gunderson has been appointed town clerk of the town of Fisher in the place of Tom Benson, resigned. This is not new business for Mr. Gunderson, who has served that town as clerk for thirteen years before Mr. Benson was elected.

Theatre in the city three nights last week, and the handsome young Lothario of the Fisher Bulletin didn't show up nary a once. What's biting you, Doc? Has that grim and gaunt phemail foreclosed her mortgage? Or don't you dote on comic opera?

Goodwin Leppert and his brother of Wylia desiring to obtain good water at small expense, purchased an Eagle well machine, obtained a good well apiece and now desire to sell their machine to some one else who wants to obtain water cheaply. See ad elsewhere in this issue.

The ladies of the Congregational church served ice cream at the band room in the Reckitt block on Tuesday evening. Will repeat on Saturday evening of this week and on Tuesday and Saturday evenings of each week as long as warm weather continues.

Prof. Thos. Casey expects to go to Red Lake Falls about the 25th inst. where he has been engaged as principal and superintendent of the schools, which open September 5th. The professor has always given good satisfaction wherever engaged, and the Red Lake people should consider themselves fortunate in securing Mr. Casey.

B. S. Chapin went up to Euclid on Monday to see his brother, the doctor, who is very ill from the effects of blood-poisoning received while performing a surgical operation last week. The case has been a very serious one, bnt strong hopes are now entertained of the doctor's ultimate recovery.

John G. Woolley, the temperance orator, who was to have lectured last Thursday evening, and failed to show up again, failed to appear at the M. E. church on Monday evening. As a consequence we have been obliged to knock along without any temperance for two weeks.

Henry Irving is fond of relating a little incident that occurred to him when in a Dorsetshire village last summer. Whilst passing a group of children one of them eyed him so sharply that the actor said, "Well, little girl, do you know me?" "Yes, sir," was the reply, "you are one of 'Beecham's Pills.'" She had seen his face in one of their advertisements.

The trial of Policeman Dave Robinson, before Judge C. O. Christianson, drags its slow length along and as we go to press the evidence is all in and the case is being argued. The JOURNAL has refrained from comment before the evidence was in, but having heard that we must say that there seems to be little in it upon which to convict. It seems that this officer did but his simple duty.

"McCarthy's Mishaps," which was the bill at the Grand on Tuesday evening, has been very much overestimated, to our notion. It abounds with rough horse play, attractive to certain elements, but far from refining. One redeeming feature of Tuesday evening's performance was [illegible] the principal actors being decidedly [illegible] singing and dancing of the boy actor was about the only redeeming feature, that being excellent for so young a person. Yon Yonson on Saturday evening.

Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels.

The present season has been one that has played havoc among the traveling minstrel organizations, and we regret that of the many that have gone to the wall there are some that did not lack financial backing or artistic excellence, and we are safe in saying that the number that have been successful this season can be counted on the fingers of one hand. Among the companies that have been successful are Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels, and their success is due to their artistic excellence and the splendid management of Col. Haverly. During the past twelve years they have crossed the ocean four times, appearing in all the metropolitan cities of Europe and America, and have for the past twenty-eight weeks given two performances daily at Haverly's handsome playhouse, the Casino, in Chicago. This organization will appear at the Grand opera house on Monday, Aug. 29., presenting a program of great excellence in its every particular. In this company will be found such well known names as Billy Rice, E. M. Hall, E. M. Kayne, Chas. Sully, Bogert and O'Brien, Delmore and Wilson, A. M. Thatcher, Frank Bandell, Arthur Yale, Geo. Evans and many others well known in the minstrel world. Instead of the usual minstrel parade at twelve o'clock a pleasing innovation will be given in a grand open air concert at three o'clock, or as near that hour as possible at the corner of Main and Robert streets by Haverly's Silver Cornet Band, upon which occasion a musical program of excellence will be presented by this company of solo artists. Col. Haverly takes pleasure in announcing that "Kissell," the world-famous lightning-drill artist, will give his famous musket drill and other maneuvres, which have been received with enthusiasm wherever exhibited.

The Stowaway.

On Tuesday, Aug. 30, "The Stowaway" will be presented at the Grand for the first time in Crookston. The play is one of the greatest melodramas ever written, and abounds with pathetic, humorous and startling situations. The scenery carried by this company (all of which will be exhibited at the Grand) is exceptionally fine, one of the features of the play being the yacht scene. A full rigged pleasure yacht is used and one of the principal scenes enacted thereon. Another feature of the play is the safe-robbery, where two well known "crooks" open and rob a "burglar-proof" safe with the greatest ease. There is no humbug about this. The men who open the safe are two of the most notorious safe-robbers in the country. They have both served years in states prisons for deeds of this kind. These men have not only reformed their evil ways as far as robbery is concerned, but they are now strictly temperate and neither drink or smoke. A beautiful sermon could be preached on this. The stage at least does some good in the world. It earns these two men an honest living and places them in a position to be a warning to those of our citizens who happen to own jewelry stores, that it would be a safe idea when they go home at night to take their store home with them.

A Peculiar Affair.

On Monday morning our citizens were startled by the report that A. D. Morris' jewelry store had been robbed of from $500 to $600 worth of jewelry. Upon looking into the affair our reporter was told that the thieves had effected an entrance through the transom over the rear door, which door is within a very few feet of the bed of the clerk in Durand's drug store. The clerk said he heard the noise made by the thief as he was climbing out through the transom and got up and went into Halverson's restaurant and told Walter Bivins who went out with him and notified the police who searched until daylight but could find no clue. Soon after daylight the chief went to the store and examined the transom together with Mayor Anglim and found dust upon it which would seem to indidate that no one had passed through the transom—but the show-case had the appearance of having been disturbed in the night. The affair wears a very mysterious aspect and the authorities are taking steps to sift it to the bottom.

Reciprocity Convention Delegates.

The following persons were appointed delegates to attend the international reciprocity convention at Grand Forks on Thursday and Friday, Sept. 1st and 2nd. This convention is one of great importance and will be attended by the leading men of the Northwest. The delegates named from Crookston are as follows: Mayor Wm. Anglim, President of the council, John Cromb, secretary chamber of commerce, A. D. Stephens, N. P. Stone, M. R. Brown, A. A. Miller, W. Watts, Ald. E. D. Childs, C. E. Sawyer. Louis Ellington, Ald. J. E. Morrisey, S, Rosenthal, Hugh Thompson, E. M. Walsh, W. E. McKenzie, Alex McKinnon, August Walters, Ald. W. E. Walker, Felix Fournet, R. J. Montague, Max Ericsson, Wm. Clements, H. F. Brown, L. D. Marshall, H. Steenerson and H. E. Cooke.

John Bunyan.

What can a man do in life to keep his memory green for a hundred years or so? No question is so hard to answer as this, and the history of most famous men and women contradicts the answer a philosopher would be likely to give. Two hundred and four years ago there died in England a man whose parentage was obscure, education almost nothing, and whose life had been almost always under the clouds of poverty and persecution. Yet this man, imprisoned for his religion, in that confinement produced a book which is still a model of pure and clear English, and still published by thousands and read by millions. That book was "Pilgrim's Progress," of which Macaulay wrote that after it had been for a generation a treasure in a cottage, the philosophers and wits discovered that it was a classic. Pilgrims now-a-days, however, do not have such a weary progress as Bunyan's hero. Though they travel from one side of the continent to the other, their pilgrimage is made delightfully easy by the Pullman sleeper, the dining car and the reclining chair car, all of which comforts are found on "The Burlington Route," the chief line to Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis and all principal cities. For other information, tickets, etc., call on your local agent or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Weather-Crop Bulletin.

The following is the weather-crop bulletin for the week ending Aug. 22, 1892, compiled by the Minnesota weather service in connection with the U. S. department of agriculture:

The storm of last week did severe damage to several thousand acres of wheat and oats in Polk and Norman counties which has just been reported. This week the weather has been most beneficial and harvesting is progressing rapidly. In some counties three-fourths of the grain is cut.

In the central section some damage is reported by the high temperature and high wind in a few western counties. Many farmers are done cutting and the yield will be about two-thirds as much as last year. Corn is doing well and if frost keeps off two weeks longer a large crop will be insured. Potatoes are doing well. Flax harvest has not yet begun. The plant looks good but yield will not be large owing to the stand being light, while in the southern portion of the state the flax is cut in many places and the yield will be good, and in some counties heavy.

In Pipestone and Lyon counties the rain and hot winds have broken down wheat and oats. Cutting is generally all done and stacking and threshing are under way. What clover that has been cut in Scott county is of inferior quality and some farmers are said to have left uncut as much as 40 acres. Goodhue county has a large amount of wheat in the barn, only corn and sorghum are out and both are looking excellent. Wabasha and Winona counties report barley shrunken and dark-grade No. 4—but rye, flax and timothy good.

It is now generally conceded that the yield of wheat for the entire state will not be over three-fourths of last year and that the grade will be lower. A few counties estimate at over three-fourths; the majority at two-thirds and some at half a crop.

CROWDS AT KANSAS CITY.

Seventy Thousand Visitors in the City on the Kaw.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 22.—At sunrise the boom of Battery B's three-inch rifle resounded through the camp and informed the knights that military regulations would be in force for the rest of the week. The last twenty-four hours have worked a wonderful transformation in the appearance of Camp Shaw. Glitter, animation and display have replaced the comparative quiet and repose of last week. Until Sunday Camp Shaw was an unfinished picture which needed the presence of the knights with their handsome uniforms and flashing swords to give it life, color and tone. The knights have come and the picture is complete. Up to 9 o'clock p. m. 150 passenger trains had arrived bringing what is estimated as a crowd of 70,000 people. The day was spent by the Pythian Sisters in receptions to the visiting sisters at the various headquarters of the local lodges. Committees of the sisters were at the depots ready to aid the incoming members and give them such information as was needed. The sisters have done good work in the way of getting accommodations for the thousands of visitors.

An Official Report.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 2 .—The report of officers of the endowment rank of Knights of Pythias to be presented to the supreme lodge says that on July 15, 1892, there were 1,947 actual sections, 29,407 members and the endowment in force was $62,952,000, showing an increase of 500 sections, 8,000 members and $17,000,000 endowment in the two years preceding. The resources of the rank June 30 were, balance cash on hand in the endowment rank depository, $69,138; assessments in process of collection, $15,457; accrued interest, $33,266; total, $87,861. The liability representing death losses accruing before July 1 is shown in the following statement: In litigation, $28,000; in process of adjustment, $68,000; proofs in process of completion, $111,000. While the above figures, says the report, represent the actual financial status of rank on July 1, 1892, in which is charged the entire death loss prior to and including the month of June, the contingent income or resources are more than ample to meet all maturing claims.

Dangerous Germs in Ice.

So far as the salubrity of the natural as compared with the artificial ice is concerned, we may rest assured that as regards bacteria one is just as wholesome as the other, provided the water used is pure. If the water is impure from sewage or other unwholesome thing, then the natural ice is never fit for domestic use. If water is impure the processes of artificial icemaking, if carefully performed, are capable of furnishing even from it a product which is harmless and wholesome, whether it be absolutely germ free or not, for absolute freedom from germs—if these are not disease producing forms—is neither necessary nor especially desirable. It is not bacteria, but disease producing bacteria, which make of practical significance the invisible flora of either water or ice.—T. Mitchell Prudden in Harper's.

FARM & GARDEN

NEW FASHIONED CORNCRIB.

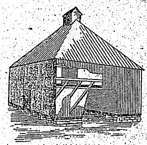
An Illinois Crib and the Device for Storing Corn Therein Described.

One of Illinois' progressive farmers, Mr. G. M. Rice, describes in The Prairie Farmer the corncrib and elevator represented in the accompanying cuts:

I wanted to put my corn where the rats could not get at it. I also wanted more room without buying more lumber. The result is so satisfactory that I will give others a chance to try the same thing.

The old crib was 36 feet long, 22 feet wide and 8 feet high, with driveway 8 feet wide the whole length, and held 1,600 bushels. The new crib (Fig. 1), built of the same lumber, is 24 feet long, 21 feet wide and 12 feet high, with driveway 8 feet wide at bottom and 6 feet wide on top, holding 2,500 bushels.

The shorter length is made up by the greater height. The gain in room is by filling the space above driveway. But the greatest economy in lumber is brought about by having clear cornroom 21 feet wide above driveway. As ordinarily built this room would make three cribs, each 7 feet wide. Six sides would then be necessary to hold the corn in, but now only two are used. And still more, the wide roof rises so high in the middle that the cornroom is high, yet the sides are low.



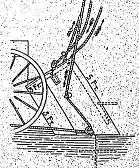
CORNHOUSE.

The driveway and cupola form good ventilation, and when corn is green a furnace placed in the driveway could be made to send hot air up through it. Our corncrib is then a dryhouse, and our corn can be picked.

It will be difficult for some to get the corn up so high. Several elevators or carriers would be suitable for the purpose, but I use a box holding thirteen bushels and raise it as we do a horse fork. Fig. 2 shows its form and position at the end of the wagon box, also the arrangement of the ropes.

By unhitching the team from the wagon tongue and hitching to the rope the corn is raised easier and quicker than it could be shoveled 8 feet high. The box is emptied by a rod which sticks up above the top of the box. When the box reaches top of elevator shaft this rod is pushed down, the doors are unhooked and fall into the position shown by the dotted lines, the corn then slides out and the box is ready to come down. When the box is down the lower door is put into position and hooked by shoving the rod up to its place. The upper door is held by the lower door.

This crib is set on stone piers 8 feet 8 inches apart, 18 inches high, 16 inches wide at bottom and 6 inches on top. The floors are double boards 6 feet 3 inches wide and 24 feet long, nailed to 6 by 6 sills, 5 feet 7 inches long, laid on top of the piers. These sills have tin strips nailed to the top edge and extending 4 inches out all around, making it impossible for rats to get up to the floor. The position of other timbers and elevator shaft are shown in the drawing.



THE CORN ELEVATOR.

The studding (2 by 8) is nailed to the floor and the floor to the sills, a substantial arrangement, although the floor extends 3 inches over the ends of the sills. The studding is also set bracing so that no nail girts are needed and the crib cannot sag or lean. The form of the roof holds the upper part of the crib together. The tie girts (2 by 8) extend entirely across the building (21 feet) just above the driveway, 4 feet apart. Other timbers (4 by 6) are placed between these over the driveway, and the floor is nailed to the under side.

Water Cure for Rats.

Fill a barrel one-third full of bran and water, mixed stiff enough to hold a rat on it; let them feed a couple of nights, then make them another mess in the same barrel of nearly all water. When one goes in down goes Mr. Rat, and the next, not knowing his brother's bad luck, follows suit. In the morning the barrel will be full if the rat supply holds out.

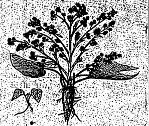
A New System of Working Bees.

A new system of working bees by Mr. Wells is making some stir in England. He puts two colonies side by side with a perforated dummy between and queen-excluder over, having both colonies work in the same supers and [illegible]

THE BURDOCK.

How This Troublesome Weed Is Propagated and How It May Be Eradicated.

The burdock is a biennial. It has a strong tap root which goes down to a great depth in the soil. The root, as shown in the sketch, is broken off. The seed is borne on a branched stem which pushes up from the center of the plant. The seeds are matured in inclosures at the outer end of the branches. These seed sacs are somewhat circular in shape and they are so armed that they have the power to adhere to almost everything that may come in contact with them. Hence we find them clinging to the hair of horses and cattle that may pasture where they grow.



THAT BIENNIAL WEED, THE BURDOCK.

Where burdocks are allowed to grow freely the wool of sheep coming in contact with them soon becomes of but little value. The number of seeds produced by a single plant is very great. When the burdock is cut off above the surface of the ground it will at once grow up again. The effort to produce seed during the second year of the growth of the plant is most persistent. It will ripen seeds until frost.

The man who mows his meadow down too readily concludes that his whole duty has been discharged to the burdocks growing in it, when it has only been half discharged. Though he should fail to find the young burrs that soon grow up around the parent stem, his sheep will not fail to do this when they come to feed upon the aftermath. This weed is propagated by means of seed and chiefly through the medium of animals to which the burrs may cling. The seed has the power of retaining vitality for a long time. Because of this it may require several years to completely rid a place of burdocks.

Like all biennials, the burdock is easily destroyed in cultivated fields. It is in byplaces, as fence sides, lanes, corners around the buildings, pastures and the borders of woodlands, that burdocks give trouble. But even in these they are not difficult to destroy. Farmers who go over their fields twice a year with the spud will soon have no burdocks! In cutting them care should be taken to strike below the crown. Every plant cut in this way must die, says an Ohio Farmer correspondent, authority for the foregoing. The cutting may be done at any time of the year when the ground is not frozen, and it is of course much more easily done when the plants are young.

Small Flocks of Fowls.

In the summer season the hens on the range secure a large share of food that cannot be utilized in any other manner, and where a small flock is kept and confined in a yard in some suburban location they can be kept on the waste of the family. The hen will subsist on all kinds of food—meat, seeds, fruits and vegetables—which gives her a wide range. It will pay to keep a few hens to consume the waste of a family, as the hens return their product to their owner in a short time.

To attempt to feed a pig on waste food compels the owner to wait until the pig matures, but the hen will begin laying and continue throughout the season, thus paying cash in eggs for all she receives, and she will accept anything that is edible. A small flock pays better than a large one, proportionately, because of the utilization of the refuse, and because but little or no labor is required for them compared with a large number. All who have waste and refuse should provide a place for hens and thus convert the waste into eggs, according to The Breeders' Guide.

Bonemeal.

Steamed bone differs from raw bone only in that the former is much less tough, so that it can be ground to a finer meal with the same expenditure of power, also some of the fat of the bone has been removed, and what is left is in a better condition for plant food; the fatty matter tends to retard the decay of the bone. Sometimes the steaming may be carried so far as to remove some of the gelatine of the bone, in which case the bonemeal would be less valuable than the raw, because poorer in nitrogen.

At the Illinois experiment station last season no appreciable effect on yield of field corn resulted from cutting the tops when in good condition for fodder, or from removing, as they appeared, the tassels from alternate rows.

At the Pennsylvania station corn grown for silage was found most advantageous when the plants were large with ears nearly matured, instead of storing them in a silo, whether cut or uncut, in a green and watery condition. The large varieties have decidedly larger yields than did the smaller varieties. [illegible]

A Tow Horse That Knows Something.

A Washington driver says that there is an old gray hill horse there that sometimes cannot get back to his accustomed place at the foot of the hill in time for the next car. This horse has nothing to do with the blue line, and knows the difference between the blue and the brown cars. If he is on his way back to the starting point and sees a brown car coming, this shrewd animal will turn around and stand alongside the track waiting for the car to reach him. No amount of coaxing can induce him to move, but after the car reaches him he will "pull like a major" until he reaches the top. Then he returns to his post, and when he again sees his car coming turns and gets into position.

A day or two ago the hill boy, instead of walking back with the horse or riding him, as was his usual custom, jumped on a car and rode down. The horse saw this and stopped half way up the hill and would not move until the boy came after him. Whenever the boy rides on the car the horse stops half way down the hill, but when the boy remains with him the old gray pursues the even tenor of his way until he reaches the bottom.—Our Animal Friends.

Do Men Like Prison Life?

I think, said a detective the other day, there must be a fascination about life in jail, for certain men who have been in there for a little while seem to leave it with regret, and do not lose their interest in what goes on in prison for some time after they are released. Again and again I have noticed men who have been confined for a few months come back every day after their release and stand at the door, looking in.

They had no friends in there, unless they made friends among the other prisoners, and they did not speak or wish to speak to any one. They leaned against the grated door and looked in, as if they wanted to come back.

I really think some of them become attached to the life, and one reason is that unless they are men of gentle feelings they do not feel the shame of their position as long as they are inside, but when they come out and meet other men they know they have the jail stain on them, and they imagine every one sees it.

I have often watched them standing there by the door, and wondered what feeling it was that drew them back.—London Tit-Bits.

A Snake That Is Found in Many Places.

The common snake, which bears the scientific name of Tropidonotus natrix, is one species of a genus (Tropidonotus) which extends over Europe and North America, and from northern Asia to north Australia, there being seventeen or eighteen Indian species alone. Our common snake may serve as an example of the largest family into which serpents are divided—the family Colubridæ—of which there are upward of 165 species in India alone. This family contains most of the harmless snakes, and it is also illustrated by a small snake, Coronella austriaca, which some years ago was discovered to be an inhabitant of Dorsetshire and Hampshire. The Coronella feeds exclusively on lizards, slow worms and small snakes. Though harmless, it will bite.—Quarterly Review.

"The Ghost of Leap Year."

In France there is a popular tradition among the peasantry, especially those of the Seine country and of La Chatre, concerning a demon called "The Ghost of Leap Year." It is said that every leap year this peculiar sort of evil demon makes his dread appearance. The creature's sole pleasure is to be displeased with everything and everybody. His shape is not distinguishable in member, joint or limb, but taken altogether his hideous and uncanny actions make him a much dreaded monster.—St. Louis Republic.

A RECORD OF FAILURE.

Ex-Speaker Reed's Review of the Last Congress.

ITS RECKLESS EXTRAVAGANCE.

Pretenses of Economy Made, but Not Lived Up To—Appropriated $22,000,000 in Fifteen Minutes—New Rules versus Reed's—A Scathing Arraignment.

[Copyright, 1892, by the New York Press. Published by permission.]

The barbarian army of Xerxes has recrossed the Hellespont with bedraggled legions, much beaten and discomfited.

Everything it has tried to do has been failure, and its every action has been in effect a disapproval of all that the Democracy professed in the last congress and in the last campaign.

It has not only grievously sinned, but has sinned against light, and its history is a history of confessions and failures, of admissions and retreats. That such should be its history is not in the least unnatural. The present must always join onto the past, and men are so made up that they often sacrifice a good and useful opportunity in the present, in order not to confess to a bad course of action in the past.

When the Democracy met together seven months ago it was evident to them all that there must be some change of their old rules if they meant even to seem to do business. But during the last session they had said so much, had burdened the air with so many outcries, that they could not frankly and manfully adopt that system of rules which had had the sanction of the severest trial that ever a system was subjected to, a trial in which all partisan opposition had been paralyzed, and the business of the country had gone on undismayed by clamor and undisturbed by noise. The Democracy felt that they must somewhere have for themselves the power they had so loudly flouted when used by others. Nevertheless they also felt that for very shame's sake they must so conceal it that the world would not find it out. But the attempt at concealment was in vain. Everybody now knows that the very power they so bitterly complained of when exercised by the speaker impartially on all bills, they arranged to have exercised on special occasions by the committee on rules, which is itself the mere creature of the speaker, and they soon found that before the committee on rules could exercise this power the speaker himself must as "tyranically," as did his predecessor, overrule the decisions of a Democratic speaker, which up to that date had been untouched.

The speaker of the last house endured the waste for a fortnight of two precious hours every day rather than overrule a decision of Speaker Carlisle that the journal must first be read before any other business. That ruling seemed so entrenched in good sense as to be unassailable. The speaker of the present house, however, before even a filibuster had begun, overruled Mr. Carlisle and gave the proceedings of the committee on rules precedence over everything but the chaplain. When one thinks of the hubbub and noise, the wrath and turmoil, the loud voiced patriotism which greeted similar action of the committee on rules, though made decorously and in order, one hardly knows which to admire most, the sudden somersault of the Democracy or their notion that they have concealed it.

The Republicans were consistent throughout, and offered to the Democracy in majority the same control which they themselves had exercised. They did more than that—they offered the complete control which every majority ought to have, together with the right to effectually compel the attendance and action of members. Of course such power would have meant responsibility equally large and equally comprehensive. The offer was refused, though rules were adopted which sanctioned actions on the part of the committee on rules which were the subjects of daily and regular denunciation when Republicans were charged with the conduct of public business.

When the rules were adopted the new members were told by us what the results would be, and a large minority, perhaps even a majority, of Democrats have since and often expressed sorrow and regret that they had not had at the beginning the sense and knowledge which they have now acquired. Instead of giving freedom of debate only freedom of opposition has been given.

Instead of the orderly discussion of great questions the time of the house has been wasted on roll calls and trivial debate, and all the measures of real importance have passed under suspension of the rules by sheer force of numbers. As a specimen of how these rules have operated in the way of increased deliberation and care let me give you a few examples. Remember that this has been the long session of a Democratic congress, led by the very men who were so clamorous only two years ago for freedom of debate. Remember also that there was no systematic day by day waste of time by the opposition, no perpetual hand to hand fight actuated by partisan feeling and spurred on by individual anger. The minority behaved with gentleness and modesty, partly because they were very good men and partly because there were very few of them. Under such circumstances one [illegible]

[illegible] ecutive and judicial appropriation bill carrying $22,000,000, occupying fifteen Record columns of the finest type, covering thousands of items and containing 150,000 words, under a suspension of the rules, with fifteen minutes' debate on either side! One minute to every 10,000 words and forty seconds to every $1,000,000. On the same day was passed, under a similar suspension of the rules, a bill to admit Arizona as a state, a proposition hitherto never seriously discussed. Fifteen minutes were allowed each side. On the same day also New Mexico had a bill passed to admit her as a state, with like limitations as to debate. Just think of it—fifteen whole minutes to discuss such a question as that! Surely, there never was such a farce! The question of the admission of New Mexico is not at all a political question, or, if it is, the politics sink into insignificance compared with the complex question arising out of the nature of the population and its relation to the rest of the union. On this question the wisest men of both parties even in New Mexico hesitate, and this Democratic house illustrates the freedom of debate and the wisdom of deliberation by deciding the whole matter in thirty minutes. This is wisdom shod with the shoes of swiftness. On that same day also, under a similar suspension of the rules and with fifteen minutes of debate on either side, the antioption bill was passed. Fifteen minutes of debate on the antioption bill in a house of 332 members! Why, one senator, and he a new man, took five hours to state his views, and during the time I listened to him he did not seem to be wasting words. Here was a bill which may disarrange the commerce of the world—a bill on which hangs more hopes and fears than any bill of the last ten years, and this bill has passed the house on the theory that the house has only fifteen minutes of wisdom to be bestowed on either side of the question.

Against these bills there had been no factious opposition and not even a hint of proposed delay. They had never been debated before and attention had never in any way been called to either of them. No public discussion of them had taken place outside, and the excuse that the subjects were familiar could not be urged. It was simply wanton incompetency. The time of the house had been so wasted by lack of system and want of leadership that debate was impossible and deliberation unattainable. The great appropriation bill went its way unexplained and the antioption bill was hustled through as a vote catcher, notwithstanding the lurid and, strange to say, accurate declaration of Amos J. Cummings, of New York, that it was more unconstitutional than the force bill. This could easily be, since the force bill was not unconstitutional at all and was allowed six entire days for discussion. Six days for the force bill, thirty minutes for antioption! Six days was called "gagging" in the last house, thirty minutes is deliberation and debate in this.

On another day a bill to repeal in effect all the careful work, extending over so many years, of Senator Edmunds and Randolph Tucker in regard to Utah was passed under suspension of rules. In fact all the important bills have been passed that way.

Even what Democratic Mr. Pierce, of Tennessee, called the "popgun tariff" bills were, many of them, passed under suspension.

To be exact, just one-half of them were passed that way. This was the fact, though such bills have a right of way on other days. Binding twine, bagging for cotton and its machinery and the wool bill were the only ones which had normal passage. Some one may say that this action on the tariff bills was because the Republicans filibustered. We did filibuster, and that because it was a sinful waste of public time to be eternally maundering around about bills that nobody wanted or believed in; bills the only purpose of which was to prevent Democracy from even making believe doing anything. If anybody asks why we who ourselves suppressed filibustering indulged in it the answer is very plain. We offered to suppress it all around the board, and made the offer so that it would be effectual against us and against any members who were in the minority. The Democracy refused to accept it. On the contrary, they deliberately re-established it, giving to any minority the right to suppress legislation. Filibustering had the sanction of the house, except where the autocratic committee on rules held sway. This was all wrong. But minorities are in this house given the power, and the right to filibuster is reserved for whoever chooses to exercise it. Some of the crafty old leaders wanted it for themselves and so they had to give it to us.

But while the Democratic house has failed in all other respects, the most signal failure has been in the matter of economy. All the circumstances conspire to make that failure conspicuous. The abuse which was poured out upon the last congress comes back with added force on this, and the time has now come to do justice to one of the most really economical statesmen we ever had, the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon. His conduct as chairman of appropriations in the Fifty-first congress was worthy of all praise. He was careful, economical, upright and just, and has always deserved well of this country. People do no realize the tremendous pressure there was on the Fifty-first congress, and how very handsomely Mr. Cannon stood up against it and how well he was backed by his [illegible] on either hand. Notwithstanding all this pressure the congress of 1890 provided for the expenditure of only $463,000,000. This sum seemed at the time immense, and there is perhaps little wonder that great feeling was exhibited and great astonishment expressed. But it is now plainly visible to all men that this sum, large as it was, was but the adequate expression of the honest expenditures of a great government, which has grown every year beyond even the wildest hopes of its people. In the present session of congress Mr. Holman has had to stand up against no unusual pressure, such as Mr. Cannon encountered. No one has failed to learn that the surplus has been paid out and the revenue reduced, so as to be only sufficient for the purposes of government honestly and economically administered.

Mr. Holman and his friends even went further. They strove with some success to frighten the American people with the declaration, often repeated by the mouths of his lieutenants, Governor Sayers and Mr. Dockery, that the income was unequal to the needed expenditures. With a house elected on a platform of economy, with over 140 majority, a majority larger than the whole opposition, we naturally expected some reduction of what Democratic orators call the public burdens. I confess that I was myself astonished to find that not only were the appropriations of the first session of this congress to exceed the appropriations of the first session of the last congress, but they were to exceed them by the enormous sum of $50,000,000. My surprise was very much heightened by the fact that day after day I had seen appropriations manifestly inadequate carried through the house against all argument and fact by sheer force of numbers. The present condition of things is an overpowering testimony, not only to the growth of the country, but to the integrity and economy of the committee on appropriations, of which Mr. Cannon was the head. The debate in the senate of July 26 shows moreover that the $510,000,000 appropriated have not reached the needs of the country. Mr. Allen, of Washington, shows that a lighthouse has been thrown out which should have been built, on a spot which has already cost the country the lives of many men, and Mr. Allison shows that one item at least of large amount has been lessened on the demand of the house by the simple expedient of cutting off one-half, with the understanding that it shall go on the next year's deficiency bill. Of one item Senator Isham G. Harris, a Democratic senator, in fact the real Democratic leader of the senate, puts tersely his opinion, and that opinion will illuminate many other items not discussed. I want to call your readers' attention to this simple fact, even at the expense of reiteration and of being tiresome. We expended $462,000,000 the first session of the Fifty-first congress. We were abused most roundly therefor. The lowest figures any Democrat can now make for his congress is $510,000,000. These figures are undisputed. The moral is indisputable.

It does sometimes seem a great pity that we haven't, we Republicans, the power of vituperation. We seem to have no energy of characterization. Abusing, as the Democrats have, in the wildest language, the appropriation of $462,000,000, and then appropriating $510,000,000 themselves, means two things. It means that in the last campaign the Democracy was inaccurate, and that in the present house they have been detected. If we were in their place and they in ours I fear their language would be more adequate.

But if the Democracy have adopted what one of their own men calls a "popgun" system of tariff reform, their committee on war claims have started a Gatling gun system of war claims. It is true that the house itself has so far acted on but few of them; but these few show the many will finally be treated. A house which has voted to lift the incubus of the statute of limitations from Sibley's case, so as to allow the heirs of an officer who left the United States army to join the Confederates to collect a royalty on tents used in the very war he helped to wage, has shown itself capable of infinite power of sapping the treasury. The committee on war claims has reported in favor of more than $70,000,000 worth of claims for damages caused by the devastation of the war. If there is anything settled in law it is that no nation ever undertakes to repair the damages of war. Where the accident of destruction falls, there it rests. But there is grave danger at this very moment that we shall at this late day be cajoled into vast payments in that behalf. These claims come to us under the sanction of religious societies, to pay for rent of churches, to pay for damages to schools and colleges. Each is for a small amount, but the aggregate will appall the country. In the Forty-fifth congress, after a pitched battle over William and Mary college, such claims were sent to the rear. Today, in addition to the $70,000,000 already reported by the committee on war claims, $400,000,000, and perhaps $600,000,000, of such claims have been referred to the court of claims.

If Mr. Holman and his band of economists had given half as much attention to this proposed drain on the treasury as they have to the refusing of what they knew they must consent to, we should today have a safer surplus in the treasury, even if we had less campaign talk.

The close of this session of the house [illegible] Georgia—a characterization which could be made of no other house and which Mr. Watson was allowed without punishment to reiterate and reaffirm. Mr. Watson, though now of the Alliance party, was chosen as a Georgia Democrat.

A part of that characterization has been made the subject of investigation and must speak for itself. All the rest seems to be a true bill. Here is the description, omitting the part under investigation:

"The congress now sitting is one illustration. Pledged to reform, they have not reformed. Pledged to economy, they have not economized. Pledged to legislate, they have not legislated. Extravagance has been the order of the day. Absenteeism was never so pronounced. Lack of purpose was never so clear. Lack of common business prudence never more glaring. Useless employees crowd every corridor. Useless expenditures pervade every department."

After two weeks wasted in dilatory motions, which the speaker should have suppressed at once, the spectacle was presented to the world of a compromise on the Chicago fair, dictated by the insurgents to a Democratic caucus. Even then the Democracy were forced by a few unreconcilables in the far corner of Texas to adopt a rule compelling a vote on a special date at a special hour, with previous question ordered and dilatory motions suspended, thus confessing at last after a long struggle that even with more than 140 majority, with three to one power over their enemies, the hated practices of the Fifty-first house afforded the only adequate method of procedure even for the Democracy. This completes the public confession which has been going on through the session that all the outcry against the rules of the last house was partisan slander, the wild fury of defeated obstructionists, whose only real grievance was that they had been as soundly as they were righteously beaten.

Such, in brief, have been the characteristic acts of a house of representatives where the Democracy dominated in the proportion of three to one. Its last days have been but the crowning example of the riotous control of the few which was deliberately made possible when the body adopted its rules. While but a small number are visible as leaders and workers in this new attempt to establish the rule of the few over the many, the whole Democratic party is responsible for their actions, for it put into their hands the very power they are now using against the people and against the majority. Remember also that this was in a house immediately preceding a presidential election, where the members were on their good behavior.

Suppose the party to which these men belong is victorious all along the line next November, what ought we to expect?

If they act thus when they try to be good, how will they act when they act like themselves?

Tom Reed's idea of what the Democratic slogan should be in the coming campaign.—New York Press.

You Should Vote for Harrison

Because every country which wants to grow rich at our expense is hoping and almost praying that you will vote against him. A great rule of success is not to do what your enemy wants you to do. Why are all the manufacturing barons of Europe for Grover Cleveland? Because they are in love with Democracy? Those men hate Democracy, and the ambition of every one of them in England is to become a lord, an earl, a duke or some other brand of aristocrat. They are for Cleveland because they feel his policy will have the effect of making them richer and richer. To compete with them successfully the American manufacturer must reduce wages or go out of business. Vote to keep Harrison in the White House and Cleveland at Buzzard's Bay.—New York Recorder.

Why, Grover, Why?

Mr. Cleveland is a candidate and seeking votes. He doubtless thinks that by representing the people of this country as underpaid and overtaxed, and pretending that he has an infallible remedy for such ills, he will gain votes. But it would puzzle him to explain why, if the situation of "the plain people" here is so desperate, "the plain people" of other countries are flocking hither by hundreds of thousands every year to expose themselves to the calamitous conditions which, as he pretends, exist here.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Why It "Slumped."

Todd County Argus:—The Ugeblad is the organ of the third party in Otter Tail county, which is the strongest Alliance county in the state. In a recent issue, referring to the gubernatorial question, it says: "If a choice lies between these two, and we were to give the farmers in this state any advice in the matter, then it would unquestionably be that they ought to vote for Mr. Nelson, because we have a good deal of confidence in and respect for him, while we have no confidence in Mr. Donnelly."

DIRECTOR-GENERAL Davis, of the World's Columbian Commission, has figured out that the World's Fair bill just passed by Congress appropriates more than was supposed. He makes the following summary:

World's Columbian commission, $120,000; board of lady managers, $110,000; government exhibit board, $400,000; medals and diplomas, $102-000; for loss on coinage of souvenirs, $50,000; World's Columbian Exposition, $2,500,000; total, $3,283,000. Mr. Davis then goes on to show how this amount can be still further increased by disposing of the souvenir half dollars at a premium.

"Now you will see," he said, "that I have not counted anything for premium on the half dollars. I know of an offer of 20 per cent premium on the whole issue that is ready now. My opinion is that every one of the half dollars is worth at least 75 cents. A moderate estimate would give us $500,000 profit there, so that we may thank congress for making us a present of nearly $4,000,000, when we had asked only a loan of $5,000,000. I feel sure that the more the friends of the fair consider the question the more they will feel the value of the legislation in its favor."

THE Todd County Argus goes for Hunt, of the McIntosh News, thusly:

We arraign any one who is in a position to understand the political situation of to-day, who will uphold the old plutocratic parties as acting in good faith with the common people, as an ignoramus or a political boodler.—McIntosh News.

The above is a sentence from the answer which W. G. Hunt made to the article in the Argus of July 28, scoring him for his Pharisaical utterances. Any one who has had the opportunity of seeing any number of papers upholding the doctrine of the People's party must have noted that nearly every one takes this same position. It is a plain charge that all those who do not agree with them are either fools or knaves. They set themselves up as infallible judges and leave no room for differences of opinion. Further on this fellow Hunt asks us to which charge we plead guilty—that of an ignoramus or a political boodler? We will take the former, as we are unable to see wherein the attitude of the Republican party toward the great mass of people differs from that of thirty years ago. We believe that we have as pure men at the head of affairs as ever have led the people. This does not say that there are not unworthy men to be found, as this has always been the case since the foundation of the world. Even among Christ's chosen twelve was one bad man. Beside this, we hope we are not so selfish as to absorb all the wisdom in the world, and only let it come out in one little place in such extremely small doses like this I-am-holier-than-thou specimen at McIntosh.

The People's party advocates strange doctrine and a departure from a system of government as old as the world itself, and it is not surprising that everybody does not fall into it readily. When any man or any party assumes to possess all the wisdom or all the virtue in the world it becomes disgusting to fair-minded men, but this is just what the leaders of the People's party are doing. If it were not for libelling that patient and faithful animal, we should call the fellow who penned the above paragraph an ass.

HARVESTING has become general throughout the Red River valley and by the end of this week fully one-fourth of the wheat will be in the shock. In the eastern part of Polk county, where the land is higher and more rolling, harvesting is further advanced than in the valley proper, where the spring rains prevented early seeding. There has been about the usual amount of damage by hail and wind storms, and the valley taken as a whole will yield about fifty per cent of last year's crop. The state weather bureau estimates the yield for the state at three-fourths that of last year, and the grade much lower.

THE JOURNAL devotes considerable space in this issue to a review of the last congress, by Thos. B. Reed, the speaker of the fifty-first house of representatives. There is probably no man in this country better qualified than Mr. Reed to handle this subject, and a perusal of his article will convince any one who is not prejudiced that the democratic congress has violated the pledges upon which its members were elected. A fund of incontrovertible campaign arguments in the shape of facts and figures, can be gleaned from Mr. Reed's remarks.

Extract from a letter to the Boston Journal: I notice that the democratic platform says we are taxed to nearly the verge of starvation, or to that effect. Let us see about it. I have a store book, loaned me by a fellow workman, for the year 1872, before the "demonetization of silver." Taking prices as in that book and comparing with prices to-day, also taking the man's daily pay for each year, I find the following result as to the purchasing power of the same man's wages: His day's work would purchase of flour, in 1872, one-quarter of a barrel; 1892, one-half of a barrel; salt pork, in 1872, 17 pounds; 1892, 34 pounds; sugar, in 1872, 22 pounds; in 1892, 55 pounds; lard, in 1872, 20 pounds; 1892, 31 pounds; cheese, in 1872, 17 pounds; in 1892, 23 pounds; beans, in 1872, 22 quarts; 1891, 34 quarts; print, in 1872, 20 yards; 1892, 45 yards; cotton cloth, in 1872, 24 yards; 1892, 35 yards; coal, in 1872, one-fifth of a ton; 1892, one-half of a ton. I might extend this list to cover every article of food and clothing if I had the time. These figures may be verified by any man at any store that has been doing business twenty-five years. A "good democrat," seeing my last article in the Journal, came to me last Saturday to convince me of my error. "Why," said he, "I bought coal in '57 for $5 a ton, and now I have to pay $6 to $7." "Very well, sir. What did you get in 1857?" "One dollar and seventy-five cents a day." "What pay do you get now?" "Three dollars a day." "Then, sir, according to your own figures, you worked three days for a ton of coal in '57, and only worked two days for a ton of coal in '72. And yet you are voting to restore the tariff for revenue only, that was in force in '57. Do you really think the workingmen are better off to work three days for a given article than they are to work two days for the same article?"

The chief tools of the old time shoemaker consisted of his hammer, his awl, his lapstone, his knives and his harness for "setting up" his boots or shoes.

NELSON SAYS NO.

Knute Proves He's Not the Great Northern's Attorney.

Meeting Knute Nelson, the republican candidate for governor, at the Windsor hotel, St. Paul, a Journal man summoned up all his courage, swallowed his palate and called Mr. Nelson's attention to the fact that Mr. Donnelly and certain people's party and democratic newspapers have been charging or insinuating in one form or another that Mr. Nelson is the attorney of the Great Northern or the Manitoba Railway company, Mr. Nelson smiled and said:

"That is the old chestnut that was used by Mr. Kindred in his congressional campaign in 1882. One of the main charges made by him in that campaign against me was that I was a railroad attorney. It was proclaimed all over the Fifth district far and wide, but the people at that time paid no attention to the false charges—I was elected to congress by a large plurality; and my six years' course in congress, I think, demonstrated that on all public questions affecting the railroads—for instance, such questions as the interstate commerce law, and the various land grant forfeiture bills that were reported by the committee on public lands—I was always on the side of the people."

"What, then, were the basis of the charges, Mr. Nelson?"

"The only basis for the charge made in '82 was this: In 1879, when the Manitoba railroad, then under the management of Mr. Farley, was extended from Alexandria to Barnesville, I was employed by Mr. Farley to aid his right of way agent, wherever he was unable to accomplish it, to secure the right of way for the road, and, whenever necessary, to take the proper steps for condemnation proceedings. While commissioners were appointed, there were only three cases on the entire line that were taken into the district court and these were in the city of Fergus Falls, and grew out of a controversy between rival parties there touching the location of the road through the town.

The following year I aided the road in securing the right of way on what was known as its Pelican line, and in 1881, at the request of Mr. Galusha, then the solicitor of the road, who was unable to come to court, I tried one case for the company in his behalf. Since that time I have done no law business or any other business of any kind whatsoever, either for the Manitoba railway or the Great Northern, or for Mr. Hill, or for any other railroad company. During the winter of 1888-9, while the senatorial contest was pending at St. Paul, the Globe and the News, for purposes which I cannot explain, circulated the story that I was hired by the Great Northern railroad as its counsel at a salary of $10,000 a year and that that was the reason why I was about to quit congress. Never was a greater falsehood invented out of whole cloth. I was never solicited to become attorney for that or any other railroad company, and I never made any efforts to become the attorney of that or any other company, and have never, directly or indirectly, been the attorney of any railroad company."

"If I remember rightly," continued Mr. Nelson, "it appeared in Mr. Donnelly's slander case that at about the time he quitted congress, he was negotiating or planning to enter the service of some railroad company, and did become the "attorney" of the Hastings and Dakota, if my memory serves me right. I believe he claims that there was nothing wrong in that, inasmuch as he was poor and had quit congress. Now, I too quit congress a poor man, but I didn't even do as Mr. Donnelly did,—make an arrangement or attempted arrangement to enter the service of any railroad company, as its attorney or otherwise. On the contrary, on my return from congress in March, 1889, I settled at my home at Alexandria and resumed my law practice there—a general country practice in the county where I lived and several adjoining counties—just such a kind of practice as I had been engaged in among the people of that county before I went to congress. During all the time since my return from congress I have not only done no business for any railroad company or any officers thereof, but I have done considerable work against different companies. I have had among other legal work, over 50 land cases in the interior department on behalf of settlers against the Manitoba, Northern Pacific and other railway companies—mostly against the Manitoba company—and I have had two cases in the district court for Todd county on behalf of settlers, involving the title to disputed lands. One is the case of William Bowring against the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway Company, in which I was attorney for Mr. Bowring; the other is the case of Sawyer, special commissioner on behalf of the Manitoba and Northern Pacific Railway Companies, against E. P. George, in which I am attorney for Mr. George."

"Pardon the suggestion, Mr. Nelson," said the reporter, grasping the opportunity which presented itself during a lull in the conversation, "but the people may ask for some tangible proof of these statements."

"Nothing easier," was the rejoinder, "I will demonstrate to you as clear as holy writ, and satisfy all honest men of the truth of what I say; come up to my room for a moment."

And suiting the action to the word Mr. Nelson led the way to the elevator, was swiftly whirled heavenward, and once in his room, produced the "missing papers" from a recess in his trunk, as triumphantly as though he was "doing" the heroics for an adapted melo-drama, merely remarking that "this is the correspondence had between me and the interior department through the Hon. Kittel Halvorson, touching a number of the land cases that I am interested in in the interior department."

The correspondence in question completely corroborates everything that Mr. Nelson had previously stated.

The correspondence and exhibits proved that Mr. Nelson had 16 land cases pending in the interior department against the Manitoba and Northern Pacific railroads; under date of May 16, 1892, he wrote to Kittel Halvorson, stating that some of the cases had been pending a long time and his clients were growing restless, asking Mr. Halvorson to see the secretary of the interior and inquire of him the status of the cases and what prospect there was for an early consideration. In reply, under date of June 10, Mr. Halvorson transmitted a communication from the first assistant secretary of the interior, saying that Mr. Nelson had been active in the prosecution of the cases and no blame could be attached to him or to the department for seeming delay.

RAILROAD MEN AND DRINK.

Many Great Disasters Have Come from the Whisky Bottle.

Managers of roads are aware of the risk and danger of the service rendered by men who use spirits, hence stringent rules are laid down, and efforts made to employ only healthy, temperate men, especially on trains and where great responsibility and exact duties are required. While the vast majority of trainmen on all railroads are practically total abstainers, there is always a small number who are concealed drinkers, growing worse steadily. The result of their drinking is always some accident and exposure with discharge. Often the accidents are of little interest to the public, because they are not attended with loss of life. In some instances the person who made the mistake is killed and his use of spirits (as the real cause of the accident) is concealed from the public. Where gross carelessness and stupidity result in an accident among experienced trainmen, the use of alcohol is not unfrequently the real cause.

These men are not public drinkers, and are known as temperate men, but after accidents it will appear that they have used spirits and probably carried it with them. There is another class of active, responsible trainmen, whose long tried services have given them reputation with the company, who all unexpectedly make very serious mistakes in their ordinary work, which result in great disasters. Alcohol and its compounds are often at the bottom of these sudden failures. Want of ordinary caution and sudden boldness in assuming a great risk, failure to remember orders and faulty reasoning are the usual symptoms. Such men use alcohol as a medicine and tonic to enable them to do their work better. They fully recognize the danger of large doses, but are deluded with the idea that in certain circumstances small doses are necessary for their work.

The fact is well known that the continuous strain and irregularity of railroad work soon wears out the brain and nervous system, producing states of exhaustion for which alcohol in any form is a most seductive tonic. To an overworked, tired out trainman, who has found spirits a perfect relief, no rules or restrictions can prevent him from taking spirits from the traveling saloon on the train, or the saloon at the station. Of course no one will see him, but his changed spirits and manner will tell the story. Those are the men who make the mistakes from which accidents come.

A tired brakeman took a glass of spirits and went back to flag an approaching train—fell asleep and a frightful disaster followed. An overworked engineer, after a glass of spirits at the station, failed to see the danger signal a few miles farther on and was killed in a frightful wreck. These and similar instances are repeated every year on nearly all the roads, only many of them simply involve the loss of property and are unnoticed. A railroad dispatcher at a saloon station after a glass of spirits gave the wrong order. Ten lives and over a million of dollars were lost. The dispatcher suicided in grief at his mistake.—Union Signal.

An Opinion on Scarfpins.

The men that have been affecting the scarfpins with the madeup bows, and also with the cravats and Windsors that need no holding in place and disclose the shirt button or stud beneath, are of the genus dude that typify the most offensive phase of overdoing in their aping of the fashions of the day.—Clothier and Furnisher.

The accidents in factories in Minnesota for the past year, as reported to Labor Commissioner Powers, were 276. So far 171 factories have been heard from. Of the 276 there were 26 fatal. The remainder is made up of injuries to limbs. Mr. Powers says that investigation proves that nearly all these accidents could have been prevented by the use of proper safeguards.

The entire season's product of prison-made binding twine at Stillwater, with the exception of a few hundred pounds has been sold to the farmers of this state, and the factory will continue in full blast, the twine manufactured being stored for next season's sales. The product this season amounted to a little more than 800,000 pounds, and it is expected that the stock on hand by next harvest will treble this amount.

The construction work is being continued and the line will be built to a point four miles south of the international boundary line this fall. The vein has been traced for three miles and averages on the property of the company a width of about twenty feet. Shafts have been sunk fifty feet, and assays run from $20 to $200 per ton. Stamp mills will be erected at once.

A TRAIN DERAILED.

Three Tramps and a Number of Horses Killed at Heron Lake, Minn.

HERON LAKE, Minn., Aug. 20.—The east bound freight due here during the night broke into two parts when near Prairie Junction, and the rear portion of the train soon afterward, in going down a grade, collided with the forward portion and derailed a number of cars. There were nineteen tramps aboard, three of whom were killed in the wreck. A car load of horses were in the train, six of which were killed. It is impossible to learn the amount of the total damage.

The gifts were given prominent places in the art gallery.

DECLINES TO SUE.

WISCONSIN'S ATTORNEY GENERAL REFUSES TO BRING ACTION

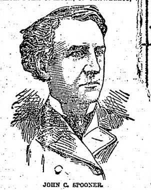
To Test the Last Apportionment Bill. Republicans to at Once Begin Proceedings to Nullify the New Law—Spoone Nominated for Governor by the Republican State Convention.

MADISON, Wis., Aug. 20.—Attorney General O'Connor has notified the supreme court that he declined to bri suit on the petition of Charles F. Lam to test the legislative apportionmen law, on the ground that he considere the law within the rule laid down by the court, and a constitutional enactment. This action of the attorney general simplifies the case as it is in direct line with the wishes of the petitioners. They served their complaint on Secretary of State Cunningham during the afternoon. It is a long document and sets out in detail the alleged violations of the rules of equality required by the constitution. The whole suit, as in the Michigan and New York cases, may be said to hinge on discrepancies of population between the various districts. The secretary of state has twenty days in which to make answer, or till Sept. 8, but argument cannot be had before Sept. 20, unless the answer is made prior to the twenty-day limit. This will bring the decision along about Oct. 1. That, however, will be so close upon election day as to forbid, in the event of the law being nullified, an extra session being held and new apportionment made. Senator Vilas will argue the case for the secretary of state and ex-Senator Spooner, now the Republican candidate for governor, will, with Colonel George W. Bird, be his chief opponents.

SPOONER IS NOMINATED.

Wisconsin's Noted Ex-Senator Chosen to Head the State Republican Ticket.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 17.—The Republican state convention which convened here at noon proved a most unanimous and harmonious affair. The strife among the various candidates for the respective positions which raged fast and furious since Monday morning vanished into the proverbial thin air upon the calling of the convention to order. The work of Senator Sawyer and a few of his friends among the candidates brought about the result. There were 855 delegates present and ex-United States Senator Spooner was unanimou nominated for governor by acclamati Hon. John C. Koch, of Milwaukee, v nominated for lieutenant governor, also by acclamation. The ticket was completed as follows:



JOHN C. SPOONER.

Secretary of state Robert W. Jackson, of Shawano; treasurer, Atley Peterson, Soldiers Grove; attorney general, James U. O'Neill, Neillsville; superintendent of public instruction, W. H. Chandler, of Dane; railway commissioner, John D. Bullock, of Jefferson; insurance commissioner, J. E. Heg, of Lake Geneva.

The platform adopted approves the Minneapolis platform and the administration of President Harrison; opposes the state bank plank in the national Democratic platform; favors amendment of the laws regulating the depositing of surplus state funds; reaffirms the declarations of the last state convention on the educational question; denounces the Democratic apportionment bill and the refusal of the last legislature to make adequate appropriation for a world's fair exhibit.

NOMINATED A TICKET.

Idaho Republicans In Session at Moscow. McConnell for Governor.

MOSCOW, Ida., Aug. 20.—The Republican state convention met here. James Shoup was made the permanent chairman. The committee on resolutions then reported the platform, which was adopted. It favors free and unlimited coinage of silver, protection to American industries as set forth in the national platform and strongly indorses the administration of President Harrison. Willis Sweet was renominated for congressman by acclamation, I. N. Sullivan was nominated for supreme judge, two ballots were taken for governor, as follows: First ballot, Ex-United States Senator W. J. McConnell, 60; Governor Wiley, 68; Moss, 25. Second ballot, McConnell, 66; Wiley, 38; Moss, 25; Wells, 1. The nomination of McConnell was made unanimous, and the co vention adjourned till morning.

Canals on Mars.

LICK OBSERVATORY, Cal., Aug. 20.—Up to the middle of August many of th canals of Mars, discovered in 1877 b Professor Schiaparelli, were mapped bu no one of them was seen to be double On the night of Aug. 17 Professors Schaebere, Campbell and Hussy made three entirely independent drawings, each of which shows one of the canals on Schiaparelli's map to be distinctly double. Thus the Lick observatory has the pleasure of confirming the discovery of Professor Schiaparelli in 1892 as it already had done by its observation in 1890.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

WITH OUR EXCHANGES.

The McIntosh News tells us:—The council has bought signal flags and McIntosh now knows what the probable weather will be 24 hours ahead.—Edward McManus, State weigh master at Duluth, is in the village this week, looking after his farming interests here and repairing fences.—W. A. Hammond, of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, was doing business in the village Friday and Saturday of last week, and made the News a pleasant call. Mr. Hammond is an old newspaper man, and has, we believe, been a successful one. He is now one of the proprietors of the JOURNAL, having bought an interest in that paper last winter. By the way the JOURNAL has forgotten all about the farmer's alliance, and is into the republican party stronger than ever.

And the McIntosh Times says:—Twine and machinery have been going out rapidly the past week and the grain harvest is now fairly commenced. Though not general, some cutting was done last week, and as the hot weather of the past few days has been ripening the grain rapidly nearly everyone will have commenced cutting this week and the ticking of the harvester will soon be superseded by the whistle of the engine and the buzz of the separator.—W. A. Hammond, of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, was in the city Friday and Saturday getting acquainted with our citizens. Mr. Hammond is an affable gentleman and remembered this office with a fraternal call. He was much pleased with our city and its surroundings and was greatly surprised at the excellence and extent of our wheat fields.—The school board met on Wednesday last and engaged Mr. Yeo, a brother of Mrs. J. R. Glover, to teach the school for the coming term. Mr. Yeo, who is a fine appearing gentleman, and will, we trust, make a good teacher, arrived in the city Sunday, and the fall term would have commenced yesterday but for the sanitary condition of the school house, which needs a little renovating.

The East Grand Forks Courier contributes the following little batch of news items:—County Attorney olston was in the city Friday last. -Mayor McAdam has returned from innipeg.—G. F. Cowan has conuded to locate in Thief River Falls, here he will follow his profession artistic sign painting.—John Mikecky, the most prominent merant of Tabor, and a practical farm, will make the run for county nmissioner from this district as a ayed-in-the-wool Democrat. The sewer contract has been let to Hugh Ryan for $8,000. The length of the sewer will be about 1,200 feet, and will extend from the river along De Mers avenue to Fourth street.—During Thursday's storm about 11 o'clock a. m., Matts H. Erickson lost a yearling colt by lightning on his farm in Northland. The animal at the time was running in pasture, surrounded by a barbed-wire fence. No insurance.—The weather for the past ten days all through the northwest has been the hottest within the memory of man. Crops, which a few days ago were green, are now ripening with such rapidity that harvesting is general. Just what the yield will be is a much-mooted question, though there is no doubt but what late grain will not average half a crop.—Meranas Leeson planted six acres on the point to potatoes last spring, of the Early Rose variety. So far he has dug and marketed one acre, the output being 275 bushels. For part of them he received $1 per bushel, the balance netting him 65 cents per bushel. The potato crop on the Point is never a failure and the cry of frost and hail does not disturb the tillers of that fertile land. No better investment to-day presents itself than a few hundred dollars placed on the Point. Mr. Leeson's success as a small farmer on the Point during the past five or six years is only that of every other man who has farmed there with any degree of activity and common sense.

And the Fertile Journal says:—Farmers say it does not take as much twine this year as last. The grain is considerable thinner.—Henry Gaylord's team gave an exhibition of speed on our streets Tuesday night by running away.—J. S. Nichols had over 250 acres of wheat cut Wednesday night. He thinks he will have an average crop.—John Scott, the Liberty farmer, commenced cutting his grain Monday. Mr. Scott has about 600 acres of wheat to cut and has five binders in operation.—Fletcher Sankey has made himself a present of a new safety bicycle and can now be seen occasionally taking headers over his neighbors' fences.—M. G. Peterson shipped a car-load of stock to St. Paul last week. He was offered half a cent more a lb. here by our butchers than they netted him by shipping.

The Marshall County Banner, at Argyle, says:—H. Bivins returned from an extended pleasure trip below Thursday last.—The irrepressible Dan O'Connor spent last Thursday in town. Dan is in "the middle of the road," and will vote the people's party ticket.—Mr. Andrew Laing started for Crookston last Monday, where he has accepted a position in the Crawford & Son bakery. Mr. Laing is a thoroughly experienced baker, and we can recommend him to his employers. He is a social favorite, and many friends regret his departure from Argyle.

And the Warren Sheaf:—Grant Rossman was among the arrivals on Thursday morning. He will visit with his father and friends here for a while before returning to the State University.—A musical soiree was given at the elegant home of A. Grindeland on Friday evening of last week, in honor of Mrs. Ford, of Amherst, Wis., Mrs. Grindeland's sister-in-law, who has been here on a visit.—A republican club was organized in Argyle last Saturday and the following officers elected: President, H. L. Melgaard; first vice-president, Chas. N. Morin; second vice-president, Thos. Clark; secretary, Theo. Morck; treasurer, Don. Robertson; member county committee, H. W. Brown.

And the Warren Register tells us that:—Harvest began in earnest on Monday, and is progressing rapidly. The crop will not be a heavy one. A good deal of wheat has suffered from blight, the extent of which cannot be fully known till threshing time.—Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Wood took the train Wednesday evening of last week for Mason City, Iowa, where their daughter, Mrs. M. E. Todd, is very low from the effects of cancer, and where she has been for several months under medical treatment.—The hot wave that rolled in upon us several weeks ago remains with us, to the great discomfort of sweltering humanity. It is the longest spell of hot weather we have ever known in Warren. The ground is very dry here and rain is needed, while all around us, only a short distance away, rains have soaked the ground.—We see by the Banner and the Leader of last week that another paper is being talked of for Warren, to be published under the control of the leaders of the people's party here. Wonder what's the matter with the Banner! Isn't it straight enough on Donnelly's "platform of humanity?" How many organs do the gentlemen want in this county, anyway? Start her up, we are ready to subscribe.

The Detroit Record furnishes the following bit of gossip:—"Camp Comfort" was entertained last Friday evening by Miss Grace Holmes, and on Wednesday evening by the Misses Walker. This evening they will drive out to Miss Joe Sletten's and spend an enjoyable evening with her and her friend, Miss Brown, of Crookston.

And the Wabasha Herald says of one of Crookston's old time citizens, H. H. Dickmann:—H. H. and P. G. Dickmann, of Zumbrota, were summoned to Winona on Thursday last by a telegram announcing the death of their mother, Mrs. Geo. C. Dickmann, early in the morning of that day. At the time of her death she had reached the ripe old age of 89 years, while her husband still survives her, aged 86 years. Besides five children, twenty-five grand children and ten great-grand children mourn her timely taking away. Mr. and Mrs. Dickmann were married in Germany in 1828 and came to this country in 1852 and have resided in Minnesota since 1856. The funeral took place on Saturday at Winona.

This little political pointer we clip from the Glyndon News:—If Mr. Comstock were willing to be the candidate for congress, Clay county Republicans should give him a cordial support at the coming convention Sept. 1st. If his judgment or his strong personal preference be adverse to a second candidature, then Clay county ought to have no other "favorite." Republicans of the 7th district need an "available" candidate, true, but not so available as to be other than of good Republicanism. Running quality in a nominee is at all times important; never if at the sacrifice of prime-capability and good-desert.

And W. L. Palmer tells us in the Thirteen Towns, of Fosston:—The work of grading the race track of the fair association is going on, and the fence will soon be commenced. The premium list is in the hands of the printer and everything will be in first-class shape by fair time.—Miss Lena Soyick came up from Crookston Tuesday for a visit with her parents, who reside about eight miles east of this city. She is engaged at dressmakig with Mrs. A. K. Austin at the hub, and this is her first visit home for over a year.—Ed Bigelow came down from Red Lake Saturday where he has been for the past two months as engineer on Meehan Bros. steamboat, which was engaged in towing logs across the lake to Red Lake river. He gives the dimensions of the boat as being 101 feet long and 20 feet beam, and as good a hull as he ever saw.

And thus saith that lively paper, the Fisher Bulletin:—Max Ericsson was over from Crookston, Thursday.—Dick Doyle was at Crookston Saturday evening, and witnessed the opera at the Grand.—Miss Nellie Hunt, one of Crookston's handsomest young ladies, visited with Mrs. A. Truesdahl.—Lew Freeman was over from Grand Forks last Friday evening, visiting with W. J. Hammond.—L. C. McKnight and lady are visiting with their friends in Fisher. About the 15th of next month they will leave for their home at Orange, Cal., where they intend spending the winter.—At 11 o'clock a. m. sharp on Tuesday last, Rev. Hendrick, at the Catholic church, united in marriage Al. Whittimore and Miss Ellen Garrity. Richard Doyle officiated as groomsman and Miss Della Lanskey as bridesmaid. After the marriage ceremony the happy couple enjoyed a handsome dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Bowman.—A party of young people repaired to the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. Bain last Monday evening for an evening of pleasure. The new residence was thrown open and several hours were whiled away in dancing and social chat. An elegant lunch was served by the ladies of the party, and all expressed themselves as having a splendid time.—During the storm on Tuesday last, at about noon, a bolt of lightning struck the barn of Andrew Walker, at Keystone, and did considerable damage to the building, but fortunately the structure was not set on fire. The bolt entered the south end of the barn near the roof, descended into a stall on the lower floor, killed two horses, prostrated Mr. Walker, who was unharnessing the animals, killed one horse and knocked another down in an adjoining stall, then passed through the side of the barn into a pig pen, killing six pigs, thence to a hay pile, killing an old dog, and from thence into space. Jas. Chalmers and Robt. Walker were in the barn and within a few feet of the horses which were killed, but received no injury. Mr. Walker, when prostrated by the lightning, fell into the manger, but was quickly removed into his house, where he rallied under the care of Dr. Fawcett. A slight blue mark on his forehead and a hole through the rim of his hat showed how near death Mr. Walker had been.

Stone Rollingpins.

Among the most valuable of the stoneware utensils are the rollingpins, which seem to come nearer to solving the problem of a rollingpin than any other. A wooden rollingpin is certainly not all that could be desired. It is not cold, it is apt to become rough, and it is always an absorbent of grease, and needs to be repeatedly scrubbed to be kept clean. Paste cannot stick to a roller of stoneware, it is so highly glazed. It is nearly as cold as marble and far better, because it is lighter. The plate glass rollingpins which were introduced by some ingenious inventor some years ago, and which were intended to be filled with cracked ice in order to chill them, proved to be a failure.

As on any glass dish containing ice water, beads of moisture settled on the outside when the rollingpin was filled, and a drop of moisture, as every expert pastry maker knows, is sufficient to injure the best pastry. Yet the inventor builded better than he knew. So cool and smooth was his glass rollingpin that housekeepers speedily adopted it without the ice filling.

Why does not some ingenious inventor give us a rollingboard of enameled wood, something that is cold on the surface and not too expensive for universal use? Or has the art of enameling wood never been brought to perfection, like the art of enameling metal? A marble or slate board is heavy, and a marble pastry table is cumbrous and expensive for family use.—New York Tribune.

Not Surprised.

Neighbor (breathlessly)—Oh, Mrs. Harddluck, your little son Johnny found a dynamite bomb, and took it into a stable down town and broke it with an ax, and blew up the stable and all the buildings around it.

Mrs. Harddluck—Land sakes! I wonder what that boy will be up to next.—Good News.

LEADERS WILL MEET.

Heads of the Various Railroad Organizations Called to Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Aug. 23.—For ten days Grand Master Sweeney, of the switchmen's order, has been in this city seeking to encourage and planning for the welfare of the men, about 5,000 in number in number, who were formerly the movers of freight traffic in the various railroad yards hereabouts. He has seen the companies secure new forces, and he has witnessed the almost entire restoration of the conditions as they were before his followers quit work. He has now asked the heads of all the other labor organizations allied with the switchmen in railroad work to meet him here. Already Mr. Sargent is here and the others are expected soon. Mr. Sweeney will lay the circumstances of the recent switchmen's strike in this city before his colleagues with the purpose, it is fair to presume, of securing, if he can, the consent to a strike of the men represented by each of the executive heads who will sit in conference with Mr. Sweeney. That the switchmen's leader would be able to influence the firemen to strike was a hope which, if entertained by Mr. Sweeney, was promptly set at rest by Mr. Sargent's statement that he would never consent to the withdrawal of his men from their occupations unless joined by the members of other railway organizations. With this position as an early precedent in the conference situation of the leaders it is not an unfair assumption that other executive heads will take the same position. If this shall prove to be true, then all must go out or none will quit.

RUNNING SMOOTHLY.

The Grain and Flour Blockade at Buffalo Being Cleared Up.

BUFFALO, Aug. 23.—Everything is running smoothly at the Central elevators, the only interruption being caused by the breaking of car-hauling machinery. In all 350,000 bushels have been taken out and sent on its way East during the past twenty-four hours. The Lehigh Valley company have several crews at work and the tracks on the Tiff farm are being cleared up. Work in the Lehigh Valley flour houses is going on although there is some delay in getting empty cars. The Lake Shore looks lovely and the yards are filled with empty and loaded cars mixed promiscuously, plainly showing the absence of the care takers. The Lake Shore has three engines at work and are doing considerable work, but the non-union men do not seem able to handle the freight as fast as it comes in.

MUST PAY TOLLS.

A Retaliatory Proclamation Against Canada Issued.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—The president has issued a proclamation directing that from and after Sept. 1, 1892, until further notice a toll of 20 cents per ton be levied, collected and paid on all freight, of whatever kind or description, passing through the St. Mary's Falls canal in transit to any port of the Dominion of Canada, whether carried in vessels of the United States or of other nations; and, to that extent, suspending from and after said date the right of free passage through St. Mary's Falls canal of any and all cargoes or portions of cargoes, to transmit to Canadian ports.

Caused Surprise Over the Line.

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—President Harrison's proclamation against Canada is the sole topic of conversation here. The move was entirely unexpected and will likely necessitate the early meeting of the cabinet. Will Canada back down? This is the question every one is asking at the hotels, on the street and at the clubs. Although no official opinion can be learned, owing to the absence of the various ministers from the city, there is a general impression that the Dominion government having taken a fling by declining to abolish the rebate of canal tolls until the end of the season will not humiliate itself by a complete back down.

DENOUNCE THE PRESIDENT.

Canadians Bitter Against the Proclamation of the President.

TORONTO, Aug. 22.—The press of Canada is bitter in its denunciation of the proclamation of the president of the United States, issued late Saturday, imposing a toll on vessels passing through the Sault Ste. Marie canal. The Mail is the only paper thus far seen that does not join in the general denunciation. The Mail says it does not think the matter serious or that it is going to lead to reprisals.

The General Impression.

TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 2.—A special from Ottawa to The Globe says: The general impression here is that the government will call an emergency meeting of the cabinet and abolish the rebate system altogether.

Addressed Eight Thousand.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—Dr. Talmage addressed an audience of 8,000 during the evening at the town hall in Birmingham. It was the largest religious meeting ever held in the city. An immense crowd gathered outside the hall unable to gain admission. After an address lasting fifteen minutes to the audience inside the hall he spoke to the audience outside. The pressure of the crowd was so great that the carriage from which the speaker spoke was almost crushed under him.

Two Lives Lost.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 21.—A terrific explosion involving the loss of two lives occurred at 3 a. m. on the Iron Mountain road. Engineer C. W. Blunderfield and Robert Prather, fireman, were in charge of an engine to which was attached a freight train. The boiler exploded and Blunderfield was hurled from his cab a distance of 150 feet. The fireman was in the tender and his body and head were torn to pieces.

BLOOD SPILLED.

KNOXVILLE VOLUNTEERS FIGHT A BATTLE WITH MINERS.

Three of the Former and Two of the Latter Killed in the Engagement. General Carnes Also Reported to Have Lost Four Men in a Skirmish—Miners Finally Surrender.

KNOXVILLE, Aug. 20.—In a battle between soldiers and miners near Coal Creek just after daylight three of the former and two of the latter were killed. A number on both sides were also injured. The troops engaged in the fight were 125 volunteers from Knoxville and about 100 soldiers of the Second regiment. The miners were ambushed in the mountains and the military were shot down without warning.

A SKIRMISH.

Reported That General Carnes Lost Four Men in a Fight Near Clinton.

CLINTON, Tenn., Aug. 20.—General Carnes, at the head of the Chattanooga complement, reached here at 8 o'clock p. m. He was warned that dynamite had been placed on the track and he disembarked his men, formed them into columns and started on the march to Coal Creek. The night was dark and the road wound through heavy timber. Five miles east of Clinton the advance skirmishers of General Carnes' forces heard voices in the timber, and challenging, were answered with a volley which seemed to be all around them. No one was hit and the skirmish line fell back on the main body, which was now rapidly advancing. The firing increased, but the militiamen stood their ground like veterans. In Tennessee mines the miners were in full retreat, carrying with them several wounded. Four of their dead were left in the underbrush. General Carnes' casualties amounted to four dead and six wounded.

ALMOST A DEAD MAN.

A Leader of the Miners Saves His Neck by Turning States Evidence.

COAL CREEK, Tenn., Aug. 21.—A party of citizens through strategy secured the notorious agitator, Bud Lindsay, who has been a prisoner here for the past two days, from his guards and conducted him up the valley toward Briceville, a few miles south of this place, for the purpose of lynching him. They were fully determined and would undoubtedly have carried out their purpose but for the pitiable pleadings of Lindsay and his solemn promise to go with the troops and point out every man in the mountains who was implicated in the late miners' troubles. His life was spared on this condition. He was brought to Coal Creek and will be used to identify outlaws. He is a deputy United States marshal.

CHARGED WITH SPYING.

State Commissioner of Labor Ford Arrested at Knoxville.

KNOXVILLE, Aug. 21.—The arrest of Commissioner of Labor Ford by General Carnes has produced a genuine sensation. He is also inspector of mines—one of the most important offices in the state. He is a shoemaker by trade and knows positively nothing about mine engineering, and got his appointment from the governor as a recognition of organized labor. Ford came here four years ago from New York and was for two years a foreman in a Knoxville factory. He has a good tongue and soon became a leader among the workmen, and as an agitator was a success. The governor appointed him over the protest of all the coal companies who were required by law to keep their mines in safe conditions under heavy penalties. When the trouble with the miners came came up last summer he took a prominent position on the side of the dissatisfied miners. He is under arrest as a spy. On his person was found a number of telegrams and letters proving that he had played the part of a spy on the present militia movement. He would under false pretense get valuable information regarding the intention of the governor and military movements and then telegraph the miners.

MANY DEAD MINERS.

Fifteen Bodies Found in the Vicinity of Coal Creek.

COAL CREEK, Tenn., Aug. 22.—The troops have returned from Briceville. They met with very little resistance. A negro desperado and miner sympathizer who had sworn to kill the first soldier whom he met, offered resistance and was shot dead, a dozen or more bullets piercing him through. As the train came to a standstill there was a shot fired from the window of a store. No one was seen inside, but Colonel Seiver immediately returned the fire with his revolver, the bullet passing through a pane of the window. About 125 miners were taken prisoners and brought back to this place, and they are now under a strong guard. Troops who went to Briceville were in command of General Carnes, instead of Sevier. A miner has just been captured in the vicinity wearing a lieutenant's full uniform and sword. Where he obtained them is a mystery. A full uniform was also found in the mountains late in the afternoon.

The four dead men who fought for the state fell in two places. Walt Hall and Given were killed in the skirmish which followed the ambush on Major Carpenter's men; Waterman and Smith fell in Fort Anderson in the first battle with the miners—the first by the premature explosion of the howitzer and the second by a bullet from the miners. Fifteen dead miners have been found and there are probably more lying around in the woods.

Boyd Declines Renomination.

OMAHA, Aug. 22.—Governor Boyd declines renomination. He promises to work hard for the party this fall and predicts success with the state ticket if good men are nominated.

J. G. McGrew and John Watts left last Friday morning to join an excursion party at Gretna, who are going to Calgary and Edmonton in the British northwest. The C. P. R. R. is making a rate of one cent a mile for the round trip.

H. E. Boen, candidate for congress on the People's party ticket, was in the city last week looking after his fences. This is his first visit to this city and he expressed great pleasure in what he saw. He was kind enough to say that he thinks Crookston has a great future before it.

"Yon Yonson" had a good house at the Grand on Saturday evening and gave good satisfaction. Gus Heege, in the title rôle, is excellent and his support is good, the male quartette being among the best that ever visited our city. The audience was well satisfied.

The school-marms took possession of the city in bevys and squads on Tuesday morning. Examination at the court house. Their bright, rosy faces makes our old watch tick faster neath our Sunday-go-to-meetin' weskit. Supt. V. D. Carruth informs us that there is a large attendance at this session.

Louis Huot was in from Louisville on Monday. Says he will finish cutting as fine a crop of wheat this week as he ever harvested, and the wheat in Louisville is of excellent quality and will yield well. It was all put in well, in good season and promises to be up to the usual average, if not better.

Earnest Moeckel and wife, of Ashland, Wis., arrived in the city on Tuesday morning for a short visit with relatives and friends in this city. Mr. M. is a Crookston old-timer, has been away five years and says he sees many and great improvements since he left. They took the train on Wednesday evening for a visit with their daughter, Mrs. August George, at Ada.

Much to the surprise of all who have known about the case, August Walter appears to be recovering his health. It will be remembered that not long since he went to Germany to consult famous physicians there who advised him to return home and get his affairs in shape as he had not long to live. He came home, kept living right along and this summer seems to be regaining his lost health.

W. F. Zwickey, who spent a few days with friends in the city last week says that the State of Washington intends to cut a big cheese at the World's Fair. The log, lumber and shingle display will require 150 cars to transport, while the display of minerals and cereals will be equally great. The state intends to erect a building that will cost $25,000 aside from the transportation of the materials, and it will require $200,000 to carry out the plans they have made. The Northern Pacific railroad carries the exhibit and building material free.

Will Van Dyke showed up in good form on Monday, having rode all the way from Alexandria on a pony since Friday afternoon. He left late in the afternoon, making Ashby that night, Barnesville Saturday night, Ada Sunday night, at Crookston Monday about 11 o'clock. Says if he can sell his pony he will return by train and give the cow-boy act a rest. Will has been back from the coast about 18 months, was in medical college in Chicago last winter and expects to return there for next winter. He says the improvements he notices in this city since he was last here are wonderful.

Wm. Hooper had a horse severely injured on a plow on Tuesday morning. Dr. M. Le Guee went out and patched the animal up in good shape.

In the base ball game between Crookston and Red Lake Falls last Saturday "Doc" Rutledge struck out 16 men in six innings. "Doc's" curves fool 'em all.

Prof. Snider, of the experimental station at Minneapolis, was in the city Saturday, and under the guidance of Mr. M. E. Kirsch was collecting specimens of our soil.

R. G. Marlette starts this week for a business trip to Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago. Expects to be gone about two weeks. He talks very strongly of putting a gasoline engine into his elevator.

Last week conductor Sands received a telegram saying that his wife was very much worse, and left for St. Paul at once, returning with Mrs. Sands on Tuesday morning. Mrs. S. went to St. Paul on a visit some three weeks since and was taken sick there. She is very much better at present, and doing nicely.

Wm. Box Jr. arrived from South Bend, Wash., on Tuesday morning looking as fresh and bright as ever. Says the reason he was a few hours later than Will Van Dyke was that Will had a pony to ride while he had to come on foot. Says Pete Bauchemin is coining wealth and John McLean will be a millionaire just as soon as real estate braces up a bit. Will has great faith in that country. He has come back to Polk county to see about his harvesting operations near Warren, and will return to the coast later on.

Members of Col. Cobham Post who intend to go to Washington, should be at the next meeting on Sept. 2d, as it is quite essential that arrangements for transportation be made for a coach if the comrades desire to engage a special coach. If this is not practicable then arrangements should be made in Washington for a place to sleep, and as comrade H. E. Cooke expects to start on Sept. 3d, arriving in Washington the week before the encampment opens, he can secure quarters for all who desire them, providing he knows how many will go. All who intend to go should not fail to attend the next post meeting, or if that is impossible should notify Adj. V. D. Carruth of their intention to attend the encampment.

COMPLETED A BIG DEAL.

Consolidation of the Lehigh Valley Road and Great Northern Steamship Line.

BUFFALO, Aug. 20.—The Lehigh Valley Transportation company and the Northern Steamship company, the lake end of the Great Northern railroad, were practically consolidated Friday and will be put under one management beginning Sept. 1. John Gordon, general manager of the Northern Steamship company, will be at the head of the consolidated company. General Manager W. P. Henry, of the Lehigh Valley, has resigned. This will give the Reading trust a direct opening to the Pacific coast over the Great Northern, which is now being extended to Seattle. The new company will have by far the best fleet of steamers now afloat on fresh water. Eleven of them are of steel, all built within a few years, and of the highest class of marine architecture. In all there will be eighteen boats and they are worth not less than $3,500,000.

John Gordon, the head of the consolidated company, is an old Chicago man, having been agent of the Anchor line in that city before coming to Buffalo three years ago to take the management of the then new Northern Steamship company. As a steamboat man Mr. Gordon has few equals on the lakes. From a railroad point of view the consolidation of the Great Northern and Reading interests will have an important hearing on trunk line interests. For some time the Erie and Great Northern have had close traffic arrangements which of course will be terminated. The Erie will be compelled to make other arrangements for lake shipping business.

New Encampment Feature.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—A new feature has been introduced into the grand encampment of the G. A. R. next September by the proposition to open the various churches of the city from 8 to 9 a. m. each day of the encampment week for a series of chaplain's camp fires to be addressed in short talks by chaplains and others, with the accompaniment of patriotic music, etc.

Shall It Be Bread or Beer?

One-fifteenth of Germany's cultivated land is devoted to the liquor traffic, which is making it a question of beer or bread for the poorer classes of that country. The drink question is thus becoming an important one in the political economy of Germany. Professor Schmoller, of Berlin, an able political economist, thus writes: "Among our working people the conditions of domestic life, of education, of prosperity, of progress or degradation are all dependent on the proportion of income which flows down the father's throat. The whole condition of our lower and middle classes—one may, even without exaggeration, say the future of our nation—depends on this question. If it is true that half our paupers become so through drink, it gives us some estimate of the costly burden which we tolerate. No other of our vices bears comparison with this

THE TRUTH ABOUT IT.

Letters and Facts to Prove Hon. Knute Nelson was the Settlers' Attorney

In the Land Cases Against the Great Northern Railway Company.

The Charge that He Was the Railroad Attorney Proved Groundless.

Last week the JOURNAL published an interview with Mr. Nelson at the Winsdor hotel in St. Paul in relation to his connection with the Manitoba railroad as its attorney. Reference was made to a correspondenre that Mr. Nelson had with congressman Halvorson which shows that Mr. Nelson was attorney for the settlers instead of the road. The Fergus Falls Journal procured the correspondence and a list of the cases referred to and published them in its last issue as follows:

ALEXANDRIA, Minn., May 16, 1892.
Hon. Kittel Halvorson:

Dear Sir:—I have the following land cases in which I am attorney for the settlers against the railroad companies pending in the interior department. They seem to move along very slowly. Some of them have been pending for a long time and my clients are growing restless at the delay. Will you kindly see the secretary of the interior and ascertain from him the status of these cases, and what prospect there is for an early consideration of the same. The titles of the cases are as follows:

Ole Halvorson vs. St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. Co., involving nw¼ 13, 134, 45.

Mary Danelke, widow of John Danelke, vs. St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. Co., involving nw¼ 35, 131, 89.

Lars H. Stennen, vs. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., involving lots 1 and 2 and se¼ of nw¼ 13, 128, 35.

Hugh McCollum vs. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., involving nw¼ of ne¼, ne¼ of nw¼ and lot 1 in 27, 131, 137.

Lars C. Kolkind vs. St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Ry. Co., involving ne¼ of sw¼ and nw¼ of se¼; 31, 130, 50.

Peder P. Thunie vs. St. Puul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. Co., involving ne¼ of sw¼ and nw¼ of se¼ and lot 2 in 13, 128, 41.

John K. Lillethun vs. St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Ry. Co. and Northern Pacific Ry. Co., involving lot 5 in 21, 135, 43.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, '92.
Friend Nelson:

Your esteemed favor of the 17th inst. with inclosure was received yesterday.

I shall lay the matter before the secretary of the interior to-day and do all I can to have it promptly attended to. Very respectfully,

K. HALVORSON.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 10, '92.
Hon. Knute Nelson, Alexandria, Minn.

Dear Sir:—I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication from the first assistant secretary of the interior relative to certain land cases, together with his list giving status of the same.

Your list giving title of cases is herewith returned. Yours to command,

K. HALVORSON.

DEP'T. OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, June 9, 1892.

My Dear Sir:—In response to your communication of the 23d ultimo, enclosing a letter from the Hon. Knute Nelson, of Alexandria, Minnesota, calling your attention to the cases which he represents as attorney and which are pending before the department, against the Northern Pacific railroad company, and asking you to see the secretary and ascertain what is the status thereof and what the prospects are for early consideration. I have to say, that while Mr. Nelson has been active and diligent in the prosecution of the cases, and no blame can legitimately attach to him on account of the seeming delay, yet I hope he will bear in mind that no fault can be found with the department for what he and his clients seem to think indicates inaction. It follows the same rule which is observed in the appellate courts in disposing of cases upon the docket in the order in which the appeals are taken and filed.

On the 4th day of March, 1889, there were upon the docket 1,581 cases and the secretary was about a year behind in disposing of them. There are now 1,942 cases upon the docket, and it will probably be eight months before the last case which has been filed will be reached in its regular order, so you see we have gained some four months with an increased docket. I hope Mr. Nelson will bear in mind that it is but fair and just that the parties shall have their cases considered in their regular order and that there is no reason assigned why his cases should be taken up and advanced over others which were filed here prior to his. By order of the secretary, no case is made special unless there is some public interest involved or where to require the case to await its regular call upon the docket would work a practical denial of justice. Nothing of that kind appears in Mr. Nelson's cases.

I enclose you a list giving their status which will show that a fair proportion have been disposed of, and in a very few weeks the majority of them will have been passed upon by the department. Hoping that this will prove satisfactory, I am, yours very respectfully,

GEO. CHANDLER,
First Ass't Secy.

Hon. Kittel Halvorson,

Weather-Crop Bulletin.

The following is the weather-crop bulletin for the week ending Aug. 29, 1892, compiled by the Minnesota weather service in connection with the U. S. department of agriculture:

The rainfall over the entire state was much below the normal until Sunday and beneficial to corn and potatoes and the only injurious effect was to retard stacking and threshing. Sunday heavy rains set in which continued in some sections until Tuesday morning, accompanied Monday night by cold weather and a killing frost in extreme northwest portions. These rains have been very injurious to wheat and will reduce it one grade.

The temperature the fore part of the week was above the normal and while slightly injurious to uncut grain, has been generally advantageous to maturing corn.

Harvest is nearly over in the northern counties, about half of the grain in stack and threshing will begin as soon as the ground is dry.

In the central counties harvesting is done and stacking under way; some counties reporting two-thirds done and threshing commenced. Flax will be cut this week in Big Stone county. Corn will be cut within a week in Sherburne county, where the crop is heavy.

In the southern counties harvesting is completed and considerable grain stacked and threshing commenced out of the shock. Corn is maturing rapidly and without frost to Sept. 15 will be a fine crop. Timothy is good, flax and potatoes doing well. Some counties report the barley berry hard but badly colored. All southern wheat will grade number 1, 2 or 3 Northern.

Marie Hubert Frohman.

The instantaneous success achieved by Marie Hubert Frohman in her performance of the "Witch" in New York is something of which one and all may well feel proud, for Marie Hubert Frohman is an American girl and the "Witch" is an American play. All of our greatest critics, and at the same time some of the most severe, were one and all most generous in their praise and appreciation of her genius. Marie Hubert Frohman stands alone in her line. She is the creator of character and not a mimic, as are by far the majority of stars of to-day. Her magnetism is wonderful and she carries the audiences with her from her first appearance on the stage until the curtain falls on the last act. The appearance of Miss Frohman is a dramatic treat never before afforded a Crookston audience a chance of witnessing an entertainment of such magnitude. There will be no advance in prices and an overflowing house is looked for.

The Deadly Frying-pan.

This familiar kitchen utensil has to answer for much of the dyspepsia common among Americaus. To the digestion of the hunter, the soldier, or the cowboy, who spend their lives in the open air, fried meat is not perhaps a foe, but the professional or buisness man of the city should shun half-cooked or overdone food as an abomination. Time was when the way-station lunch counter with its specimens of pre-historic cookery was all that stood between the traveler and starvation. Now, on the Burlington Route at least, the tourist can bid defiance to dyspepsia and indigestion so far as they arise from ill-cooked food or forced haste in eating. Peerless dining cars are attached to through trains, on which the best in the market is served by skilled cooks with ample time to enjoy it. For tickets over this route, apply to your local agent, or to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The Burglar Caught.

On Thursday last the authorities received word that parties in Winnipeg were trying to dispose of some watches and jewelry that might be a portion of the A. D. Morris stock stolen here on the Sunday night previous. The watch numbers sent corresponding with Morris' inventory, the Winnipeg authorities were notified to hold the suspected parties and Chief Gonyea at once left for Winnipeg where he found only one man—the other having successfully given leg bail. The man that he did find claimed to know nothing about the robbery in Crookston, but he was brought here all the same and has been recognized by several who had seen him here a very short time before the robbery occurred. The young man, who appears to be a slick one, waived examination and will be held to the next grand jury, providing the old rat-trap called a county jail will hold him that long.

The City Schools.

Notice is hereby given that the public schools of this city will reopen on Monday, Sebt. 5. All prospective pupils should, if at all possible, be present from the first day. The loss of two or three weeks at the beginning cannot fail to greatly retard the progress of the pupil, and may render it impossible for him to overtake the work of his class—more particularly if he is a more advanced pupil. Attention is directed to the following resolution passed by the Board of Education: "Resolved, that non-resident pupils be required to pay for tuition at the rate of twenty dollars a year, payable quarterly in advance, and that no such pupil be admitted to the schools without producing to the superintendent the receipt of the treasurer of the board for the aforesaid tuition fee."

Veterans' Return to Washington.

The Grand Army Encampment at Washington in September will be the occasion of the reunion of thousands of veterans who parted in that city in 1865, after the Grand Review following the surrender of Appomatox and the capitulation of Richmond. Again, after a lapse of 27 years, thousands of veterans will march down Pennsylvania avenue, to be reviewed again by the President of the United States, members of his cabinet, and other distinguished personages. It will be a spectacle seldom equalled in the magnificence of the display and in the number of men participating. Excursion tickets to Washington via the Baltimore and Ohio railroad will be sold by all the roads in the West at exceedingly low rates. The chief delight of the trip to Washington will be the journey via the Picturesque Baltimore and Ohio, which crosses the Allegheny mountains and for 200 miles traverses territory fraught with the most thrilling incidents of the war. For more detailed information as to time of trains, rates, and sleeping car accomodations apply to L. S. Allen, Asst. Gen. Pass. Agent, The Rookery, Chicago. Upon application, Chas. O. Scull, Gen. Pass. Agent, Baltimore, Md., will send free of charge a handsomely illustrated Guide to Washington.

The National Capital.

The city of Washington is an object of perennial interest to all patriotic Americans. Not alone because it is the great, throbbing heart of the mightiest and grandest Republic the earth has ever known, but also on account of its material magnificence. All Americans take pride in its beautiful avenues, majestic architecture, stately homes, and well stored galleries and museums as things of grandeur and beauty in themselves, apart from the historic interest with which they are invested. It is a hope and aspiration of all "YOUNG AMERICANS," at least, to some time or other visit the Capital of his country.

The Baltimore and Ohio R. R. offers unequalled facilities in aid of this desire. All its through trains between New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore on the east, and Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Chicago on the west, pass through Washington. Its fast Express trains are vestibuled from end to end and heated with steam. Pullman's latest and best productions in the way of sumptuous Drawing Room Sleeping Cars are attached to all its through trains. The present management of the B. & O. have made vast improvements in the last two years, and the road is to-day one of the foremost passenger carrying lines in the country. Through tickets via B. & O. R. R. can be procured at all the principal ticket offices throughout the United States.

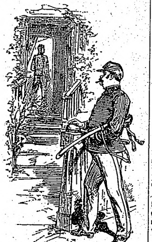
SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Nita Guthrie, a St. Louis girl, is visiting the family of Surgeon Holden, in the camp of the Twelfth cavalry, in Arizona. Captain Rolfe, an officer of the Twelfth, proposes and is rejected. An old love affair is in the way. Nita swoons over some mysterious apparition on the eve of her departure for home. II—After Nita leaves camp Dr. Holden tries to unearth the mystery of her swoon. He suspects that Sergeant Ellis, a recent recruit, and a man with a history, had some connection with it. III—Lieutenant "Curly" Brewster, another officer of the Twelfth, is in love with Winifred Berrien, the daughter of Major Berrien. Captain Rolfe lights upon evidence that another woman claims Brewster's devotion. IV—The society at the fort gives a hop, and Mrs. Knowles, a married flirt from a near by town, makes a scene with Brewster, at which Major Berriam and Winifred are mystified and indignant.

CHAPTER V.



A tall form passed across the illumined space as Kenyon drew near.

It is Mr. Thomas Hughes who asks in "Tom Brown at Oxford," "Which is the true—aye, and the brave—man, he who trembles before a woman or he before whom a woman trembles?" There are men who could have found it no difficult matter to flatly decline to serve even as temporary escort to a woman so evidently bent on mischief—who could have rebuked then and there the assumption of intimacy and proprietorship which if unchallenged might mean disaster. Brewster did neither. She read him well enough to see that, though he was too indignant to permit himself to speak, he was also too much of a gentleman to snub her. Bravely therefore she bore her part, keeping up an animated flow of meaningless words until fairly out of the hoproom, then promptly shifting to that feminine coigne of vantage wherein lies woman's greatest strength—a gush of silent tears. She knew too much to add reproaches, accusations, angry words; that would have given him something to answer, something to overthrow. It is only when a woman weeps, silently, desolately, showing no anger, making no charge, that she has man at her mercy. Utterly false as was the position in which she had placed Brewster before the garrison world at this moment, he actually did not know but that he might be blamable for all—that he might be much less sinned against than sinning. He was no fool only so much of one as the strongest of his kind sometimes become in the hands of the softer sex. Samson had his Delilah; Hercules, Omphale; Belisarius, poor devil, had both Antonia and Theodora.

It was bad enough to have her shrink to the opposite side of the carriage the instant he had assisted her in and there give way to apparently uncontrollable weeping; it was bad enough to have to stand there for a moment or two until the lady's long suffering spouse should be hunted up (he had been having a cigar with one or two of the elders in the sanctity of the little smoking room); but what made matters simply intolerable was that just at the foot of the stairs, under the broad gallery, just where the lantern on the big pillar would shine full upon himself and his lachrymose partner, stood Major Berrien in earnest conversation with Captain Rolfe, and both looked up, glanced quickly but searchingly at him and at her, raising their forage caps in silent salutation, and turned away. Poor Curly! As in duty bound, he leaned into the carriage, not too ardently begging the weeping dame to say what had so distressed her, but she would not reply.

Possibly she thought he might yet be induced to clamber in after her, and there in the dark interior tenderly beseech her to speak; but he was all eagerness to hasten back to the hoproom. If he could but have speech with Mrs. Berrien a moment, he might make her understand the situation; she had always been cordial and sympathetic. But it was three or four minutes, perhaps, before Knowles came, thanked him for his attention to his wife, stepped in, and—how her tears were explained to her liege lord nobody knows. Somebody who knew her, however, was mean enough to suggest that they were of the theatrical and controllable order, and, as Randolph expressed it, "she braced up and grinned as soon as Curly was left behind."

The instant the carriage rolled away Brewster turned and sped up the stairs. At the very top he met the colonel coming hastily down, a brown telegraph envelope in his hand, the soldier operator, with a look of repressed excitement on his face, close at his heels.

"Come with me, Brewster," said Farquhar, in preoccupied but positive manner. "Morgan, find the adjutant and quartermaster, and say that I wish to see them at the office."

"I'll get my cap and follow you at once, sir," answered Brewster, and hastened into the dressing room. There he met Hazlett and Thorpe just coming out, throwing their cavalry capes over their shoulders, silent and preoccupied like their chief. Seizing his cap, Brewster paused one longing instant for a glance into the hoproom. Again the floor was thronged. To the merriest of music—"Toujours Galant"—the younger dancers were fairly romping in the half galop, half polka step the joyous tune inspires, and in their midst, not romping, but dancing with a slower, almost languid grace, Winifred Berrien appeared to his troubled gaze, her slender waist half encircled by Randolph's arm, her dark eyes downcast, her color and animation gone.

"Come, Brewster," called Hazlett from the doorway, "Farquhar wants us at once and does not want anybody else to know."

"What's up?"

"You'll know in a moment. The colonel doesn't want it mentioned here."

At the foot of the stairs, under the glare of the same big lamp, Farquhar, with Berrien and Rolfe, stood waiting. Glancing impatiently up, as though to make sure of his men, Farquhar took Berrien by the arm and silently led the way, Rolfe and Hazlett, Thorpe and Brewster falling in behind. It was but a few steps to the office.

"Pull down the shades, orderly, and one lamp will be enough. That'll do. Close the door and remain outside," said Farquhar, as he threw off his cape, then silently waited until the sleepy trumpeter had carried out his orders and vanished. By this time, too, Warren and Drake, the adjutant and the quartermaster, had come bustling in, and, noting the silence of those already on the ground, simply removed their caps and waited the colonel's pleasure. For an instant Farquhar stood tapping the lid of the desk with the butt of his pencil and studying the long dispatch which he held in his hand. Then he looked up.

"Gentlemen, we are ordered to the field; one battalion to go at once, the other to follow in ten hours—just as soon as cars can be provided. Berrien, you will lead off."

For a moment not a word from anybody; then the major spoke:

"How much time have we, sir?"

"I cannot tell. You load up the moment the railway company can get a train here. They have plenty of engines and cars at the junction and ought to be able to furnish what we need by daybreak. Meantime you will have to rouse your men, pack up everything that is not to be taken, cook three days' rations and be ready to get the horses aboard. Go at it as quietly as possible. I want nobody at the hop to know of the orders. Let the dance go on. Your men must take all their blankets and the heaviest clothing they have. No one knows what may be in store for us either in furs or fighting."

Again dead silence, broken only by the rapid clicking of the telegraph instrument in the adjoining room and the soft, melodious strains borne on the wings of the whispering night wind. Another waltz, and one which she had promised him he should have the latter half of, thought Brewster. Even now he listened yearningly to recognize the strain. Aye, he might have known it! her favorite of all, "Love's Dreamland."

But the colonel was speaking again: "Of course you will do well to weed out any sick or ineffectives you may have. It is going to be a bitter campaign, and after our summer and fall under southern suns will be all the tougher. Holden will go with your command, Berrien, and I have sent for him. Here are your four troop commanders; so you may as well give your instructions at once and let them get to work."

"You have heard the colonel's orders, gentlemen; I do not know of anything I have to add. Start out your first sergeants and the cooks at once, and let the men pack without unnecessary noise. I will give all further details as soon as Colonel Farquhar and I have had a few moments' conference."

Again the telegraph operator with a dispatch.

"I thought so," said Farquhar. "Murray, the division superintendent, was with us in the Shenandoah and at Five Forks. He wires that the train will be here at five o'clock at the latest—two engines, twenty freight or cattle cars, two baggage cars, four passenger day cars and a Pullman. It is eleven now. If anything is wanted you'll find me here."

Back again into the chill night air, under the shining, starry vault, Berrien and his four troop leaders paused for a moment on the gravel walk.

"Hazlett, I suppose you will need to see Mrs. Hazlett home, and you, Thorpe. Better go and rouse your sergeants first, then come back to the hoproom; but, mind you, not a word there. Rolfe, you and Brewster are among the blessed tonight; you have no wives to break the news to. I will give your subalterns the tip to report to you just as soon as we break up."

Three hands went to the cap visor in salute, three officers turned away. Warren, the adjutant, came hurrying out.

"Oh, major, Colonel Farquhar begs that you will step in a moment."

"You had something to say, Brewster?" asked the major coldly.

"Yes, sir, I—I hope to hurry back in time to escort Miss Berrien home."

"No, don't trouble yourself. I'll attend to that. You have other matters to occupy you." And if ever a father's tone signified that dismissal was intended, and that further attentions were forbidden, Berrien's did as he abruptly turned, leaving Brewster stunned and silent at the edge of the parade.

In ten minutes lights were dancing like will-o'-the-wisps about the galleries of the men's quarters. Quick, bounding footsteps could be heard, and the low, brief orders of the sergeants as they went flitting from door to door. Then half suppressed exclamations, an occasional smothered yell of excitement or delight from some enthusiastic Paddy ever ready for a frolic or a fight. Then a gradually swelling murmur of voices, the rapid scurry of booted feet, a clattering up and down the stairways, the slamming and banging of barrack doors, the dragging forth of heavy chests and boxes, the clank of a dropped saber, and then people at the hoproom, strolling out on the broad veranda for fresh air or flirtation, became aware of the unusual illumination over across the parade, and listening heard the sounds of bustle and preparation. And then lights began to pop up among the windows of the second battalion, where the news had rapidly spread, and where dozens of troopers tumbled out of their blankets and into their boots forthwith and went charging en masse upon their own sergeants to know what it meant that "them fellers in the first battalion had had orders to be up and getting and none had come for us."

In less time than it takes to tell it the tidings spread from porch to hall that "something was up," and other people, men and women, old officers and young, matrons and maids, quit their places in the Lancers and came streaming forth upon the gallery. "What's the matter?" "Is it fire? I heard no alarm." "The trumpets haven't sounded." "See! there's the orderly trumpeter going across the parade now, running to the office." "Why, the office is lighted too." "Where's Warren?" "What does it mean?" These and dozens of other verbal conjectures and suggestions flew from lip to lip. Men excused themselves to their fair partners, seized their caps, scurried away down the steps and sped over toward the lights at headquarters. A dozen or more suddenly disappeared in this way, and then it was found that the colonel and Berrien and Hazlett and Thorpe and Brewster, too, were all missing. And then Mrs. Thorpe's voice was heard wailing out upon the night air:

"Oh, Mrs. Berrien! Mrs. Berrien! I know what it means. I saw the telegraph operator coming up the steps. It's orders—orders for the field."

And then indeed—

> There was hurrying to and fro
> And gathering tears, and tremblings of distress,
> And cheeks all pale which but an hour ago
> Blushed at the praise of their own loveliness.

And the dance was forgotten, and the musicians, astonished, found the lighted hall rapidly emptying of the revelers, and women pressed, pallid and tearful, into the dressing room, gathering up their wraps with hasty hand and hurrying forth to take the arm of husband or lover, as though claiming that right to the very last. And then in some way the word went around, "Only one battalion goes—only Berrien's," and those whose lords were attached to the other plucked up heart and spirit for a moment, and in the midst of it all, pale but tearless, Mrs. Berrien stood waiting patiently for Dick's return, and by her side, even paler, but as brave and tearless and patient, Winifred clung to her mother's arm and would take no other. Ridgeway, who had scampered over to the office among the dozen departed, came panting back up the stairway.

"Is it true?" asked Mrs. Berrien.

"Yes; the first battalion goes at daybreak. The major says he will be over in a few moments."

"Mrs. Berrien, permit me to escort you home," said Major Kenyon, hastening after Ridgeway up the stair. "I have just seen Berrien; he has to go to the barracks a few minutes."

"Miss Winifred, may I have the pleasure? Mr. Brewster is of course needed with his troop, and mine does not go," said Ridgeway, proffering his arm. The girl hesitated one moment, half clinging to her mother's side, and casting one swift, appealing glance into her face.

"Yes, daughter, we'll go home at once," was the low toned answer as Mrs. Berrien took old Kenyon's arm, and with bowed head moved toward the stairs, her escort eagerly, volubly explaining to her that he felt sure the object of the sudden move was merely to overawe the Indians by a display of force. "It is exactly what was done here with such success a few years ago, Mrs. Berrien. The Cheyennes were wild for an outbreak, and Sheridan simply called in troops from everywhere, and when the Indians saw the great array of cavalry and infantry they caved at once. Never had to fire a shot, madam. And that's the proper way to handle this matter. That's what this means. The Sioux will be so disheartened they won't dare resist even if orders are given to disarm them—God forgive me the lie!" he muttered under his breath. "Of course it's exasperating to think of the Twelfth being sent so far away at such a time, but better now, believe me, than later, after those misguided wretches had had a chance to jump."

But Mrs. Berrien had lived, heaven only knows how, through many a similar experience. She had seen time and again her husband's command hurried forth on the trail or across the path of savage foe. Never yet had they returned unscathed, never yet without serious loss of officers and men. She could only bow her head the lower while her lips moved in silent prayer. Just as they reached the gate a tall form came springing after them through the darkness, and Brewster's voice was heard:

"I hurried back to the hoproom, Miss Winifred, only to find you gone. I had expected to escort you home. You have heard the news? You know our orders have come?" He glared at Ridgeway, as much as to say, "Leave, man; you are one too many, as you ought to see." But the junior lieutenant stoutly held his ground, nor did Winifred withdraw her hand from his arm.

"I have heard; yes, it seems very sudden," was all she could or would say, and the dark eyes were shrouded from his longing gaze.

"We'll be off by daybreak, I fear. I cannot hope to see you again before we have to go," he went on desperately.

"Won't you come in, Mr. Brewster?" called Mrs. Berrien from the steps. "You and Mr. Ridgeway can spare a moment, can you not? Oh, Dick, here you are!" she cried, as with quick, energetic step the major sprang across the road and appeared under the dim light of the garrison lamp, and back to the gate she sped to meet him and to twine her arm in his.

"I'll say good night, ladies," said Kenyon. "I'll call in in the morning to see if I can be of any service. Now I must trot over and help Holden to pack." And, unrestrained, he went.

"Brewster, Ridgeway, I won't ask you in now. You have much to attend to and but little time. Run in, Winifred," said the major. "I'll be with you at the barracks in a few moments, gentlemen."

Slowly but obediently Winifred stepped forward.

"Good night, Mr. Ridgeway," she murmured, holding out her little hand. "Thank you very much."

Berrien stood impatiently at the gate, as though to see her safely through. With trembling lips Brewster spoke as he sprang to her side.

"Goodby. Don't forget," was all he could murmur as he seized her hand, clinging to it one miserable moment with both his own.

"Goodby," she said, in low, tremulous tone, but withdrawing her hand, withholding her glance. The major threw his arm about her and almost thrust her through the gate.

"It is good night only, not goodby, Mr. Brewster," said Mrs. Berrien, kindly forgetting her own misery for the moment in the contemplation of the woe in his face. Then they hurried within doors, Winifred drooping before them, and then the door closed and Brewster and Ridgeway stood there confronting each other under the light. For a moment neither spoke.

"Have you lost your crossed sabers?" said Brewster finally, noting that the handsome cap badge of solid gold which Ridgeway ordinarily wore upon the front of his forage cap was now missing.

"No; I took it off to pin Miss Berrien's wrap about her throat."

A moment more Brewster stood as though he would ask another question, then abruptly turned and plunged into the darkness.

Meantime Major Kenyon had trudged up the row toward Holden's quarters. Already the lights were beginning to gleam from the various houses around the big quadrangle of the parade, where a dozen of the cavalry officers were now busily engaged in preparation for the sudden move. Over at the hospital, too, the lamps were being lighted in the steward's room and the dispensary. Holden's hall door stood wide open. The hall itself was dark, but a lamp was alight in the sitting room, and that door, too, was wide open. A tall form passed across the illumined space as Kenyon drew near. He stopped for a moment at the gate, listening to the sound of bustle, the whistling and singing of the men at the barracks. "Hardship, hunger, privation, suffering ahead of them, even if they don't have hard fighting," he muttered to himself. "In thirty-six hours they'll be freezing, poor devils, for not a man in the battalion has a winter kit; and just hear them laugh and sing, as though the world had no joy like soldiering! God guard them—and these poor wives and sweethearts here. Why isn't it my lot to go instead of Berrien's? Who the devil would shed a tear for me?" He shook himself together and tramped heavily into the gate and up the steps.

"Doc!" he called at the doorway. "Oh, Doc!"

No answer. The house was silent.

"Oh, Holden! Where are you?" Still no reply. "Odd," said Kenyon; "I thought I saw him in here. Who could that have been?" With the confidence of army intimacy he tramped through the sitting room on the left of the hall, then into the dining room beyond. No one there. Then across the hall again and into Holden's own sleeping room at the rear of the house. The kerosene lamp was burning on the dressing table. The bed had been occupied. Evidently Holden had turned in early, only to be routed out by the orders of the colonel. The floor creaked somewhere overhead. Then he was sure he heard a quick, light footfall on the stair. "Oh, Doc! here I am. It's Kenyon," he cried. But no answer came. Once more returning to the hall, and thence to the sitting room, he found them empty as before. The parlor door on the west side was closed. Slowly he strolled out on the front piazza, just in time to catch sight of a tall form in the dark circular cape striding up to the gate. Surely that was Holden. Then he heard a hail:

"Hello, Rolfe. That you?"

"Yes. You go with us, do you?"

"I do. Won't you come in?"

"Not just now; I've got to go to my quarters a moment. I'll be in by and by. We'll have to make a night of it."

"All right. Kathleen will get us some coffee after a while. Bring in some of the others with you." Then the doctor came bounding up the steps. "Hello, Kenyon. You here? Well, you were right after all, weren't you? I've just been over to the hospital to see to the field chests."

"Weren't you in here just now?" asked Kenyon.

"I? No! Not for ten minutes."

"Well, some one was here—up stairs and down, both. I called twice and got no answer, but I saw a man and heard the steps. Thought it was you."

"Rolfe, perhaps. He was in the road just beyond our gate as I came back, but I thought he had just come from his company quarters."

"If it had been Rolfe he would have answered, I should think," said Kenyon. "Besides, the figure and the footsteps were those of a much lighter man."

"Queer!" said Holden, his thoughts instantly reverting to the event of the week before. "Did you see him?"

"I saw a figure pass across the light streaming from the sitting room door. Then I heard the step up stairs while I stood in your room, and then very quick, light steps on the stairs—some one coming down like a streak, now that I think of it."

"How long ago?"

"Not more than a minute before you got here."

"By Jove, I'm going to look into this!" said Holden quickly. "Of course you've heard of the excitement we had here. Bring that candle, will you? I'll take the lamp." Up the stairs they went—up to the landing where Nita Guthrie had her mysterious fright and fall. The door of the room she occupied was open. All was darkness within. Holden, followed by Kenyon, entered, and they set their lights upon a table. The side window was shut and barred, the south windows as firmly closed. Everything looked neat and undisturbed, but cold and deserted. No sign of an intruder for a moment to the eyes of either man. Then of a sudden Holden made a spring for the toilet table, seized a small silver frame and stood glaring at it.

"By Jove! look here!"

"What's the matter?" asked Kenyon.

"Don't you see?" was the answer, as the doctor held the face of the frame toward him, empty and gaping. "Nita Guthrie's photograph was in this frame and on that table just before the hop began when I was up here, and where is it now?"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Dog Worth Having.

A women living in a flat on Gates avenue near Stuyvesant is the owner of a dog that is worth having. It is a mongrel cur as devoid of pedigree as a paving stone is of hair. Exactly how she came in possession of the dog she cannot say. He happened around one day in a forlorn and hungry condition, and being fond of animals she took pity on him, fed him and at once the dog located on the premises. He is a good deal in appearance like Smiley's frog, that is to say, there are no points about this dog to indicate that he is better than any other dog. But, as the sequel will show, he proved to be an animal of singular judgment and good sense. The other day while roaming in the vicinity he found a five dollar bill. Now by what process of reasoning or by previous observation that dog had learned that money had a value or that five dollar bills were worth having, is impossible to say.

The fact remains, however, that this intelligent mongrel dog took the bill in his mouth and, in spite of the efforts of a number of street boys who saw the performance and tried to get the money away from him, scooted with it to the Gates avenue flat and deposited it safely at the feet of his mistress with a wag of his tail, as if to say, "You see, I'm able to pay for my board." The woman would not part with that dog now for a good many five dollar bills. This singular story of an animal's sagacity may look doubtful, but it is absolutely true.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Mockingbird in California.

Some of my most intimate acquaintances have been the mockingbirds in the California groves. It seems almost unnecessary to cage them, they are so happy among the ever blooming trees, but cages hang in balconies, at doors and windows, all about the courts and under the eaves, and passing down the streets one hears at all hours gushes of melody from the wonderful mimickers in their prisons. It is a cheerful sound, yet I like better to listen to them as they flit at will where the red pomegranates flower, where the wild figs rear their massive canopies, where they may hide their young as they choose in the fragrant orange trees' tops.

One splendid fellow has his perch on a windmill fan opposite my door, where all day long he pours out trills rapturous with glee. Some mornings he is in such ecstasy that he bubbles down his notes in snatches, wasting no time in weaving them together, whenever I appear on the doorstep. I know he watches for my coming, for he apparently hoards his musical quiver full of gay darts, keeping silence for intervals when I am unseen, letting them fly in an arrowy shower, as if he would transport me when I reappear. He is the saucy tyrant who pecks at my hat, my hair, my gown, when I venture too near the rose vine on the lattice where his newly hatched babies are.—San Diego Cor. Christian Union.

Curious Instruments of Torture.

In an old tower in Nuremburg there is a room set apart especially for the preservation of the curious instruments of torture used during the uncertain period historically referred to as the Middle Ages. In that room you can see thumbscrews of the most approved pattern closely arranged along shelves filled with "liar helmets" and "bridles" for gossiping women. One horrid relic, called the "spike wheel," is a heavy cylinder, on one side of which stand out two or more score of sharp iron spikes. In days of old, when an offender had been sentenced to undergo a "rolling" he was stripped naked and firmly bound on a plank, face down. In this position the "spike wheel" was slowly dragged up and down his back, the number of times depending upon the gravity of the crime and the wording of the sentence.

In several instances the poor victims were prodded so full of holes that they died before they could be removed from the plank. When death was intended the number of "rolls" was not specified, but double length spikes, heated red hot, were put in the surface of the cylinder. This mode of carrying out capital punishment was hardly as expeditious as the guillotine, but it was equally as certain.—St. Louis Republic.

A Bad Boy.

Mother—Why don't you play with that little Peterkin boy any more?

Small Son—Cause he swore.

"Horrors! Did he?"

"Yes'm. He swore I stole his knife, and teacher made me give it back and licked me besides."—Good News.

The court granted him the $50, interest and costs, amounting in all to $76.

LOST ON THE PRAIRIE.

The 3-Year-Old Child of a Farmer Near Fulda, Minn., Cannot Be Found.

FULDA, Minn., Aug. 30.—During the evening a farmer named Haberman, who lives about one mile east of town, came in and informed the people that one of his twin girls, about 3 years old, was lost somewhere on the prairie. The child went to the road which ran near the house and with her sister wandered along the highway from the house about a quarter of a mile and out of sight of her parents. A short time after, the sister of the little girl who is lost returned and said, "Julia had gone after candy." The parents went in search, but could not find any trace of the child, but hunted nearly all day before they alarmed the town people. Search was made until dark by a few, but about 100 men went out at daybreak and the search has been continued by hundreds of people all day long. Every foot of the prairies for miles around has been carefully examined and searched without avail. No trace or clue of the missing child has as yet been found and night has again come and all have gone home and abandoned the search. The opinion is now quite general that the child has been abducted.

The Buffalo Strike Officially Declared Off.

BUFFALO, Aug. 25.—At midnight Mr. Sweeney, the head of the switchmen's order, officially recognized the fact that the strike movement of switchmen, which was inaugurated twelve days ago in this city, had failed. In the official terms of the order the strike was declared off. The men who were formerly employed as switchmen in the railway yards here will, before daylight, be notified by their local officials that the purpose for which they quit their employment has not been accomplished, and that they are now at liberty to get back their places if they can.

BLOCKED THEIR GAME.

A Canadian Scheme to Avoid Paying Tolls Nipped in the Bud.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—The Canadians, with a view of evading the 20-cent tolls to be imposed in accordance with the terms of the president's proclamation on and after Sept. 1 next, on the Manitoba wheat shipped through St. Mary's canal, are proposing to evade the requirements of the proclamation by shipping in Canadian bottoms from Duluth to Port Huron to be transshipped from that point by the Grand Trunk line through Canada. This matter being brought to the attention of the treasury department, Assistant Secretary Spalding sent the following explicit telegram to the solicitor of the Grand Trunk railroad company:

Hon. F. E. Medbaugh, Detroit, Mich.: Neither Manitoba nor domestic wheat can be carried in Canadian bottoms from Duluth to Port Huron, as it would be in violation of outcoasting laws. But if carried in American bottoms it is not subject to tolls. If carried throught the canal from Duluth to Sarnia for consumption in or export from Canada via Montreal or any other port it would be.

GOES TO WASHINGTON.

The Next Encampment of the Knights of Pythias to Be Held There.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 30.—The next biennial session of the supreme lodge and encampment of the Knights of Pythias will be held in Washington, D. C., so the supreme lodge decided during the morning after a sharp contest between Louisville, Washington and Minneapolis. The vote was a close one and on the final roll call Washington received 62, while Louisville followed with 50. Minneapolis was not in the contest after the preliminary skirmishing and the fight narrowed down to Louisville and Washington.

The proposed changes in the constitution, which may mean a change in the management of the endowment rank, were made a special order for Wednesday. Aside from locating the next encampment routine business only was considered.

WISCONSIN DEMOCRATS.

Governor Peck and the Present State Officers Will Be Renominated.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 30.—The Democratic state convention will be held next Monday, but from the quiet harmony which exists around the headquarters of the state central committee and around the Democratic resorts of the city one would think that the question of selecting candidates for the fall campaign had already been settled. The administration of the past two years has given such satisfaction that Governor Peck and many of those who led the party to victory two years ago will undoubtedly be renominated. This feeling is so strong throughout the state that none of the delegates have come to the city yet, though many of them have engaged rooms.

Kansas City Disappointed.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 27.—The business of the supreme lodge is finished, and only the remnant of what was to be the greatest thing ever seen in Kansas City is left. It has been a great disappointment to the citizens, as the crowd which remained here over night never at any time exceeded 80,000 people, and provisions had been made to accommodate 100,000.

MANY PERISHED.

SCORES OF MINERS BURIED IN A WELSH COAL PIT.

Nineteen Have Been Rescued Alive. Fears That Most of Them Have Perished—The Work of Rescue Going on Steadily.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—An explosion, which, it is feared, may be attended by enormous loss of life, has occurred at Aberkenfig, near Bridgend, in the county of Glamorrgan, Wales. One hundred and forty-one miners are entrapped in a coal pit owing to an explosion which shattered the galleries by which they could have made their exit, and nothing is known of their fate. When the explosion took place a volume of coal dust arose from the mouth of the pit, and this, along with the rumbling noise, gave notice to the inhabitants that something serious had occurred. Women and children rushed to the mouth of the pit, crying and wailing for the fathers, husbands and brothers below. The scenes at the pit's mouth were most distressing, and efforts were at once made to reach the entombed miners to ascertain the extent of the calamity. Their efforts so far have proved unsuccessful and the indications are that the explosion may have destroyed every life in the mine. The miners have called on men from neighboring collieries to assist in the work of rescue and the most strenuous exertions are being made to open a way to the unfortunates below. In several instances women have gone frantic over the suspense and some of them have insisted on taking part in the work. Many hundreds of spectators have assembled from all directions and work is at a standstill in the vicinity, so great and general is the anxiety to ascertain whether those in the mine are alive or not.

ONE HUNDRED DEAD.

No Hope for the Men Still Imprisoned in the Aberkensfig Mine.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Forty-one of the men imprisoned by the explosion in the mine at Aberkensfig have been found to be alive. Thirty-five of them have been taken out. The other six were too weak to be moved and are still below. For the remaining 100 miners there is no hope.

Home Secretary Asquith arrived at Aberkensfig during the day on a special train. The lord mayor has undertaken the raising of a fund for the families left destitute by the loss of fathers or brothers in the accident.

WENT INTO THE RIVER.

A Passenger Train on the Soo Road Wrecked Near Barrett, Minn.

ELBOW LAKE, Minn., Aug. 2 .—The west bound passenger on the Soo line, consisting of three coaches and one horse car, was wrecked one mile east of Barrett, about eight miles east of this place, by the giving away of a bridge crossing the Pomme de Terre river. The engine and horse car passed over safely, but the coaches all went down, the rear coach going to the bottom of the river and the others piling on top.

Telegrams were sent to Elbow Lake and Glenwood for help. This place sent down fifty men. About 200 men were at the bridge, all doing what they could toward extricating the wounded and removing the dead. The at scene the wreck was heart-rending. The list of the dead and seriously wounded, so far as known, is as follows:

Dead.

EDWARD SMITH, Dunbar, Wis., laborer.

MICHAEL CROCKETT, De Pere, Wis., laborer.

JAMES LAURIE, Syracuse, N. Y., laborer.

GOSTAF BOQUIST, Hoffman, Minn.

TWO UNKNOWN LABORERS, whose bodies floated down the river and have not yet been recovered.

Injured.

JOHN MCMILLAN, roadmaster, back hurt and internal injuries; recovery very doubtful.

CARL PETERSON, Watertown, Minn., large scalp wound.

DENNIS HORTON, Menominee, Mich., internal injuries.

JOHN THOMPSON, Boardman, Wis., internally injured.

SEYMOUR BUGBEE, Manistee, Mich., head badly cut and internally injured; cannot recover.

A. O. BELYEA, Elbow Lake, cut about the eyes.

MRS. BELYEA, internally injured.

GEORGE GELSELL, Charleston, S. C., both shoulders, foot and jaw injured; recovery doubtful.

MATT KELLEY, Ashland, Wis., bad cuts in neck, shoulder and face.

D. F. VALE, St. Paul, upper lip nearly severed.

GEORGE HAYWOOD, Elk River, Minn., legs badly hurt.

GEORGE LIVINGSTONE, laborer, injured internally.

More People Missing.

ELBOW LAKE, Minn., Aug. 29.—An inquest over the Soo wreck of Saturday has commenced at Barrett. It has developed that the bridge was rotten, and it is alleged that the company's agents reported the unsafe condition, which has been the talk of the Barrett people for some time. Public feeling is running high against the company, and the coroner's jury is expected to lay the foundation for the indictment of the officials. The coroner has ordered the raking of swollen Pomme de Terre river, as telegrams of inquiry point to several missing and not accounted for.

TWENTY-TWO DEAD.

Soldiers Succumb to the Heat in Fuenfkirchen Maneuvers.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Standard's Buda Pesth correspondent gives an account of the military maneuvers at Fuenfkirchen in the terrible heat. He says that out of the forces engaged in the evolutions four officers, eight corporals and ten privates have died of sunstroke.

THE People's party of Kittson county have re-nominated F. W. Waggoner as their representative in the legislature.

THE Republicans of Marshall county have made up their county ticket, and Editor Mattson, of the Warren Sheaf, has been named for register of deeds—a most worthy selection.

The Warren Sheaf says that Republican enthusiasm in Marshall county is growing, and that a ratification meeting will be held at Warren on Tuesday, Sept. 6th, to discuss the issues of the campaign.

Verndale Journal:—Mr. Nelson's record needs no defense, and it is so well known to the people of Minnesota that they will take especial pains to elect him governor. His manhood, his honesty, his republicanism, his patriotism, is ability are all beyond qvestion.

FRANK M. NYE who recently delivered an address before the republican club of this city, has been nominated county attorney of Hennepin county on the republican ticket. Mr. Nye is one of the ablest attorneys of Minneapolis and his election in November is a foregone conclusion.

THE Fergus Falls Ugeblad, one of the most influential Scandinavian papers in the state, was one of Owen's strongest supporters in 1892, but now declines to support Donnelly. The Ugeblad has the reputation of being thoroughly honest in principle, and it certainly has the courage of its convictions.

THE GOOD OLD TIMES.

Despite all the talk about the hardships of the farmer, he is a king compared to his father or grandfather.

If he doubts, let him look up the old gentleman's day book of forty years ago and note the prices there.

A bushel of wheat would buy ½ of a barrel of salt. It will now buy two barrels.

A bushel of corn would buy 7½ pounds of sugar; to-day it will buy 12½ pounds.

Ten pounds of butter bought 33½ yards of cotton cloth then; now it purchases 48½ yards.

Ten pounds of cheese were worth 25 pounds of nails; the cheese now pays for 54 pounds of nails.

A pound of washed wool grown ten years before the war would buy 1-5 of a barrel of salt, 3 and 5-6 pounds of sugar, 3¾ yards of cotton cloth or ten pounds of nails. To-day his own pound of wool will pay for ¾ of a barrel of salt, 8 pounds of sugar, 6¼ yards of cotton cloth and 22 pounds of nails.

These figures are based on New York City prices. But as a matter of fact he never realized anything like those prices in his local market.

Freights were high, and when the cost of bringing produce to the New York market was deducted from the New York prices for farm produce, and the cost of bringing the merchandise from New York to the village store at which he traded was added to the price of what he bought, the average farmer was really not more than half as well off ten years before the war as our figures would indicate.

For instance, in 1857 it cost 25¼ cents to bring a bushel of wheat by the cheapest route from Chicago to New York; in 1891 it cost less than six cents.

Surrounded by these conditions, life on the farm was hard indeed. Calico and Kentucky jean had to do for Sunday garments, and an ox cart in which to ride to church was the height of style.

Luxuries for the table were almost unknown. Johnny cake and salt pork was a princely diet.

Those were days of hard times, when the farmer cradled his grain, and raked and bound it by hand.

He toiled early and late, saved and scrimped, and received less return for a week of hardest toil than the farmer in 1892 receives for a single day's pleasant ride on a mowing machine or a self binder.
